Mr. President, there are a hundred million dollars or more due from this Government, not in the form of any obligation, to those who have honestly rendered services to it, and you can not get Congress to pass a bill to pay those debts. If you make a report from the Committee on Claims of a bill for the allowance of fifty or sixty thousand dollars for some honest claimant who has given his money and his services to this Government, you can not muster a corporal's guard here to pass the bill to pay him. This Government has created more bankrupts by its dereliction and its dishonesty in the payment of its small bills than any other government on the face of the earth. But if some man has a bond which bears interest, we are very apt to protect our honor.

Mr. President, I have hoped that the time would come when this Government would be free of debt. I have hoped for the time when there would be no such thing known in this country as the holder of a Government bond; when we could say truthfully that this Government of ours, with all its power and resources, under a wise and judicious and honest statesmanship, had freed itself from all obligations, and our people were free from the burden of a constant, gnawing, interest-bearing indebtedness. Yet there seems to be no purpose whatever to do it. Just the moment a few hundred thousand dollars of surplus money get into the Treasury every man is running his arm into the Treasury clear up to his shoulder to pull it out in the form of useless appropriations, so that it can not be used to discharge honest obligations. For that purpose an army of more than useless clerks and subordinates is provided for annually. This Government has in this city to-day 10,000 persons on its pay rolls who do not render one hour of honest service a day to the Government—supernumeraries, favorites, flunkeys, the favored classes, the shabby genteel, who must be supported at the public expense.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there are 10,000 employees under the Government in the city of Washington.

Mr. ALLEN. I should say there were many more.

Mr. ALLISON. I only instance that to show the accuracy of the Senator's statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are just about 10,000 in all, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is quite that number.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not feel quite squelched by that statement.

Mr. ALLISON. Very nearly.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose there are a thousand. Suppose there are ten, or a hundred. The principle is the same. It is a nice thing to appropriate the money of the taxpayers of this country to support these idle people at public expense. But it is not honest statesmanship. It is not the discharge of public duties as they ought to be discharged. Sir, you can go to almost any one of these Departments, and I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of them, because it has been so for years, and it is getting worse—the Secretaries themselves many times not knowing it, and I doubt if there is one to-day who knows it—and you will be sent to a clerk who sometimes takes a half hour to sign his name to a document. They are infirm. They were incapable when they went there. They reached their positions by favoritism. They have grown more incapable year by year, and they are living upon the taxpayers of this country, not for services performed, but through the favoritism of some person in authority.

And so, Mr. President, the drama goes on from year to year. The thing is growing larger and larger. The farmers of Iowa and Nebraska and all over this country can work and save and deny their families many times almost the absolute necessaries of life and their children the opportunity for an education that these incapable people may live at the expense of the Government. I deem it necessary and proper to make this statement before the bill goes through.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to follow the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] through the wide field of discourse over which he has ranged. It is undoubtedly true that there are some extravagant expenditures being made by the Government. It is undoubtedly true that there are in certain Departments of the Government, in certain branches of the public service, more employees than are necessary, and it is the duty of the Appropriations Committees in the two Houses of Congress to limit and reduce such expenditures and to reduce the number of employees wherever they can do so.

The charge of the Senator from Nebraska, however, is altogether too general to have any effect, either in this Chamber or in the country. The Senator from Nebraska has been here now nearly six years, and he has not, to my knowledge, ever proposed a specific economy in the public expenditures since he first took his seat in this Chamber. If he has done so, I shall be very glad to have him state what is the precise economy which he has offered and advocated.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have never been invited to give the benefit of my valuable services to that committee. I have no doubt it would have improved it somewhat if I had been there; but I have called attention in every session of Congress during my service here to the extravagance of these appropriations. I have always directed my remarks more particularly to my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], because he has been at the head of that committee most of the time and because I knew him to be possessed of all useful and necessary information on the subject. When I had done that, when I had directed his attention to these matters, and he sees fit, as the head of his party, to wander off into by and forbidden pathways, his party and himself must be responsible, not I.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is frequently difficult for me to understand the Senator from Nebraska. I do not know what the "by and forbidden pathways" are to which he alludes as being frequented by the Senator from Iowa. He says that he has, over and over again, suggested to the Senator from Iowa that there ought to be more economy in the public expenditures. That may be true. But the Senator from Nebraska never has pointed out any specific reduction in the public service or in public expenditures that ought to be made. The Senator from Iowa is just as faithful and conscientious a public servant as is the Senator from Nebraska. If he has not been able, in response to these repeated speeches of the Senator from Nebraska, always general and never particular, to cause economies enough in the public service to suit the Senator from Nebraska or his speeches, it must be because the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken and not the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, I did not rise to criticise the Senator from Nebraska. I have no objection whatever to these general discourses upon public questions with which the Senator from Nebraska enlightens the Senate. He does it eloquently and with force and energy, and I am sorry that he is disappointed in the net result which comes from these speeches of his. I did rise to say, however, that the section of the pending bill which caused the Senator from Nebraska to begin his speech——

Mr. ALLEN. Which occasioned my wrath?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; the Senator has not been wrathy. The Senator can be wrathy upon occasion. He has not been wrathy to-day. He has only indulged in admonition, in one of his repeated admonitions to the Appropriations Committee to procure more economy in the public service. The Senator began his discourse in connection with page 52 of the present appropriation bill, and about that I wish to say a word.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator think that an admonition to gentlemen possessing the great ability and experience of the members of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be sufficient? It would hardly be in keeping for me to do more than to call attention in plain language to some threatened or existing evil to gentlemen like the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. The disparity in our services, the disparity in our ages, the disparity in our abilities, would hardly warrant me in going further with those gentlemen.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will hardly do. The Senator is intelligent and industrious, and if there are specific extravagances in connection, with the public service which he has discovered during all these years, he could have pointed them out; he could have offered amendments; he could have made specific suggestions. Instead of that, the Senator has only given one more of his tongue lashings of the Committee on Appropriations, and has not shown one single dollar of public expenditure that he thinks a faithful and economical Committee on Appropriations could save. Has the Senator ever done that particular thing in his six years of service?

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that I possess what the Senator, I feel, fails fully to appreciate, some degree of modesty in doing so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have heard the Senator from Nebraska say over and over and over again in this Chamber that he is an humble and modest man, but I never discovered it in any way except in his own statements on that subject. The Senator to-day has said to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that notwithstanding all these six years of discipline and admonition by the Senator from Nebraska he has not succeeded in so economizing the public service as to suit the Senator from Nebraska. But the Senator from Nebraska has gone on and charged that the public service is full of extravagance, and the Senator said thousands and tens of thousands of unnecessary employees were upon the pay rolls of the Government within the District of Columbia. Now, did the Senator say that or did he not?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; he said that. The Senator from New Hampshire has gone far enough for me to call his attention to the fact that he is mistaken. If the Senator will turn back to the records of Congress of a year ago, he will find that I made the distinct charge and supported it by evidence, and it has never yet been investigated, that in the Railway Mail Service alone there was a fraud on this Government annually of over $9,000,000. I introduced a resolution for the investigation of that charge. It has gone up the chimney.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not a specific complaint.

Mr. ALLEN. What is specific?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not a specific allegation. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that he can get up and say to the Congress of the United States, "You pay $30,000,000 annually for railway mail service, and I say it is $9,000,000 too much," and then say that the Committee on Appropriations has not done its duty because it has not stricken off $9,000,000 immediately upon the say-so of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. I introduced the evidence showing that it arose through frauds in weighing the mails. As I understand, the mail contracts are made once in every four years. A certain time is set apart when the mails are weighed for a month or more, and that is taken to be the average for four years.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will not make a speech on that subject in the middle of my discourse.

Mr. ALLEN. I will not. I will yield in a moment. I called attention to the specific charge that there was fraud in the weighing of those mails; that old almanacs were shipped at the expense of the railroads, they paying the postage; that all kinds of paper junk were shipped, they paying the postage, and that there was a fraud to the knowledge of the officers of the Government and the railroads themselves of $9,000,000. I submitted that evidence to the committee of which the Senator from New Hampshire is a member, and I have never heard from it yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator did not send the evidence to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, according to my recollection. He sent such papers as he had to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations a year ago called witnesses before them and made an investigation. They did not find that they could sweep off of the public expenditures instantly at one blow, without further investigation, $9,000,000. So they provided for the appointment of a postal commission. The postal commission is now engaged in the investigation of the subject to which the Senator alludes, and, I have no doubt, in due time will make a report which will or ought to be satisfactory to the Senator from Nebraska. If reductions in the public expenditures can be made, after investigation, they will no doubt be made.

The only point I make is that they can not be made as the result of one sweep of the hand of the Senator from Nebraska, nor as a consequence of these general diatribes of his with which he entertains the Senate and with which he maltreats the Committee on Appropriations of this body.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to go on and finish my speech.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. After I get through. I do not like the Senator to——

Mr. ALLEN. I wish the Senator would recall the word "diatribes."

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; and I will substitute the word "admonitions."

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say another one of his periodical admonitions, which he says fall on the deaf ears of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations sits here year after year doing its duty as the committee understands it, subject all the time to these comments and criticisms, and not the "d-i," but the "a-d"——

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. The admonitions of the Senator from Nebraska, and the world prospers and gets on very well, notwithstanding the Senator from Nebraska is so much dissatisfied with it.

Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to go on and make the brief remark I intended to make and which I would have made long ago if the Senator from Nebraska had not interrupted me so constantly and so persistently. That is, that page 52 illustrates the true principle of appropriations, which is, that they should be specific. It may suit Senators to go over all these items and ridicule them, but the true spirit which should govern the Appropriations Committees and the Congress is to be found upon that very page. The danger of extravagant appropriations is in general appropriations. Safety in public expenditures is in specific appropriations; and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House, as I understand their policy, seek always to make specific appropriations. It is the true principle of appropriation. I hope where general appropriations now prevail, specific appropriations will be substituted for them wherever that can be done consistently with the public service in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, has done much in the direction of insisting upon specific appropriations for the conduct of the public service. He has very properly called the attention of the Senate and of the chairman of the committee to the fact that here were certain allowances for clerks that were not specific. The Senator from Maryland very properly showed us where there is danger in connection with the public service—that is, in these general appropriations of so many thousands or so many hundreds of thousands or so many millions of dollars to be expended in the discretion of the heads of the Departments. Those expenditures are dangerous. The President and the heads of Departments are overcome by importunity to make expenditures or to give employment to individuals, and before the Congress is aware of it extravagant expenditures are indulged in.

But the fault of the appropriation bills is not in their specific nature, such as the items which appear on page 52 of this bill. The fault is in these general appropriations where discretion is given to heads of Departments to spend so much money in the employment of individuals or otherwise, in accordance with their judgment. I have always felt that the Committee on Appropriations was disposed to do its duty in this particular regard. I know the Senator from Maryland has always insisted upon a specific appropriation where an appropriation could be made specific, and herein, I take occasion to say, is the true method of securing economy in the public expenditures, and not, I repeat, although the Senator from Nebraska is absent from his seat, in general complaints and outcries against extravagance in public expenditures and criticisms of the Committee on Appropriations, who, considering the work they have had to do, have done as well as could be expected under all the conditions of the public service during the last two or three years.

Mr. HOAR. I think I ought to move an executive session, if the Senator from Illinois will agree that this is a convenient time to have the motion made.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to allow a motion for an executive session to be made at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RENEWAL OF PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill (S. 5465) authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war with Spain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SIMPKINS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I give notice that on Saturday, the 18th of February, at 4 o'clock p. m., I shall call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of Hon. JOHN SIMPKINS, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 10, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 9, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved

JOSEPH TOUSAINT, ALIAS TOUZIN.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3684) for the relief of Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzin.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzin, having served as a teamster with the United States Army during the war of the rebellion, and with the Regular Army before the late war, be, and he is hereby, relieved from any disability under the laws of the United States Army from any defect of naturalization, and is hereby authorized to prosecute Indian depredation claim No. 8099, now pending in the United States Court of Claims, and to receive judgment therein, the same as if he had been naturalized under the laws of the United States at the date of the loss.

Mr. SULZER. Is there a report upon this?

Mr. SWANSON. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. UPDEGRAFF), as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3684) for the relief of Joseph Tousaint (or Touzin), have considered the same and beg leave to make the following report:

It appears from the records of the War Department and from other evidence laid before the committee that Joseph Tousaint, who sometimes spelled his name "Touzin," is a French Canadian by birth, who emigrated to the United States at the age of 13 years with his father. It does not appear whether or not the father was ever naturalized. Joseph, when a young man and still under the age of majority, joined the expedition of Gen. A. S. Johnston against the Mormons in 1858, and served as a teamster attached to the national forces for about six months, at the end of which period he was honorably discharged. Afterwards, during the civil war, he served again in the same capacity in the United States Army for eighteen months or more, and, having reached the grade of wagon master, was honorably discharged at the close of hostilities.

It seems that during the progress of the war Tousaint, being then at New Orleans while that city was under military control, undertook to have himself naturalized by taking certain oaths before the military officers, and he has since supposed and regarded himself as a naturalized citizen, voting without challenge at elections and being generally looked upon by the community as a citizen.

It appearing that no record can be found of the supposed naturalization proceedings at New Orleans, and it appearing also doubtful whether such proceedings were, in point of law, effective to naturalize the man, the purpose of the present bill is to remedy any possible defect in Tousaint's naturalization and to make his intent effective.

As the petitioner has, since the close of the last war and prior to the year 1891, sustained a loss by Indian depredations, as he alleges, it is by the committee deemed just to accomplish his naturalization by an act of Congress, so as to make the same relate back to the date of his alleged loss, and thereby give him an opportunity to prove his claim under the Indian depredation act of 1891.

Under judicial construction of that statute, naturalization at the present date in the usual way would not qualify the petitioner to maintain his suit, and, in view of Tousaint's military service, his bona fide attempt to become a citizen in 1863, and his evident belief that such attempt was effective, the committee consider it only just to relieve him of a disability which is merely technical and give to him an opportunity to establish any claim which he may have against Indian depredators.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia if it is contemplated merely to remove the disability on account of his not being a naturalized citizen?

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the gentleman that this man came to this country when he was 13 years old and served in the Mormon and civil wars, and thought he took out naturalization papers in New Orleans. It was ascertained that no record could be found of them. Subsequently he was depredated on by some Indians and, as I understand, the Government does not have to pay it, but it comes out of the Indian fund. He brought suit in the United States court to recover it, and that act has been construed to apply only to citizens of the United States, and he not having been naturalized is thereby barred from bringing suit.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought the bill went further than to remove the disability.

Mr. SWANSON. No further; it authorizes him as a naturalized citizen to institute the suit, and if his claim is just and right he can get judgment, and if not, he will be debarred.

Mr. LOUD. How long ago was the gentleman depredated on?

Mr. SWANSON. It is not stated in the report. I know nothing about his claim, the justice or injustice of it. The Committee on the Judiciary state in the report that it is a technicality that bars him from having his rights adjudicated in the courts of the United States.

Mr. LOUD. The effect of the bill would remove every bar and disability?

Mr. SWANSON. What bar?

Mr. LOUD. Every bar that exists—time and all that.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the bill being amended, simply confining it to naturalization. I think that is all the bill does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. SWANSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5465. An act authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war with Spain.

S. 5431. An act granting the south half of northwest quarter of section 30, township 162 north, range 72 west, to the Lake Schutte Cemetery Corporation, of Dunseith, N. Dak., for cemetery purposes.

S. 5319. An act to change and fix the time of holding the terms of the district and circuit courts at Batesville, Ark.

S. 3200. An act for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean.

S. R. 239. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare maps of Alaska, showing all known topographic and geologic features, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes: and had further insisted upon its amendment, and asked a further conference with the House and had appointed Mr. TELLER, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. PASCO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11217) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of the Report of the Superintendent of Indian Schools for 1898, the same to be delivered to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the use of his office.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10563. An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Hammond, Ind.; and

H. R. 5019. An act for a light vessel off Tail of Horse Shoe, Chesapeake Bay.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5465. An act authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war with Spain—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 5431. An act granting the south half of northwest quarter of section 30, township 162 north, range 72 west, to the Lake Schutte Cemetery Corporation, of Dunseith, N. Dak., for cemetery purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3200. An act for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean—to the Committee on Claims.

S. R. 239. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare maps of Alaska showing all known topographic and geologic features, etc.—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 375. An act to remove the charge of desertion standing against Dennis Fitzpatrick;

H. R. 10398. An act providing for the entry, free of customs duties, of certain bells presented by Edwin M. Stanton to the Iowa Agricultural College, of Ames, Iowa;

H. R. 8336. An act to correct the military record of William D. Kurfiss;

H. R. 11142. An act granting to the mayor of the city of Victor, in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, the right to enter certain lands, therein described, for city purposes;

H. R. 5715. An act for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones;

H. R. 886. An act for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va.; and

H. R. 10563. An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Hammond, Ind.

AMENDMENT OF WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to report from the Committee on Ways and Means for present consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to amend section 25 of the act passed June 3, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes." This is a privileged resolution, and I ask that it be considered in the House instead of in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That an act passed June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," be amended by adding to the end of Schedule A, section 25, the following: "Whenever any bond or note shall be secured by a mortgage, but one stamp shall be required to be placed upon such papers: Provided, That the stamp duty placed thereon shall be the highest rate required for said instruments, or either of them."

Mr. MOODY. I make the point of order that this resolution should be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have just asked unanimous consent that it be considered in the House.

Mr. MOODY. As in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOPKINS. As in Committee of the Whole. I presume the gentleman has no objection to that.

Mr. MOODY. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks unanimous consent that this joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to move an amendment, so as to make this amendatory legislation conform to the language of the war revenue bill. I move to strike out, after the word "stamp," in line 9, the word "duty" and insert the word "tax."

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will explain what this bill means. In its language it refers simply to a certain schedule, and the purpose of the bill is not apparent.

Mr. HOPKINS. Its purpose is to make the law as now on the statute book conform to the intention of Congress. When the war revenue bill was framed by the Committee on Ways and Means, it was supposed that the tax imposed on mortgages and notes would require only one stamp for the two instruments in any given transaction. But the Treasury Department has construed the act as requiring a stamp on the note as well as on the mortgage. Thus there is double taxation on those instruments; and great complaint in regard to this has been made by farmers, by small dealers, and by people generally who give mortgages.

This question was considered not only by our committee, but by the committee of conference between the two Houses when the original act was pending; and, as I have said, the general understanding was that only one tax would be imposed. But, owing to the construction placed upon the act by the Department, it is now necessary to pass this amendatory legislation, so as to make the law conform to the original purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand the effect of this joint resolution, it simply relieves these instruments from double taxation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McRAE. While it may be, and doubtless is, perfectly just to grant relief in these particular cases, the committee has overlooked another class of cases in which double taxation is imposed. I refer to leases of property where notes are taken for monthly, quarterly, or annual rent. In such cases the lease and the notes pertaining thereto are both taxed. I regret that the Committee on Ways and Means in looking into this question have not so framed this bill so as to give relief in this class of cases as well as in the case of mortgages.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask a vote on my amendment.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COX. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman having this matter in charge to a very grievous misconstruction that has grown up in my State in connection with the war revenue act. In the pending joint resolution gentlemen are undertaking to remedy double taxation, and I approve of the measure. There is no question it is right. But I desire to call attention to similar injustice which occurs in my State, where real estate of minors, for instance, is disposed of by sale under decree of court. Under our practice a certain number of days are allowed parties to advance the bid. In the case of each bid notes are executed, and when subsequent bids are made another set of notes is drawn. Thus there may be half a dozen advances of the bids. Now, it has been held that in such cases each set of notes is subject to taxation, so that taxation may be imposed half a dozen times on the same sale. I hope that the committee, in considering this question of duplicate taxation, will adopt some measure to cure this evil. There ought to be but one tax in such cases.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no doubt that if the matter referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee were brought to the attention of the Department it could be corrected there.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will pardon me. I have already written to the Department on the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, if the gentleman will go to the Department and explain the case, I have no doubt the evil will be corrected there without further legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. Allow me to say a word in regard to the question presented by the gentleman from Tennessee. The matter of which he speaks was fully considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, and by the committee of conference when the war revenue bill was pending between the two Houses; and it seemed to us there was no way to protect the Government against fraud in transactions of that kind where there was a continuous loan except by such a provision as that embraced in the bill; that if we undertook to provide specially for such cases there would be so many notes claimed as constituting a continuous loan that many notes which ought to be subject to taxation would escape it. For that reason it was thought to be impracticable to provide for such cases as the gentleman from Tennessee has referred to. But the matter covered by the pending resolution is simply a question of double taxation. At present when a note or bond is given for a debt, a stamp duty is imposed; and if a mortgage is given as collateral security for the same debt, that mortgage must also pay a stamp tax. The object of this joint resolution is to relieve that class of debtors.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment——

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). And just here I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the original internal-revenue act, passed in a time of war, made a similar provision to that which is now sought to be amended by the pending bill, and afterwards Congress amended it so that one set of stamps only should be required for these deeds or mortgages—a stamp upon the mortgage—that being the higher grade of taxation.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman, but would like his attention to this point.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will permit me a moment.

Now, the committee did not desire to take up the various other questions which were presented in connection with the revenue bill at this session of Congress, for the reason that it was believed there would be no time to consider them in the other body, and it would of course have to consider them before they could become law, and therefore thought it better simply to relieve debtors borrowing money from the double taxation imposed at present. We think this is a measure which can probably get through both Houses of Congress, and thus afford the relief suggested during this present session.

Mr. COX. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I agree with him most thoroughly. But my question is not the one to which he has made response. He speaks of a continuous loan. It is not at all a continuous loan.

But in order to make it as plain as I can, let me make this single statement to him, in the form of a suggestion: Suppose land is put up and sold by a decree of the court, which is our practice at home; then the purchaser will go and execute his notes, which are not binding until the sale has been confirmed by the chancellor or the presiding judge. Now, pending that confirmation of sale another purchaser can come and advance the bid and substitute his notes; another purchaser may come and make a still further advance and substitute his notes, and so on indefinitely; and there is, under the operation of this law, or may be, a continuous taxation upon the same transaction. It is that to which I have referred.

I would like to ask the gentleman to answer that.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I am only holding the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SULZER. Will my friend from Illinois yield to permit me to ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question. I am in favor of the bill and desire simply to get some additional information upon the measure.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. KNOX. The bill does not provide, as I read it, on which instrument—whether the mortgage or the note—the stamp shall be placed. It seems to me that that omission should be supplied.

Mr. HOPKINS. It will be placed on the one paying the highest rate.

Mr. PAYNE. That is correct.

Mr. KNOX. Under the old law it was required to be placed on the mortgage.

Mr. PAYNE. And it would be so in this case, that paying the higher rate.

Mr. KNOX. I would ask the gentleman if he does not think that the bill should state specifically where it should be placed?

Mr. HOPKINS. This is identical with the language of the old law, and a construction has been already placed upon that enactment.

Mr. KNOX. That is a criminal construction, where a failure to affix the stamp is shown?

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will permit me, the tax on the mortgage is the higher tax, and the stamp will necessarily be placed there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the demand for the previous question does not lie in the House when sitting as a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the practice has been different. It has been frequently done.

Mr. SULZER. Before the gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question, will he yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman, as he is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, this question: Now that peace has been declared and war terminated, how much longer is it contemplated to keep up the war taxes? It seems to me the war taxes should now be repealed; at all events, some of the most oppressive of them.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not pertinent to the question now pending.

Mr. SULZER. Answer, please. The people of the country are anxious to know about this matter. The additional tax on beer should be repealed at once. When do you intend to take some action on this matter?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not here for purposes of cross-examination on matters foreign to the subject before the House.

I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOODY. Will the Chair permit me——

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes gentlemen will confine themselves to parliamentary inquiries.

Mr. MOODY. I desire to submit one, and perhaps apprehend the answer in advance; but I wish to ask whether, if the previous question should be ordered, it will be admissible to make amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not.

Mr. SULZER. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the bill can not be amended?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not.

Mr. SULZER. Then permit me to ask, as a matter of parliamentary inquiry, if an amendment is in order?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SULZER. Well, if the previous question is voted down, will the bill be subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would, if the House saw fit to amend it.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a vote on the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The pending amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It provides:

That the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Choctaw and Creek nations, in the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said company on the western boundary line of the State of Arkansas at or near the city of Fort Smith, in Sebastian County, in said State, and running thence by the most feasible and practicable route in and through that part of the Indian Territory known as the Choctaw Nation in a southwesterly and westerly direction through the counties of Skullyville, San Bois, Gaines, and Tobucksy, and crossing the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, in said Choctaw Nation, at or near South Canadian; continuing thence westerly to the South Canadian River; continuing thence northwesterly and through the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, to a point on the western boundary thereof near the Sac and Fox Agency, said line forming a continuous line of railway with the line of said railway company which continues westward from said boundary line of the Creek Nation, as above set forth, into and through Oklahoma Territory, to Kingfisher, in said Oklahoma Territory, with a switch or spur line from the nearest feasible point on said line in the Choctaw Nation to a connection with the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, at a point between Cedars Station and Backbone Tunnel, of about 8 miles in length, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, and sidings as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SULZER. I should like to ask if this bill complies with all the regulations regarding the protection of the Indians?

Mr. LITTLE. It absolutely complies with all the rules in that regard, and has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. It provides ample compensation for all interests involved. It provides that twice the appraised value of the land must be paid into court before the land can be occupied.

Mr. SULZER. Has it the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. LITTLE. Not the Secretary of War. The War Department has nothing to do with it. It crosses no navigable river. It comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior and the Indian Office. The bill is perfectly meritorious. The railroad is intended to be constructed at once.

Mr. SULZER. All I want to know is if it protects the rights of the Indians.

Mr. LITTLE. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Indians have no representative in this Hall. I have no desire to object to a good bill—one that protects their rights as well as those of the railroad company—but I was unable to gather the full force of the provision for compensation. As I understood it, it was inadequate to protect the rights of the Indians. I would ask if there is a report accompanying this bill?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I will say for the information of the gentleman from Nebraska that the bill protects absolutely the rights of the Indians and compensates them fully for all the property that may be taken. The bill is in the form of other bills which have passed the House on various occasions, and it has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The parties who hold this charter contemplate the early construction of the road. It provides for paying mileage upon its trackage to the Indian tribes. Then it provides for compensation for the property taken. It provides for appraisers, and that double the amount of the appraised value shall be paid into court before the lands can be occupied. I assure my friend from Nebraska that it absolutely protects and fairly compensates all the interests in that Territory. It reaches only the Five Civilized Tribes. It does not reach any of the allotted lands or anything of that sort. I hope my friend will not object. I shall be glad to answer any additional questions if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. MAXWELL. As I understood the provision with regard to taking an appeal, it seemed to me that it was inadequate.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no; that is ample. In that country they have a different system of courts. That provision has the approval of the Indian Bureau.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH NEZ PERCES RESERVATION.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11685) granting the right of way through certain land in the former Nez Perces Reservation, in the State of Idaho.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way is hereby granted to the extent of 75 feet in width through the lands in the former Nez Perces Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, reserved for agency purposes, and also through any other lands within said former reservation not subject to the general right-of-way act of March 3, 1875, to any duly incorporated and organized railroad company proposing to build through said lands; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid for the lands so appropriated, and the time and manner of the payment thereof; and the location of said line shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a little inquiry. This seems to be for any railroad. It is a very indefinite proposition.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There are three or four roads that want a right of way over that reservation.

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to ask a question. What committee reports this bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McEWAN. Unanimously?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Unanimously. There were three or four bills upon the same question, and the chairman of the committee thought it best to introduce one bill covering the whole matter.

Mr. McEWAN. This is practically a general bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is for this one reservation. There is a general bill, including all reservations, that I desire to call up later.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I have had an explanation made to me by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs which satisfies me, and I withdraw any further objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have another bill of a general character that I want to call up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have to recognize the gentleman later.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4690) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any qualified homestead claimant who was in good faith actually occupying a homestead claim under the laws of the United States in the State of Florida in the month of September, A. D. 1896, and who was by, through, or on account of a storm which passed through said State during said month driven from or compelled to leave such homestead, may within one year from the passage of this act return to such homestead claim and proceed to perfect title thereto as though absence therefrom had not occurred.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "leave," insert the words "and to remain away from."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to know how this bill would read with the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as it would appear when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Who was by, through, or on account of a storm which passed through said State during said month driven from or compelled to leave and to remain away from such homestead, may within one year from the passage of this act return, etc.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if the purpose of this bill is only to preserve the continuity of occupation that was prevented by the storm? Is that all?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is all, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REPEAL OF SECTIONS 820 AND 821, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11955) to amend sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, codifying the act of June 17, 1862, which disqualify persons otherwise qualified from serving as grand or petit jurors in the courts of the United States who have taken up arms or joined in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, and prescribing an oath to be taken by talesmen challenged for such cause affirming that affiant had not joined in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that hereafter no person shall be disqualified for any service in any court or in any branch or department of the Government of the United States on account of participation in the civil war of 1861 to 1865.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER AT MORGANTOWN, W. VA.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11677) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of the United States of America is hereby given to the county court of Monongalia County, W. Va., a corporation under the laws of said State, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Monongahela River at Morgantown, in said State.

SEC. 2. That the bridge shall be so constructed that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all vessels and other water craft navigating said river; and any bridge constructed under this act shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the securing of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said county court shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, the designs and drawings of the bridge, piers, and approaches, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of at least 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, and the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of other bridge or bridges, wharfs, landings, or ferries, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and after such approval by the Secretary of War the approved plans and designs for the bridge shall not be deviated from or added to, either during the construction or after the completion of the bridge, until the proposed change shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War and received his approval: and the said bridge shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels under said bridge: and if at any time the navigation of said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the bridge authorized by this act to be constructed, the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require said company to alter and change said bridge at its own expense in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment; and if upon reasonable notice to said county court to make such change or improvements, the said county court fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have authority to make the same, and shall thereupon institute proceedings in the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which said bridge is located for the recovery of the cost thereof: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mail, the troops and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the public highways leading to said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post roads of the United States: and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for said postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Section 2, page 3, line 3, strike out the remaining part of section 2 after the word "impediment."

In section 4, line 3, strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year."

Add the following section:

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McEWAN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Is the wording regulating the right of navigation the same as in bills of this kind?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir; it is the same and has been approved of by the War Department.

Mr. McEWAN. That part is all right. My question is whether the wording giving the right of navigating the river is the same as in other bridge bills.

Mr. DAYTON. I have followed one of them.

Mr. TODD. I would also like to ask the gentleman whether this bridge is a matter of present public necessity, whether it is intended for the general public, whether it is intended for a railroad bridge, and whether the public are to get the use of it or some corporation?

Mr. DAYTON. In answer to that question I will say, Mr. Speaker, to this House that the county court of the county of Monongahela, the body that has control of the fiscal affairs of the county, asks for the building of this bridge for public purposes—for a wagon-road bridge—and it is not for a corporation, but for the public. It is not a railroad bridge at all. It is simply getting the assent of Congress to the building of this bridge: it is really to be built by the people themselves and for the people.

Mr. TODD. This bridge will be owned by the public?

Mr. DAYTON. Entirely so; and the purpose is to make it a free bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMER D. M'GRAW.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4790) for the relief of Homer D. McGraw, Lee County, Ala.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Homer D. McGraw, of Lee County, Ala., the sum of $130.90, to reimburse said McGraw for the like sum of money which he, as the owner and operator of distillery No. 39, situated near Opelika, Lee County, Ala., on the 4th day of April, 1896, sent to the collector for the district of Alabama, at Birmingham, Ala., to pay the tax on three packages of spirits Nos. 90, 97, and 98, at that time in the bonded warehouse of the said Homer D. McGraw, but before the said tax-paid stamps were received by said McGraw, and before said spirits were released from said warehouse, such warehouse was consumed by fire, supposed to be of incendiary origin, and said three packages of spirits for which said stamps were bought were consumed, and the stamps never canceled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the claimant was the owner and operator of a distillery in Lee County, Ala., and bought certain stamps of the revenue collector, whose office was in Birmingham, and ordered them to be sent by mail. Before the stamps reached him a fire occurred in the warehouse where the whisky was stored, consuming the spirits, and hence the stamps which were bought for these particular packages were never used, because the particular packages were destroyed by fire. He now asks the Treasury Department to redeem those stamps. The Secretary of the Treasury was of the opinion that he could not redeem the stamps under section 3426 of the Revised Statutes, because they were special taxes provided for under section 3295 of the Statutes. The claim is an entirely just and a proper one, and this is the only way in which the claimant can be reimbursed.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill simply provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may redeem the stamps?

Mr. CLAYTON. That the claimant shall be reimbursed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentleman from Alabama that while they had the stamps before the committee they have been mislaid. They were for use in this particular distillery, and of course can not be used again, and the amount is only $136. Under these circumstances I will not insist on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF GEORGE W. M'KINSEY.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1800) to reimburse George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., for money paid out by him as said postmaster.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., the sum of $713, said amount being paid out by him as such postmaster for clerk hire, rents, gas, light, and fuel, all of which was necessary to carry on and conduct properly the business of said post-office.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out the words "seven hundred and thirteen dollars" and insert "six hundred and twenty dollars and twenty cents."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the report read.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. MINOR), as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1800) for the payment of a sum of money therein named for the reimbursement of one George W. McKinsey, a resident of Kokomo, Ind., report:

Your committee find the following to be the facts in the case: George W. McKinsey was the postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., from July 1, 1889, to November 19, 1890. On July 1, 1889, the post-office at Kokomo, Ind., was raised from an office of the third class to one of the second class, and at that time came under the postal provisions which provide for the payment of all rents, lights, fuel, and clerk hire in such office by the Government. That between July 1, 1889, and January 1, 1890, he paid from his own funds a large amount of money for said rents, lights, fuel, and clerk hire. He was compelled to do this by reason of the Government having failed to provide for these items during the time stated, amounting to about two quarters, or six months.

The foregoing statement is borne out by the Postmaster-General, whose letter we append hereto.

This bill provides for the payment of $713, but the committee desire to submit the following amendment, in order that the bill may conform to the statement submitted by the Postmaster-General. When such amendment shall have been adopted we recommend the passage of the bill.

Amend by striking out all after the word "of," in the sixth line, down to and including the word "thirteen," in the seventh line of the printed bill, and insert in lieu thereof the words "six hundred and twenty dollars and twenty cents;" so as to read as follows: "There is hereby appropriated to George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., the sum of $620.20."

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
SALARY AND ALLOWANCE DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 3d instant, inclosing House bill 2883, for the relief of George W. McKinsey, late postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., I find upon examination of accounts on file in this Department that Mr. McKinsey filed the following vouchers in excess of his regularly authorized allowances for the period from July 1, 1889, to January 20, 1890:

Clerk hire	$680.47
Rent	165.55
Fuel and light	4.66

upon which a credit of $137.68 has been allowed by the Auditor's Office, leaving a balance of $713.

The records of this office show that the Kokomo office was advanced from third to second class July 1, 1889, but that the allowance for clerk hire was not increased until January 1, 1890, upon which date an allowance at the rate of $1,300 per annum was made, which was fully up to the average granted offices of a similar grade for the said purpose. It would appear, therefore, that Mr. McKinsey has a meritorious claim for the following amounts:

Clerk hire (difference between $400 and $1,300 per annum):
Third quarter of 1889	$225.00
Fourth quarter of 1889	225.00
		$450.00
Rent, fuel, and light (actual excess covered by vouchers):
Third quarter of 1889	75.00
Fourth quarter of 1889	75.00
First quarter of 1890 (to January 20)	20.21
		170.21
Total for clerk hire, rent, fuel, and light		620.21

Very respectfully,

F. H. JONES,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. S. MINOR,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. I object to the consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Subsequently Mr. STEELE said: I understand that the gentleman who objected before to the bill I asked to have considered has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 1800) to reimburse George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., for money paid out by him as said postmaster was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish the gentleman from Indiana would state the reasons, if there be any, for the passage of this bill. "The watchdog of the Treasury," the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], was on guard at the time, and I was not giving attention when the report was read.

Mr. STEELE. The report was read. The facts as there stated are, in brief, these: In 1888 there was a very rapid growth of population at Kokomo, which made it necessary for this postmaster, a very poor man, to incur additional expense by the employment of clerks. The population increased within about a year from 2,500 to 11,000. This was about the time of the expiration of his term. The Postmaster-General has certified that expenses to the amount of $620.21 were actually incurred by this postmaster, and that he ought to be reimbursed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was this additional clerical service authorized by the Department?

Mr. STEELE. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the expense was incurred?

Mr. STEELE. It has been authorized; there is no question about that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why was it not paid at the time?

Mr. STEELE. Because there was no estimate for it in the year in which it occurred. It was an oversight on the part of this man.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I will not object. I overheard the gentleman from California say that there was an error of some kind and that he thought the bill should be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Indiana will allow me to say that I worked about six months for recognition on a bill of mine, and when I was recognized the gentleman from Indiana very kindly objected.

Mr. STEELE. I do not remember having objected to the gentleman's request.

Mr. SIMS. I can show the gentleman the record. But I will not return evil for evil. I will not object to the gentleman's bill, although that is the way he treated me. The bill seems to be a meritorious one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that every member of the House who sees anything objectionable in any of these bills will exercise his right and do his duty in making objection. He thinks with the gentleman from Tennessee that no member ought to be influenced by any personal feeling in a matter of this kind or ought to be anywhere called to account for making objection. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEELE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF LANDS TO BOULDER, COLO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11455.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city of Boulder, a municipal corporation, in the county of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, for park purposes and for the use and benefit of said city, subject to all valid entries made prior to the passage hereof, the following-described lands, to wit:

The southwest quarter of section 26 and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 26, and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 26; also the west half of section 35 and the north half of the northeast quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 35, in township 1 north, range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian; also the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2, and the south half of the north half of section 2, and the south half of section 2; also the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 1; also the north half of the north half of section 11; also the west half of the northwest quarter of section 12; also the southwest quarter of section 12, in township 1 south, of range 71 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 1,800 acres, more or less; subject, however, to any lawful rights or claims to any part or parts of said lands which may have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That said city shall never alienate any part of said lands, and shall, within twelve months after the passage of this act, distinctly mark the boundaries of said lands, and shall, as far as practicable, protect and preserve all the native trees now growing on said lands, and protect other trees thereon.

SEC. 3. That upon proper proofs in the United States land office at Denver, Colo., that said boundaries have been distinctly marked by said city, as hereinbefore stated, and that said city by its corporate authorities accepts the aforementioned grant on the conditions aforestated, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to issue to said city of Boulder a patent of said lands, in which patent shall be recited the above-stated purposes, conditions, and limitations.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Insert a new section at the end of said bill, to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That said lands shall be forfeited to the United States if, within three years from the passage hereof, the said city of Boulder has not begun to use the same for the purposes granted, or if at any time said city shall for a period of three years cease to use the same for such purposes."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the land that is sought to be granted to the city of Boulder consists of about 1,800 acres of mountainous land. All of it is precipitous, mountainous, and consisting of rocks. Few trees grow there, and it is of no value whatever for agricultural purposes. It lies within about 1 mile of the city of Boulder, and yet it has never been located upon for homestead purposes, or for preemption purposes, or for mining purposes. If it were of any value for any of these purposes, it would have been taken up long ago. It, however, can be made into a park with drives winding around the mountain. It will make very beautiful drives, with splendid scenery, and will give fine views of the surrounding country, and for that reason I wish it granted to the city of Boulder so they can construct these roads.

Mr. DALZELL. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the size of the city of Boulder?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It has about 7,000 population. The University of the State of Colorado is located there; and in addition, the Chautauqua Assembly is held there every summer, bringing there about 15,000 visitors from all parts of the United States. On this account, as well as others, it is very desirable that this park be established.

Mr. PERKINS. The city has the resources to make this improvement?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the land worth?

Mr. LACEY. It is not worth anything now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Within the boundaries of this proposed park there is, I understand, one tract of 40 acres upon which a filing has been made, and it is proposed by the committee to amend the bill so as to exclude that tract from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The amendment provides that this land shall be "subject to all valid entries made prior to its passage."

Mr. LACEY. As I understand, the land is now substantially worthless, but can be utilized for park purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the Department recommend the passage of this bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. It is recommended by the Commissioner of the Land Office.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHAFROTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11728) to remove the fire limit from the post-office at Bridgeport, Conn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 421 of the acts of the first session Fiftieth Congress, entitled "An act for the erecting of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.," is hereby amended by striking out the words "and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys."

Mr. HILL. The report in this case is very short. It can be read if anybody wishes it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, the right to object being reserved.

The report (by Mr. MERCER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11728) amending an act for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., respectfully report that they have had said bill under consideration and recommend its adoption.

The building as now constructed stands at a street corner and is bounded on two sides by highways and on the other sides by an open space of 40 feet in accordance with the provisions of the original act. Necessity compels and the Fifty-fourth Congress provided for an addition, but the appropriation therefor is not sufficient for the erection of such addition and the purchase at present valuation of 40 feet of additional ground. It is the belief of the committee that with a proper fire wall erected in the rear the needed addition can be safely constructed on the ground now owned by the Government, and in this opinion the Treasury Department coincide, and therefore advise the passage of this bill repealing the fire-limit clause.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad if the gentleman from Connecticut would give us some explanation of this bill.

Mr. HILL. It is simply a question of saving the Government $25,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish the gentleman would explain the matter.

Mr. HILL. If the fire limit be removed in this case, as proposed, this building will still have 40 feet space on each of three sides, and the fire wall will be built simply in the rear of the building.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, this bill is clearly in the interest of the Government.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely; and its passage has been advised by the Treasury Department and the Attorney-General.

Mr. DOCKERY. It involves no appropriation?

Mr. HILL. None whatever.

Mr. HANDY. Is this bill one of those considered yesterday?

Mr. HILL. It ought not to have been considered yesterday.

Mr. HANDY. Was it?

Mr. HILL. It was one of the bills favorably reported.

Mr. HANDY. Then I think it ought to stand its chance with the others.

Mr. HILL. The simple question is whether we are willing to save the Government $25,000. The Attorney-General and the Treasury Department have recommended that the bill be passed.

Mr. LOUD. The fact that the bill saves money to the Government is, of course, a very serious objection! [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I will admit that; the question is merely one of economy.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL, SABINE BANK, TEXAS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2060) for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. There are a number of amendments recommended by the committee, which I ask to have read before the question of consideration is presented.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the amendments strike out the appropriation clause?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes. The bill provides only, in its present form, an authorization for the construction of the light-house and fog-signal station at the point indicated.

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to have the report read before consent is given for the consideration of the bill.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to ask the amount proposed to be applied to this purpose?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Fifty thousand dollars; but that amount is not appropriated.

Mr. LOUD. I understand the Secretary replies that that will not be sufficient.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. My recollection of the report is that it is stated to be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. FARIS. I object.

WILLIAM A. COWLES.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2673) for the relief of William A. Cowles.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is required to pay to William A. Cowles the sum of $1,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for his services as an employee of the United States from March 1, 1878, to November 1, 1878, in the geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, under the direction of Lieut. George M. Wheeler.

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the right to object, pending the reading of the report, I would like to have some explanation of this matter.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would like to have the report read, as it explains the bill fully.

The report (by Mr. STURTEVANT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2673) for the relief of William A. Cowles, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

The payment to Mr. Cowles of $1,000, as provided for in this bill, is to cover his usual salary, at the rate of $125 per month, as an assistant topographer in the United States Geographic Survey, under Lieut. George M. Wheeler, from March 1, 1878, to November 1, 1878, during which period he was suspended from the rolls because he was confined to a hospital, the result of a painful accident that occurred to him while assisting in building a topographical monument on the peak of the Sierra Nevada, California, breaking both of his legs.

The Department strongly recommends this allowance, as will be seen from the accompanying indorsements forwarded by the Secretary of War, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1899.

SIR: Senate bill No. 992 has been referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims for report. I should be greatly obliged if you would give me your opinion of said bill.

I inclose herewith the bill.

Yours, respectfully, WM. M. STEWART.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
February 4, 1899.

Respectfully referred to Maj. G. M. Wheeler, retired, with request that he furnish such information as he can in regard to this claim, as the records of this office furnish no information in the matter.

By command of Brigadier-General Casey:

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Captain, Corps of Engineers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1899.

Respectfully referred to Lieut. M. M. Macomb, Fourth Artillery, formerly in charge of the field party of the United States geographical surveys west of one hundredth meridian, with which Mr. Cowles was serving when the accident occurred which led to the disability causing his suspension from duty, with the request that he will furnish any information he may have bearing on this case.

GEO. M. WHEELER,
Major, United States Army, Retired.

[Third indorsement.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1899.

Respectfully returned with the following remarks:

Mr. Cowles was serving with my field party when the accident occurred which disabled him. I was present at the time. It was on the afternoon of September 6, 1877, on a peak of the Sierra Nevada, California, at the headwaters of the Carson River. We were closing our day's work by building a monument to mark our station for future reference.

While engaged in this duty Mr. Cowles detached a small piece of stone, which unexpectedly and without warning caused the fall of an avalanche of rock, which crashed down the side of the peak, carrying Mr. Cowles with it. That he escaped with his life was a miracle. As it was, he suffered compound comminuted fracture of both legs below the knee, and was apparently crippled for life. Surgical aid could not be procured short of Genoa, Nev., nearly 60 miles north of us. To this village Mr. Cowles was transported over rough trails and mountain roads, and his legs could not be set until more than three days after the accident occurred. The surgeon was not a skilled one, and after three months of suffering it was found that a false union had formed in one leg and that it would be necessary to break it again and reset it. As Mr. Cowles could now be moved, it was decided to take him East when the party returned home. Accordingly, in December Mr. Cowles was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, Chicago, Ill., where the final operation of resetting was performed.

For many months Mr. Cowles was quite helpless, and was frequently troubled by the fact that splinters of bone would be thrown off by the injured limbs, causing him great suffering. He was therefore obliged to give up his profession of topographical engineer and seek other means of support.

The records of the geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian show that the pay of Mr. Cowles was stopped March 1, 1878, and that he was not taken on the office force again until November 1, 1878 (a period of eight months), and then only temporarily. Mr. Cowles's record in the field and office was excellent, and I considered him a rising young topographer.

He was poor and entirely dependent upon the practice of his profession for his support.

He was engaged in the execution of his duty when the unfortunate and unexpected accident occurred which disabled him.

His claim for compensation is to cover the eight months during which he was unemployed because of said accident, and it is at the rate of $125 per month, which was the usual rate of pay allowed topographers of Mr. Cowles's experience, and which would have been increased to a higher figure for increased length of satisfactory service.

I think that Mr. Cowles's claim is a moderate one, that it is eminently just, and should be paid.

M. M. MACOMB,
First Lieutenant, Fourth Artillery.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, inviting attention to the statements in the third indorsement by M. M. Macomb, first lieutenant, Fourth Artillery, the chief of the field party in which Mr. Cowles was serving when the accident that disabled him occurred.

This was a most exceptionable case, which, from circumstances entirely beyond his control, not alone prevented this young assistant topographer from performing the duties necessary to the service, and thereby receive the pay upon which he was dependent for his support, but withdrew him permanently and for life from advancement in the field of his chosen profession, thus relegating him to office occupation, such as computer, draftsman, etc.

My retained paper not being accessible, I am unable to verify by this means the monthly rate of compensation he would have received from March 1, 1878, to November 1, 1878, but to the best of my knowledge and belief this would have been $125 per month (subject to increase from length and excellence of service), and in my judgment the sum of $1,000 is the least that he should be compensated for the period involved.

His claim is most equitable, eminently just, and should be paid.

GEO. M. WHEELER,
Major, United States Army, Retired.

[Fifth indorsement.]

OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
February 28, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, inviting attention to the third and fourth indorsements hereon, from which it appears that the claim is eminently just.

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT, February 28, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the Committee on Claims, United States Senate, inviting attention to the foregoing indorsements hereon.

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

From the foregoing it appears that the injuries received by Mr. Cowles were while he was in the active discharge of his duties; that he underwent great physical suffering, and that they put an end to his career as a rising young topographer and permanently crippled him for life.

In view of the indorsement of the War Department, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a just claim, and I have no further objection to make.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this claimant now living?

Mr. STURTEVANT. He is now living.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. STURTEVANT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN TOBACCONISTS, LYNCHBURG, VA.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11785) for the relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not already appropriated, the following sums to the respective parties, being amounts of the 5 per cent penalty accruing by reason of special internal-revenue taxes not being paid on or before August 1, 1898: To W. A. Ford & Co., Lynchburg, Va., $325.58; to Hancock Bros. & Co., Lynchburg, Va., $287.19; to Snead Carrington Tobacco Company, Lynchburg, Va., $13.87; to Allen Bros. Tobacco Company, Lynchburg, Va., $154.32.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I would like to hear the report read, or have some explanation, before consent is given.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. RIXEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11785) entitled "A bill for the relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass.

The facts on which this bill asking for relief is based are as follows:

The daily transactions in the purchase of stamps for manufactured tobacco are very large, and it has been the custom of all collectors to accept certified checks for these daily purchases. This custom continued after the office was moved from Lynchburg to Alexandria, and no restriction was placed on the purchase of stamps by means of certified checks. The war-revenue bill provided for a 3-cent tax on all tobacco on hand, under certain restrictions, and this tax was required to be paid on or before August 1, 1898.

The tobacconists of Lynchburg sent these certified checks, which reached the collector at Alexandria on Saturday, Monday being August 1. The collector made no objection, but when on Monday, August 1, he went to make a deposit he was told by the bank that it would charge exchange for collecting. The collector therefore returned the checks, and hence, under the law, the penalty of 5 per cent was made operative on these manufacturers.

The Department of Internal Revenue advised them to pay it, though a hardship, and apply for its refunding on their form No. 46. This they did, but the Commissioner, after a thorough investigation, decided that he could not afford the relief. In other words, no authority was lodged in either him or the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the amount. But it was a case of such manifest hardship that he would cordially recommend Congressional relief.

Your committee are therefore of opinion that the respective amounts should be refunded, and that the bill for their relief should be passed with the following amendment:

In line 10, after the word "twenty," strike out the word "five" and insert "three."

Attention is called to letter of Commissioner, with inclosures, which are hereto appended as a part of this report.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, reporting on H. R. bill No. 11785, "for the relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.," which, he states, was referred to him by the acting chairman of your committee at the instance of Hon. PETER J. OTEY, M. C.

Respectfully, yours, L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES N. BRUMM,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1899.

SIR: Please find inclosed the letter of Hon. PETER J. OTEY, M. C., addressed to the chairman of the House Committee on Claims January 30, a copy of House bill No. 11785, "for relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.," and the letter of January 26, from Acting Commissioner Wilson to Mr. OTEY, relating thereto, all of which are referred by the acting chairman of the committee to the Commissioner for reply.

The papers are herewith respectfully submitted with the cordial recommendation that the proposed relief be granted for the reasons stated in the letter to Mr. OTEY.

The sum collected from W. A. Ford & Co. appears from our records to be $323.58, and not $325.58.

Respectfully, yours, N. B. SCOTT,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1899.

SIR: Yours of yesterday calls attention to the matter of the penalties paid by the Lynchburg tobacco manufacturers. I find, to my surprise and regret, that the letter I had directed to be written has been delayed until now.

The difficulty to be met is the entire absence of any authority in internal-revenue legislation under which the collection of the 5 per cent penalty for delay in payment of taxes, after due demand has been made, can be waived or the penalty refunded after collection. At the time of the money panic in the summer of 1893 there were heavy taxpayers who had provided for the payment of their taxes by checks on local banks or drafts on distant banks which the collectors, who had customarily accepted the same, suddenly refused, under the extraordinary conditions, to receive; and as cash was very difficult to raise, the ten days allowed for payment expired, and the 5 per cent penalty accrued before payment could be made.

Appeals for relief from the 5 per cent penalty were necessarily refused for lack of authority, but this office stood ready to recommend Congressional relief.

The Lynchburg cases are very similar to those, and should Congress see fit to relieve them this office will cordially carry out the measure.

The amounts collected as penalties are as follows:

W. A. Ford & Co	$323.58
Allen Brothers Tobacco Company	154.32
Hancock Bros. & Co	287.19
Snead Carrington Tobacco Company	15.87
	780.96

Respectfully, yours,

G. W. WILSON, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. PETER J. OTEY,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LOUD. The bill seems to conform with the amounts recommended by the Secretary.

There is one provision, however, that, while I do not seriously object to myself, I think a peculiar one. It appropriates money out of the Treasury not "already appropriated." I do not know where you will get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman might lose the entire bill in that way.

Mr. McRAE. I would suggest that he incorporate the words "not otherwise appropriated" for the language in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. There seems to be a mortgage on all now in sight.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask to amend the bill by inserting in place of the word "already," in the fifth line, the word "otherwise," so as to read "not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the modification will be made.

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Z. C. CHURCH.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8306) for the relief of Z. C. Church.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay Z. C. Church, of Soda Hill, State of North Carolina, the sum of $151.47, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount paid by said Z. C. Church, a distiller, for three first-proof spirit stamps Nos. A 191078 to 191080, but which were not used by said distiller, because the spirits upon which the tax was to be paid were destroyed in the burning of the said distiller's warehouse after the purchase of the stamps, but before the stamps were attached to the casks containing said spirits: Provided, That said stamps shall be returned to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before the claim is paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if this is recommended by the Department?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; by both the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LOUD. I think anyone who pays an internal-revenue tax on whisky in the State of North Carolina ought to have it refunded.

Mr. LINNEY. We pay more than any State in the Union except Virginia in excess of what we get back in the shape of pensions. Many of the States receive in pensions more than they pay in internal-revenue taxes.

Mr. DOCKERY. And drink less. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. And drink less.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLERKS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11160) to authorize the appointment of one or more clerks of the district courts of the United States within and for the eastern district of Virginia, to validate their acts, and prescribe where the records shall be kept.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I could not understand the bill from the reading. Will the gentleman make an explanation?

Mr. LAMB. Would the gentleman like to have the report read?

Mr. LOUD. I should just as soon have a brief explanation.

Mr. LAMB. These clerks have been appointed and held office for a number of years. A legal objection was raised some weeks ago, and this bill is to provide that there shall be only one clerk, to be appointed by the judge of the district court, and said clerk may have as many deputies as may be necessary, to be appointed as now provided by law, and to legalize the former acts of these clerks. It is a plain, simple request, and the Attorney-General, in a letter attached to the bill, says it is all right. I do not think there can possibly be any objection.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not a dangerous provision to permit the appointment of as many deputies as he sees fit?

Mr. LAMB. It is to be according to law. There is to be one clerk for the district, and a deputy at Alexandria, and one at Norfolk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAXWELL. I have no desire to object, but it seems to me that the language of the bill is too broad and general, and that there is danger in it. I think there ought to be some limitation.

Mr. LAMB. I do not think the bill is open to that objection. These clerks have been de facto clerks all the time, and we only desire to make good their official acts during the whole period.

Mr. MAXWELL. The bill ought to say so more specifically. I ask the gentleman to correct it in that regard. I do not desire to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman might make an amendment limiting it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to interfere, but the appointment of clerks is usually made by the circuit judge. This bill does an unusual thing in permitting the district judge to appoint clerks for both the circuit and district courts. The circuit judge usually appointed the clerks both in the circuit and district courts, and the deputies are appointed by the clerk of the circuit court.

Mr. LAMB. You are mistaken about that. Each judge appoints his own clerks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that this bill had the approval of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LAMB. It has the entire approval of the Committee on the Judiciary. In my judgment there can be no objection to the bill.

Mr. HAY. I should like to ask whether this gives the district judge the power of appointing the clerk for both the circuit and the district court?

Mr. LAMB. It gives him the power to appoint the clerk for his court. Of course he holds sessions of both courts.

Mr. HAY. I did not so understand it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAXWELL. I object to that broad, sweeping language. Let it go over until to-morrow morning and I will examine it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska object?

Mr. MAXWELL. I object unless that language is modified.

FRANK J. BURROWS.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1515) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of Frank J. Burrows, late postmaster at Williamsport, State of Pennsylvania, to be credited with the sum of $4,022, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of loss of $3,500 in postage stamps and $522 in postal funds by robbery of said post-office on the 30th day of August, 1884, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said late postmaster. And the said sum of $4,022 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I must call for the reading of the report, while I have an opportunity to read it over. I think this bill has earmarks of something that I recognize; and I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The right to object is reserved. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. LOUD. I see enough of the bill to recall my memory of it. I shall object to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF EDWIN DE LEON.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1357) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $479.11 be paid to the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt, by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, being the balance due him on adjustment of his official accounts by the First Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States of America.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad to have the gentleman explain why it has not been paid. It seems to be an adjudicated balance?

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is an adjudicated balance, and was once appropriated, but it has been covered into the Treasury because not called for. The heirs of Edwin De Leon are two old ladies, now 80 and 75 years of age, respectively, in a hospital in this city, apparently without friends, and they have called my attention to it. The bill is unanimously reported by the committee and has been for several Congresses.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does it appear from the report that this balance has been found by the accounting officers of the Treasury?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The sum mentioned in the bill is $479.11. The claim was recommended by Secretary Evarts, and has been before this committee since the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. SULZER. It ought to pass.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think so. They have no friends, apparently, and I called the bill up because I am acquainted with them.

Mr. SULZER. They evidently have a good friend in you.

The report (by Mr. MCEWAN) is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1357) for the relief of legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, have had the same under consideration and respectfully submit the following report:

The bill proposes to pay to the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt, the sum of $479.11, balance due him on ad ustment of his official accounts by the First Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States. The claimant was appointed consul-general for Egypt and its dependencies in March, 1853, and continued to act as such till February 28, 1861. It appears from the report of the First Comptroller of the Treasury that "the final balance due to him to that date was $479.11," and this balance has never been paid, but "was covered into the surplus fund." This balance, as appears by a statement of the First Comptroller, stands to Mr. De Leon's credit now, and "payment can not be made without special legislation, for the reason given."

Believing that the amount claimed by Mr. De Leon ought to be paid, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOLLIVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF LEPROSY.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2904) for the investigation of leprosy.

Mr. DOCKERY. The regular order——

The SPEAKER. Is the regular order called for? The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. DOCKERY. I intended to call——

Mr. CORLISS. Permit this to be considered. It will take no more than a moment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought we could dispose of a little unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill; the demand for the regular order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall appoint a commission of medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service to investigate the origin and prevalence of leprosy in the United States, and to report upon what legislation is necessary for the prevention of the spread of this disease; the expenses of this investigation, not exceeding the sum of $5,000, to be paid from the fund for preventing the spread of epidemic diseases.

Mr. HANDY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the report read.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask that the report on the House bill be read.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that if it is to take time, Mr. Speaker, I will have to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that it will take more time than it ought to take to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALTOONA, PA.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the regular order being demanded, I respectfully submit that the unfinished business is the consideration of the bill (S. 1273) for a public building at the city of Altoona. The previous question had been ordered, and I ask that the bill be placed on its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments. The Clerk will for the information of the House report the title of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HICKS. The amendments were agreed to in committee and, I think, in the House.

The SPEAKER. They were not agreed to in the House. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1273) for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the bill just passed I suggest that the title ought to be amended if the appropriation be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is called to this. Should not the title be amended?

Mr. MCRAE. The bill is for a public building at Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor. If the appropriation is stricken out, "and appropriating money therefor" should be stricken out of the title.

Mr. HICKS. I ask leave to amend the title to conform to the bill, if necessary.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, an amendment will be made in the title striking out the reference to appropriation.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BLAIR, NEBR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed copy of the House bill called for yesterday (H. R. 10969) for the erection of a public building at Blair, Nebr.

The Clerk read the engrossed bill at length.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CANNON. I would suggest that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] is not here; and if my friend from Missouri will allow me, I want to get to the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am entirely content with that, but I would like some understanding that this bill shall go over to a fixed time.

Mr. CANNON. Say until next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is not a motion in order to postpone the consideration of this bill until next Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order after the previous question has been ordered, because it is a motion made when the bill is not under consideration. When the previous question is ordered, consideration has ceased.

Mr. LOUD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, would not the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to go into Committee of the Whole take precedence over the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be held open until next Tuesday. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] is not here.

Mr. HANDY. The motion for the previous question was made by the gentleman from Nebraska, and it was ordered on his own motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. HANDY. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] to the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] has just entered the Hall.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was quite willing that the bill should go over until to-morrow; but as the gentleman is here now, there is no necessity for a postponement on that account.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that is the question now before the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MERCER) there were—ayes 65, noes 60.

Mr. MERCER. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I would now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 108, answered "present" 15, not voting 138; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY). The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the Chair hold that my motion is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MERCER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on the passage of the bill). The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 68, noes 57.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 79, answered "present" 6, not voting 162; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. HENRY of Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN with Mr. BROMWELL.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the Clerk, Mr. Chairman, to report the title of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a very few minutes I will make a general statement of the provisions of the pending bill. If gentlemen will send for the report, No. 1940, and examine it, they will find that although it is brief, substantially it analyzes the provisions of the bill.

The regular estimates submitted for the public service in connection with this bill are $51,024,859.75. The bill recommends the appropriation of $42,928,101.14, and in addition to that amount, which is a reduction from the estimates of about $7,000,000 in round numbers, there is an item of $20,000,000 to carry out the obligation of the treaty between the United States and Spain recently entered into. This would make the bill carry altogether almost $63,000,000 of appropriation.

I will not speak further of the specific recommendations of the bill, but will leave that part of the discussion until we have reached the various paragraphs for consideration under the five-minute rule.

I want, however, in connection with the general statement, to crave the attention of the committee for a very few brief moments while I speak of appropriations, proposed legislation, and revenues of the Government to meet the same. And I commend the members of the committee, if they have not done so, to a careful reading of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury covering the estimates of the revenues and expenditures of the Government for the current fiscal year and the coming fiscal year. I hold the report in my hand, and gentlemen will find much of interest and much food for serious reflection when they come to examine the report, if they have not already done so. And I ask attention now when I criticise the report from the standpoint of revenues and expenditures for the first seven months of this year.

The Secretary, in this report, estimates the deficit in the revenues for the current year, closing on the 30th day of June next, in round numbers at $112,000,000. In my judgment that estimate, although proper at the time it was made, is not an accurate estimate in the light of the facts which appear after the expiration of the first seven months of that fiscal year and the light of the immediate future covered by a period of five months in addition. This estimate of the deficiency in the revenues made by the Secretary in a report prepared in October or November last averages $9,333,000 in round numbers a month The actual deficit, however, on February 1—the present month—is shown by the Treasury statement to be $93,151,000, or an average per month for the first seven months of the current fiscal year of $13,307,000, which will equal for the entire fiscal year $159,000,000 of a deficit, instead of the $112,000,000 as shown by the estimates originally made. And let me call the attention of the House also to the fact that this $159,000,000 deficit in the revenues does not take into account the $20,000,000—an item for which is in the bill under consideration—to be paid to Spain under the treaty of Paris.

Necessarily, Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary made his estimates he could not have taken into account that item which is now under consideration. So that it seems to be a conservative estimate at this time to place the deficiencies for the year at not one dollar less than $159,000,000; and I repeat, I am very clear that that is a conservative estimate, rather below the amount than above it.

Now, another step. The available cash balance in the Treasury on the 1st of February, this month, including the one hundred millions of gold reserve, was $274,000,000. Two hundred millions of those dollars were put in the Treasury by the war loan. Deducting the average monthly excess of expenditures over revenues for the remaining five months of the fiscal year from the cash balance of February 1 and there is left, including the one hundred millions of gold reserve, $208,000,000, or a net cash balance by this estimate, which is conservative, available for ordinary expenses, of $108,000,000.

In other words, at the expiration of this fiscal year there will be in the Treasury $108,000,000 in excess of the $100,000,000; or, in other words, all but $8,000,000 of the war loan will have been expended.

I may say, however, before leaving this year, that these estimates do not deal with the sinking fund. The sinking fund will not be cared for. That amounts to $51,000,000, in round numbers, for the current year, and $53,000,000, in round numbers, for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman permit a question, please?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. LENTZ. Do I understand that we shall not only use the $200,000,000 that we have borrowed, but in addition half a million of war revenue in the same fiscal year?

Mr. CANNON. I mean this: That at the end of this fiscal year all the revenues collected in the fiscal year will have been expended and that the war loan of $200,000,000 will have been expended substantially, excepting $8,000,000.

Or, to put it in another way, again: At the end of this fiscal year we can not hope to have in the Treasury to exceed $208,000,000, one hundred millions of which is for the gold reserve and one hundred and eight millions available for ordinary expenses.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is that taking into account the $20,000,000 which we are to pay Spain? Is that included in that estimate?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is taken into account?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; this takes that into account. I may possibly have been led into a slight error, and if I have been I will, in the revision of my remarks, be strictly accurate. I was thinking about the matter from another standpoint, and it may be that I am wrong in stating that substantially all of the war loan will be exhausted, because when the war loan was placed in the Treasury there may have been more than $208,000,000 there. I will examine that and make my statement in the RECORD literally correct.

I will state further, that we are appropriating now for the coming fiscal year. The Secretary of the Treasury, in making his estimates for the service of the coming fiscal year, estimates the expenditures, exclusive of the sinking fund, which is $53,000,000, as follows: Expenditures, $641,000,000 in round numbers. This includes the expenses of the postal service. Revenues, as estimated, almost $611,000,000, showing a deficit for the coming fiscal year of $30,000,000.

Yet I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in estimating the expenses for 1900 the Secretary could not possibly have foreseen or included in his figures many elements of expenditure that must follow our occupation of the Philippines, and many other complications that may arise, growing out of the war with Spain and under the treaty with Spain. For we have assumed and must settle claims of our citizens for losses in Cuba, and it is estimated that claims of this character are already on file in the State Department amounting, in round numbers, to $25,000,000.

Nor could the Secretary of the Treasury, nor did he, in making his estimates, take into consideration the increase of the Navy. On the contrary, he only took into consideration the ordinary maintenance of the Navy and the work of the construction of a new navy authorized prior to this session of Congress.

Yet we are informed by the papers, and I apprehend with substantial accuracy, that the Committee on Naval Affairs will be constrained to report to this House a bill that will provide for the construction of from ten to twelve battle ships and cruisers.

I am not objecting to such recommendations. I only call attention to them. For in the changed condition growing out of the war with Spain, following as a logical sequence, comes an army sufficient for our present territory and sufficient to care for the outlying territory. And with that war and its results comes not only the maintenance of the magnificent Navy which sheds so much honor and luster upon our flag and upon our arms, but comes a permanent policy of maintaining that Navy and enlarging it by the construction of additional battle ships and cruisers. [Applause.] And when you speak of a battle ship, you speak of from six to seven million dollars for the construction and the armament, and you speak, by way of maintenance and repairs for the twenty years of its life, of 5 per cent annually of its cost.

There comes with it an increase of the personnel. "Am I in favor of this?" Yes. Causes which make it necessary for the United States to maintain, pending the present condition and that immediately in front of us, a sufficient army and a sufficient navy are behind us, and no man can or, in my judgment, ought to fail to meet the situation. But it is the part of wisdom, it is the part of common prudence, while we realize what is the present condition and what is in front of us, to see to it, in the enormous expenditures that are upon us and that are to come upon us, that we plant our footsteps with wisdom and that no dollar goes from the Treasury of the United States except as it goes for an efficient public service; that we take account of all cost, and that as we authorize expenditures we see to it, if we go beyond the means of the present revenue, that we also provide for a proper increase of revenue.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is making my speech and to that extent limiting debate.

Mr. CANNON. Quite a compliment from my friend.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask him whether he includes in the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year—which will probably amount to $675,000,000 or $700,000,000—any expenditure on account of the provisions of the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I had no thought——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Or the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. CANNON (continuing). I had no thought when I rose, in my discussion of this matter, to speak of legislation that would promote the efficiency of the merchant marine, nor had I thought of discussing, in this connection, legislation that would construct a great waterway across the Isthmus and would unite in marriage the Pacific and the Atlantic. But as my friend has challenged me, I will say that the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury and the facts that have transpired since those estimates were made show a deficiency of $159,000,000 for this fiscal year that, in my judgment, is as sure to come as the 30th day of June comes; and the estimates of the Secretary showing a deficiency for the coming fiscal year of $30,000,000, I feel very sure, is under the fact, or what the fact will be, and not over. And in that matter there was not taken into consideration the treaty with Spain, and the payment of $20,000,000, and the $25,000,000 damages to American citizens for property destroyed in Cuba, and a score of other matters that arise out of changed conditions.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment.

Nor do these estimates include any expenditure for aid to the merchant marine or the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, or, for that matter, for a further increase in the Navy. Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. PAYNE. How much does the Secretary of War include in your estimate for the military establishment for the coming year?

Mr. CANNON. I have given it—the exact amount of the estimates as passed upon, and I am discussing——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman did not refer to the details.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). The estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PAYNE. How much did he estimate?

Mr. CANNON. For the military establishment $145,000,000, and for the War Department $42,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman think any such amount will be necessary for the coming year for the military establishment?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, yes; because when you go over for the coming year, I will say to the gentleman from New York, there are large expenditures that were made this year that will not be met or paid during the current year. Not only next year, but for some years, we will have them coming in as the results of the war with Spain; expenditures that certainly will have to occur from time to time.

Mr. HOPKINS. These will be small amounts comparatively, will they not?

Mr. CANNON. Compared with what we have expended for the Army during the time of war, yes; but in the aggregate large.

Now I want to finish answering the gentleman from Missouri. After proper consideration, wise and thorough discussion, and full information, I am quite ready to shake hands with my party friends upon this side of the House and say that we will give apt encouragement by legislation or by appropriation, or both, to the merchant marine [applause], and after full discussion, proper treaties to be made with foreign countries, notably Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and after we have all read the bill, and after we can approximate what the cost is to be, as an individual I am quite in favor of shaking hands with Representatives and wisely preparing and assisting in the enactment of a provision that will construct the Nicaraguan Canal. [Applause.] But I am not willing to do either, the canal being estimated at a cost of from $115,000,000 to $200,000,000, and the other variously estimated at from $150,000,000 to $160,000,000——

A MEMBER. Per annum?

Mr. CANNON. No; in the aggregate—until we have given it proper consideration. And when we provide for these great expenditures, I insist there shall go, hand in hand with the provision, apt legislation that will give the money necessary to meet the expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. CARMACK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to understand the gentleman's position. I understand him that on account of the new burdens and responsibilities we have taken upon ourselves abroad we shall hereafter spend less money at home?

Mr. CANNON. No; I can hardly see how my friend could have gotten such an understanding. We never will spend less money in the United States than was expended, in my judgment, in the fiscal year prior to the war with Spain. I do not stand here now, nor shall I in the future stand here, seeking to cripple an efficient service to a great and growing people [applause]; a people that has doubled its population and one-half more since 1860. But I do stand here as one of the representatives of the people and say that, in my judgment, while revenues and appropriations should be sufficient for an efficient public service within our borders, and should and must be sufficient to maintain our obligations in the outlying territory, the care of which we are charged with under the treaty, while every dollar should be given, yet I will object here if it is proposed to enter upon new lines of expenditure until they have been fully considered by the House of Representatives, and real debate and consideration held touching them; and even then unless there is already upon the statute book or hand in hand with the legislation there goes upon the statute book legislation that will give the money necessary to meet the expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman, as I understand him, would not favor the consideration of such a great measure as the Nicaragua Canal upon an appropriation bill, such as the river and harbor bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend here now, this being the 9th day of February, when every minute and every hour of every legislative day from now until the 4th of March and many of the nights are absolutely required for the consideration of that legislation and appropriations that must be enacted, if we are not to have a special session of Congress, that it is impossible to give intelligent and fair and proper consideration to any bill that would construct the Nicaragua Canal or would give efficient aid to a merchant marine.

Mr. FOX rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. CANNON. In a moment I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio. I will yield now to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FOX. In view of the great deficit in revenue to meet the appropriations that have been made, and in view of the statement of the gentleman that he is not in favor of great additional appropriations unless there goes hand in hand a provision sufficient to raise the necessary revenue, I want to ask the gentleman how that revenue will be raised?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, we will discuss that when we come to it. During the next Congress I hope to have time enough to intelligently consider and fully discuss it, and when my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] who so ably heads that great committee that recommends legislation and provides ways and means has properly reported the proposed legislation, if any is required, we will then consider it. I can not undertake now to go into the details. Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, whether he is not assuming that one of the great committees of this House, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has been idle and derelict in its duty in the matter of the Nicaragua Canal when he undertakes to say that we are unenlightened upon so important a question as that? According to the public prints that committee has made almost a constant study of the question during the whole of this session of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I want to say that he can not torture any remark I make into a reflection upon that great committee, presided over so honorably and so ably by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. What is a committee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Some committees seem to be all-controlling and all-absorbing. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Some committees seem to be all-controlling and all-absorbing; and some members seem to be flippant at times rather than wise. [Laughter.]

I have no doubt that that great committee has performed and is performing its function. I am not charging it with want of knowledge or with being derelict in its duty. But I do say that if that committee could multiply itself tenfold in strength and tenfold in wisdom there is no time in the next three weeks, with the great amount of business that must be done, for that committee to place itself so in touch with this House and the country as to determine intelligently, efficiently, and safely upon legislation touching that great work. That is all I desire to say on that point.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he meant to make explicitly and definitely the statement—and coming from him it means a great deal to this House—that in his judgment there will be no opportunity for the consideration of the measure that he has within the last few moments been discussing—the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I am but one member of this House. In speaking I speak only for myself. I do not voice any other member. I voice only my own opinions. I do not reflect the sentiments of others. I do believe, upon my own responsibility, for reasons which convince my mind and which I am willing to submit to the candid judgment of members of this committee and the House, that it is absolutely impossible to intelligently consider and legislate concerning either of those great propositions in the coming three weeks, burdened as we are with this great block of legislation and appropriation that must pass if an extraordinary session of Congress is to be avoided.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him a further question? Will he state to the House what number of appropriation bills are yet to be acted on by the House of Representatives—primarily, I mean?

Mr. CANNON. There is a sundry civil bill now under consideration; the fortification bill, not yet reported; the general deficiency bill, which is an exceedingly large one (or will be, from a casual examination of the estimates), not yet reported or even prepared; there is the naval bill, not yet reported; there is the Army bill, not yet reported. None of these have received consideration in the House.

A MEMBER. Five bills in all.

Mr. CANNON. Five, I believe.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask my friend from Illinois whether he meant to be understood as saying that he would not favor the passage of a bill authorizing the construction of the Nicaragua Canal until the revenues of the Government were sufficient to pay for it, or until the revenues of the country, upon the estimates that have been made, would with apparent certainty meet such an expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, when I make a general statement about a present condition my friend certainly can not misinterpret my remark. What I aimed to say and do say is this, that I have been heretofore and am now in favor of following that policy which will construct the Nicaragua Canal—construct it by the United States upon a zone of territory that Uncle Sam owns from the center of the earth up to the sky. [Applause.] And I want to see to it that that proposition when enacted is so considered that the proper means will be provided for the construction of the work.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Just one other question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: When the question is the construction of a great public work of this character, which is to benefit the future and posterity as much as the present, and when a feasible plan has been agreed upon by the committee to whom the subject has been referred, would the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, consider it unwise for the Government to obligate itself to meet such an emergency in our affairs, when everything is favorable, as would warrant the construction of such a canal at this time?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, when that bill comes before the House for consideration, I, as one member, shall stand here doing all that I can to secure consideration and legislation touching the same—not as an enemy of the proposition, but as a friend; but I will not be swept off my feet now or hereafter by people who profess to be better friends of that measure than I am, and thereby allow legislation to go upon the statute books that in the fullness of time will embarrass the great work rather than forward it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The object of my inquiry was merely this: I thought I understood the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to say that it would be unwise to engage in a work of that character and importance, involving so large an expenditure, while the revenues are in their present condition. And I object, sir, to being foreclosed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from the right, as I believe we have the right, to have this bill come in here from its proper committee and be considered and passed upon its merits. The only object of my inquiry was to avoid misrepresentation, to see to it that at least I should be put right in favoring a proposition so generally indorsed throughout the country, and a proposition which I believe both the political parties in national conventions have indorsed again and again. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. My friend, under the guise of obtaining the floor for a question, has made a speech, an exception, and an objection. I will not say, as some judges do who have the time—and I have this time—"Let the exception be noted." I will not say that, because I am always glad to yield to my friend from Michigan; but in common with him I am a member of this House and quite as good a friend of this great improvement as he is; and in the best interests of that improvement I do not believe that in the existing condition of the country, just at the close of the war, with all these matters in front of us that must be met, and with our present revenues—I do not believe it is within the bounds of human possibility to consider intelligently in an hour or two hours or a day the proposed legislation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Just one more question, if the gentleman from Illinois is willing.

Mr. CANNON. I yield for a question, if my friend will confine himself to that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will ask my friend from Illinois whether he would not consider it wise for our Government to make use of the opportunity which seems to be open under present treaty rights with Nicaragua and Costa Rica and avail itself of a time when there are so few foreign and domestic complications surrounding us, to undertake a great work of this character now, even if we have to issue bonds to pay for it and mortgage the future revenues of the country to meet such a wise expenditure? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, when the occasion arises I will meet that question, and I will meet that speech, which, of course, would be a good one if a man were talking "glittering generalities" in an after-dinner effort. [Laughter.] I will meet it now by saying that here we are in a condition that we must face. But when we come to discuss the new legislation, to enact legislation to meet these conditions, we must be able to adopt the highest, the wisest, and the best course, after mature consideration, and I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to enter into the discussion of that question at this time, or until it becomes essential. I should not have alluded to it at all now had it not been for the question of my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY.]

Here we are, sir, responsible for the performance of the trust which has been reposed in us by our constituents, and I do not believe, with this mass of business to which I have referred before us and that must be done, that we can properly consider that great question in the next three weeks.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman not answer the question whether he would, in the prosecution of this great work, be willing to bond the Government?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that whenever the time comes to construct the canal, and when you or I or anybody else can state what it will cost and when we can secure the title to the necessary territory upon which we will build it, which involves the purchase, or negotiation for the purchase, under the operation of a treaty which must be negotiated—when you or I or anybody else can state what that will be, then we will consider that question, and I will be with you ready for my share of the work.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will you bond the Government for this great improvement which the people desire accomplished?

Mr. CANNON. I will join hands with you to raise proper means to pay the expenses of the Government, and if necessary I will bond the Government, although I would much rather raise the necessary amount by taxation. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, that question is not before us now. I repeat, I did not intend to discuss it at all except for the suggestion of my friend from Missouri.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman allow an interruption just here?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield for a question only. I say this most respectfully to my friend from Washington, for I have already consumed more time than I intended to consume.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—not that I ask him to speak for his party, but for himself individually—in view of the statement of the impoverishment of the Government, the deficit in its income, and the probability of a very large deficit during the coming fiscal year, whether he does not apprehend that there must be a necessity for an early issue of bonds by the Government?

Mr. CANNON. I will say in reply to my friend from Washington that I believe we can support the Navy and a sufficient army—with a minimum of not less than 50,000 men and a maximum of not exceeding 100,000 men—support the civil establishment, perform our duties well, in our present territory and in the outlying territories, out of the present revenues as they come this year and next, with the amount now in the Treasury, without any increase in taxation. But if that is done, I will state to my friend, if we accomplish that, we have got to see to it that no great appropriation or appropriations go through Congress that are not required for the best interests of the Government in the immediate future. [Applause.] Because if you undertake to perform work which involves the application of millions of dollars of additional expenditure you must resort to additional taxation or issue bonds to raise the money.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, with his consent.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. In view of the present state of the expenditures and the condition of the Treasury, I will ask if there is any probability, or even possibility, of a reduction of taxation at the present time?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman—my friend, I believe, is in the next Congress, and myself, and we will serve there together—we will serve and return to our constituents before there will be any reduction of taxation as it now stands on the statute books.

Mr. SIMS. That question is being continually asked me, and I had hoped my friend from Illinois would be able to help me to answer it.

Mr. CANNON. I am only giving my own judgment, and I beg gentlemen to remember that I am in no sense speaking for the great Committee of Ways and Means, which makes a specialty of revenues.

Mr. DOCKERY. If my friend will allow me one other question. Has the gentleman, in the estimates of income and expenditures, taken into account any item of income that may arise from Porto Rico, or Cuba, or other possessions?

Mr. CANNON. I have not; and for the reason that there is a large expenditure that must be met touching our outlying territory. For instance, the maintenance of the Army and Navy, and certain improvements with reference to harbors and other matters of that kind. The revenues coming from these territories are collected and will continue to be collected by the existing military governments and expended by the same in these territories, and that condition of affairs will necessarily continue until at some time in the future Congress in its wisdom has made some disposition of them with reference to the local administration and laws within them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just one other question. If I understand the position of the gentleman aright, in respect to two important propositions, it is this: He simply favors the orderly consideration, in the usual way, with ample time for debate and amendment, of both the propositions—the proposition to construct the Nicaragua Canal and also the proposition commonly known as the "Hanna-Payne ocean subsidy" scheme.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, and when I say, in reply to the gentleman's question, that I favor ample time, I do not mean anything more than sufficient time. Not a minute beyond the time necessary for the House to consider properly those great questions do I as an individual legislator desire. That much, I, as one member, insist upon for myself, and I believe every other member will do the same.

Mr. STEELE. Without obstruction?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, without obstruction!

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will my colleague, the chairman of the committee, yield to me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the chairman of the committee is through with his general statement, I wish to ask a question.

Mr. CANNON. I believe I have stated all I desire to state in the way of general debate. I did not intend to consume more than ten minutes at the outside when I began to address the committee, and gentlemen of the committee are quite as much responsible as I am for my having consumed so much time, because of their apparent interest in the subject, as evidenced by their questions.

Mr. FLEMING. We have been delightfully entertained.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to bring to the attention of my colleague, the chairman of the committee, the item on page 2 of the bill, for an immigrant station at Ellis Island, New York. The bill carries $390,850, to be paid out of the fund now in the Bureau of Immigration. There is only $209,000 in that fund, and the Gardner bill, which passed this House recently, making our immigration laws applicable to Hawaii, left out the head tax. In other words, we get no fees in Hawaii for all the expenses that we may incur in the administration of our immigration laws there. In addition to that, this bill carries over $100,000 more than we have on hand in the fund. Now, I want to suggest to the chairman whether we could not in this bill increase the head tax from $1 to $2?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, in my judgment that is a matter of legislation which, under the rules, ought not to go upon a general appropriation bill. As to the amount of money necessary to meet the appropriation from the head tax, we will discuss that under the five-minute rule. I think there will be quite enough by the time it is expended, but if there be any doubt about it we can make the appropriation directly from the Treasury.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not if your statement is true that we have a large deficit.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield the floor, reserving any time that may be left to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the balance of his time, which is six minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1964) for the erection of a public building for the use of the custom-house and post-office at Newport News, Va., asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. FAIRBANKS, and Mr. MONEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5465) authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war with Spain.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for his candid admission that the present receipts, even with the war tax, is not sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government as now administered. I agree with him that we must reduce expenditures, but I do not agree with him as to how this shall be done. This bill is a large one—larger than it ought to be—but, except in a few respects, it is as the law directs. It is more than half as large as the one against which he has animadverted. He has in a single day often passed bills involving more money than will be necessary for the building of the Nicaragua Canal, if we can trust the commission appointed to ascertain the feasibility and to estimate the cost.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we have now perhaps the only chance the United States will have within the next ten or fifteen years to build, control, and own the Nicaragua Canal, for the concession under which the Senate bill proposes to have it built will expire in October. It should be built under the control of and for the Government, and as soon as possible.

I have opposed the annexation of all these foreign territories, and I think yet it is unwise to annex them; but it does not lie in the mouths of those who have supported the proposition to annex them and to increase the Army in order to control them to say that we do not now need the Nicaragua Canal. If we are to extend our possessions to include the Philippines, then the canal is a necessity.

I stand ready now and at any time to join my friend in every effort to reduce expenses, and in this I think I can speak for this side of the Chamber.

Let me suggest that the proper way to prevent a deficiency in the Treasury is to reduce your high prohibitory tariff to a revenue basis and then reduce the many exorbitant salaries and dispense with the numerous supernumeraries who hang around the Departments, this Capitol, and other offices of the Government. When you have done this, then get rid of all the extravagant Army officers and discharge the volunteer soldiers, reduce the Army to what it was before we declared war, and let them return to civil life, and then we shall be able to raise sufficient revenue to defray the legitimate expenses of the Government economically administered and have money to build the Nicaragua Canal and make other necessary improvements. The expense of the Army provided for by the Hull bill for a single year, and which is a clear loss, would more than build the canal.

Mr. Chairman, when the war with Spain began there was in the Treasury over $200,000,000 of available cash, the proceeds of the bond sale made by Mr. Cleveland. This Congress authorized the issue of $400,000,000 of bonds and $100,000.000 of interest-bearing certificates. Two hundred millions of the bonds were issued, but very little, if any, of the money received for them reached the Treasury before the protocol had been signed, and we closed a war lasting one hundred and thirteen days with an increased debt of $200,000,000 and an increased annual war tax of about the same amount, and yet we stand face to face with a deficiency.

The second Dingley bill authorized the issue of $300,000,000 more bonds than have been issued, and it is my deliberate judgment, expressed here, that the Army will not be mustered out until the expenditures authorized on account of the war make it necessary to issue them. When that has been done, I think Congress will realize the value of Treasury notes and the free coinage of silver as against the gold standard and bonds. The first thing we need is enlargement of our redemption money, and then an increase in our greenbacks as the country grows. Contracting coinage and expanding business will ruin any people, and we can not continue it much longer.

I appeal to gentlemen upon this side of the House as well as those upon the other side to join in the reduction of all unnecessary expenditures whenever an opportunity presents itself. The estimates which come to us from the Treasury Department indicate that we will have in the next year $150,000,000 to $160,000,000 of deficit, notwithstanding the heavy war taxes that our people must bear. Another remedy I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is to so amend the Constitution as to authorize the Government of the United States to lay its taxing hand upon the incomes of the wealthy of the country. [Applause.]

Millions upon millions of dollars escape taxation. The burdens of the Government, both in times of peace and of war, press heavily upon the shoulders of the common people of this country, and as they grow poorer and poorer their consumption gets less, and thereby the income of the Government is less; and yet a few thousand who own the millions escape taxation either for ordinary expenses or the expenses of the war. The Government takes the son of the widow and takes your son and my son and musters them into the Army of the United States to defend the flag of the Government, but when we ask to lay the hand of the Government upon the income of the wealthy, the Supreme Court says, "No; that is sacred."

Let us tax incomes, reduce the expenditure, and we will soon have a condition in the Treasury that will enable us to build the Nicaragua Canal and improve every harbor and important waterway in the United States. Confine our Government to this continent, as our fathers intended we should, and eschew all others like the Philippine Islands. Why, Mr. Chairman, the item for the purchase of the Philippines is one-third of all this bill.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact that during our past wars we had the right to levy an income tax and did so?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; and the Supreme Court held it was constitutional. But recently money has become so prominent and manhood so cheap that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that we can not lay a tax upon incomes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Before you take your seat, you stated a few moments ago that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue $300,000,000 of additional bonds.

Mr. McRAE. I ought to have said two hundred millions of additional bonds and one hundred millions of interest-bearing certificates.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understood that was what you meant. Is it not a fact that the Treasury Department in the sale of the two hundred millions were authorized to issue them for the specific purpose of prosecuting the war with Spain, and did not that authority cease with the termination of the war?

Mr. McRAE. I think it did, but the Administration will not terminate the war until it gets ready, and you will find the Secretary of the Treasury will construe it so that they can issue the additional bonds to pay for the Philippines and for the war against the Filipinos. Mr. Cleveland issued $260,000,000 in bonds under the resumption act more than twenty years after the resumption act was passed and for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The point I intended to make was, I was about to express a hope that the gentleman from Arkansas would not honor and dignify the claims of gentlemen on the other side to the right of the Administration now to issue these bonds after the war has been concluded.

Mr. McRAE. I have not attempted to dignify this, but to warn the Congress of the danger of what is contemplated. They have violated the spirit of the law with reference to the enlistment of volunteers. They are holding the volunteers in the Army, when it was specifically declared in advance that the volunteer soldiers should be mustered out as soon as hostilities ceased. They are holding now more than 125,000 soldiers, when the Hull bill provides for a minimum of 50,000 and a maximum of 100,000.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this session has drawn to within less than four weeks of its close. The time has come when it is difficult to separate the good from the bad, when legislation that is just and has in it much merit has tacked onto it other legislation that is so difficult to separate that we can scarcely pass on the one without the inclusion of the other.

Mr. Chairman, for the remaining three weeks it behooves members of this House who represent the people to be on the watch-tower. The last two days and a half we have been considering 78 bills, as it were, in one. These 78 bills carried appropriations of over $8,000,000. It meant that every bill that was just and meritorious would be defeated unless gentlemen interested in the meritorious measures should vote for those that neither commended themselves to the conscience of the members nor of the public.

Mr. Chairman, it is already conceded that the expenditures of these two years, closing with the Fifty-fifth Congress, will be over a billion dollars, outside of the expenditures enacted for the Spanish war, the greatest amount ever expended by any Congress; and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, able, efficient, and always honest, stands before you and says the deficiency will be what? One hundred millions of dollars? Yes; $159,000,000 for the fiscal year now about ending. Does it not, therefore, behoove us to look carefully and see where the billion dollars is going; aye, more, where are the billion dollars to come from? Somebody must earn it before it can be placed in the Treasury, and everyone knows this burden must be borne by the people.

The bill we are now considering carries appropriations to the amount of nearly $63,000,000. It was printed and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the 7th day of February—only day before yesterday. Who has had the opportunity to investigate it? Perhaps the Committee on Appropriations, possibly some of the older members, who, by reason of long service, may anticipate what the bill would include; but who is there outside who has had the opportunity to properly investigate this bill of 112 pages of printed matter? And this one is no exception to all the other appropriation bills.

Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to go through this bill in detail. I find the first item carries an appropriation of $231,000 for a post-office at Buffalo, N. Y. It carries an appropriation of $398,850 for an immigrant station at Ellis Island, New York; tender for the Thirteenth light-house district, $100,000; supplies for light-houses, $450,000; repairs of light-houses, $600,000; salaries of keepers of light-houses, $740,000; and thus it goes. I find upon following the investigation further that in this single appropriation bill of $42,000,000, outside of the war expenditure of $20,000,000, $5,000,000 and more is to be expended in the great Empire State of New York alone. And that is not all this bill carries. It carries its proportion of the expenses of the Federal courts, that is put down in this bill at nearly $5,000,000, and this is confessedly $2,000,000 less than what the actual expenses will be.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Does not the gentleman know that more than one-half of the revenue which is obtained from the customs duties of the United States is obtained through the great port of entry and port of exit in the city of New York?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly; and the people all over the country pay for it. But if my friend from New York will abide a moment, he will find that I am not saying either wrong of him or of his constituents. I have nothing to say against the great Empire

State nor any other State. I have not had the opportunity, as I said, to thoroughly investigate, but I find in this bill appropriations to be expended in that one State alone of over $6,000,000.

I may not say it is right. Why? I may not say that it is unjust. Why? Because I have not had sufficient opportunity to investigate the matters entering into the expenditures. I only use these items to illustrate—they may or may not be necessary. Seven hundred and forty thousand dollars to be paid for the repairs, etc., of one light-house. The appropriation for light-houses may be right. I do not know; but the point I want to make is that we need more time to investigate, so that every member might know for himself whether or not the expenditure is a public necessity. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAXWELL] at the early part of this session introduced a resolution providing that Congress should meet following the election in March, so that there would be time for investigation.

I only say to you that by reason of these enormous expenditures, whether necessary or not, the people's representatives have put their hands into the Treasury to the extent of over $1,000,000,000. In view of the rush of business at the close of sessions, I am heartily in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, in order that there may not be this undue rush of business. This resolution, like many others, has slept the sleep that knows no waking in the committee to which it was referred.

The undue haste at the close of the session carrying these enormous appropriations makes this the most expensive and most extravagant session of Congress ever held, appropriating over a billion of dollars, and the people are burdened with high taxes beyond their ability to pay, and yet there is an annual deficit of over $159,000,000. This is a government by the people; yet the people govern through their representatives. For one, representing and voting for nearly 50,000 electors, about one-quarter of a million of people, I protest against these extravagant public expenditures.

My voice and vote shall always be for the least appropriation commensurate with an efficient public service. The Government should pay every just demand and should erect adequate public buildings in which to do the public business. The Representative who votes knowingly to appropriate one dollar out of the public Treasury that is not needed for an economic administration of the Government commits a crime that is kin to treason itself. The people ought to and will hold them to a strict account for their every vote and action. This is a long-suffering people, but willing to pay all just demands and should not be burdened beyond that.

This is the greatest Republic on earth. Its rich valleys and fertile fields are dotted all over with fat cattle and herds of every kind. Its resources are inexhaustible. It produces more gold and silver than any other country. Our people are intelligent and patriotic. Yet many are in debt and barely able to carry the burden, much of it placed there by extravagant public expenditures. The people are looking for a time when these burdens will be lessened—and they are looking to their Representatives. Can this expectation be met by a largely increased standing army and by larger and larger appropriations? Everyone knows it can not. It can only be done by a close adherence to the spirit of the founders and by trimming every appropriation to the lowest point possible. Who is there among us who dares to look his constituents in the face and do less?

We boast of a magnificent school system, beginning with the common schools and ending with our great colleges and universities. Ours is a God-fearing and a Christian people, and all over the broad land the church spires point toward heaven. Our people are kind-hearted and humane. With the fire of our forefathers burning in their hearts, they believe the lives of brave people are worth preserving; that independence is better than bondage. From all parts of this broad country, from every State, city, town, and hamlet, the demand came that the United States should heed the cry of humanity and lend a helping hand to the struggling Cubans, and with the spirits of the forefathers burning in the hearts of the men who direct the affairs of our Government all differences were laid aside, and as one man the people's representatives declared that Cuba is and of right should be free, and directed the President of the United States to enforce the decree by the use of the Army and Navy.

The world has been given the example of an unselfish Christian nation waging a war, expending her millions, and sending forth her great Army and Navy to suffer and do battle for humanity's sake without any personal interest, without any motive of gain or aggrandizement. We have demonstrated the courage and skill of the noble men who compose our Army and Navy, and yet not in these nor in all of them combined lies our strength or our chief glory. Our national perpetuity, our strength, and chief glory depend upon the spirit of Americanism as taught by our fathers—an honest government economically administered, giving every one the fullest right to the benefit of his own labor and the very broadest liberty consistent with the greatest good to the greatest number. Make every appropriation the very smallest consistent with an efficient public service. Make the laws so that they bear alike on the rich and the poor. Do not burden the masses with unnecessary and unjust public expenditures, nor make laws that grant privileges to a few and unduly burden the many. Deal with the people in the spirit of the Golden Rule, and they will carry the burdens without complaint and will fight the country's battles, and we will have no need of a large standing army in times of peace.

It was that confidence thus inspired and the spirit of Americanism that caused the response to the President's call which filled the quota, and as many more turned away, in less than sixty days, and in less than one hundred days we had a patriotic, self-sacrificing, and the most terrific Army that ever went forth to do battle for any country, except the heroes of the war of 1861.

Mr. McRAE. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. At the same time built up a Navy that was not only our pride, but the admiration of the world, and in four months had wiped the Spanish fleet from off the face of the earth. If the people's representatives are true to the spirit of the forefathers, its perpetuity is established and the genius of our institution, as well as the spirit of Americanism, will not only abide with us, but will take hold on all our new possessions and extend to the entire Western Hemisphere.

I think we may with propriety at this time, when our people are generally making a special study of the Constitution, and are reading anew the famous Declaration of Independence and drinking deep at the fountain of the spirit of Americanism as taught by the forefathers, and upon which the corner stone of this Republic was so firmly builded, say to the Philippines, "We will never consent that you be turned back to the cruel Spaniards; nor will we abandon you to the nations of the Old World, that they may pounce down upon you and divide your possessions among themselves."

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman mean to compliment the other side by saying they are really reading the Constitution now?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I mean to say, Mr. Chairman, that I believe in this broad land not only members on this floor, but the yeomanry all over this country are not only reading the Constitution, but they are drinking deep the spirit of Americanism. Nor will America subjugate you; you will be treated as our allies, as you were in the great war for humanity and personal liberty. We will defend you against cruel Spain, against the nations of the Old World, and even against the greed of certain interests in our own land. Yes, if need be, we will defend you against yourselves. We will leave our flag to float over you, and our Army to protect it and you, until you can learn more of the spirit of Americanism and the meaning of the American flag; until you learn that where the American flag floats it means the broadest liberty to all consistent with the greatest good to the greatest number; that liberty means the spirit of the Golden Rule. When you can stand alone we will bring our flag home, but leave with you the spirit of the American flag and of Americanism, and let its influence permeate not only the new possessions, but the entire Western Hemisphere; and if you can not comprehend this spirit and are unfit for self-government, we will profit by what light we may receive and in the spirit of our founders and of the Golden Rule take such action as an enlightened conscience may dictate. While we are applying the spirit of the fathers and of the Golden Rule to the Philippines, let us not forget that our duty to the people of the States is even more pressing. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, as some allusion has been made on this floor during the discussion of this sundry civil appropriation bill to what is known as the ship-subsidy bill, I crave the indulgence of the House while I address myself for a while to the consideration of that measure as it has been considered before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am a member, and having signed a minority report against it. The bill is entitled "A bill to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary." The main provision of this bill is this, without giving the lengthy generalities and details of the same:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract with the owner or owners of any vessel of the United States hereinbefore described, and registered for foreign trade, for the payment to said owner or owners for a period of twenty years, and subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums following, namely:

(a) On each entry of a sail or steam vessel not exceeding 16 entries in any twelve consecutive months, subject to paragraph (c) of section 6 of this act, 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles not exceeding 1,500 nautical miles sailed outward bound and 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles not exceeding 1,500 nautical miles sailed homeward bound, and 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles over 1,500 nautical miles sailed either outward or homeward bound.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom this bill was referred, I feel called upon to enter my protest against its passage, whether it avails anything or not. The minority report, signed by myself and the other Democratic members of the committee, fully sets forth my reasons for opposing this measure. But so unjust and vicious are its provisions that I am unwilling to stop there without adding yet other words of condemnation from the floor of the House of Representatives. When I look back over the legislative record of the Republican party, back into the seventies or later, many things come trooping through my mind, and as I meditate I can but think of the Crédit Mobilier, the national-bank swindle, the Pacific Mail subsidy, the press-gag law, the Indian frauds, the straw contracts, the mineral-land swindle, the Alaska fur-seal swindle, and others too numerous to mention.

These and many other infamies of a more recent occurrence, such as the striking down of silver and issuing bonds, are only a part of the record of the immaculate Republican party away back in the past. And still they come. They pile the pyramid of infamies higher by the proposed Army increase, which will cost from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 per year in taxation, upon the public. Now they cap the climax by proposing a scheme in the shape of a ship subsidy, more monstrous perhaps than all the other deviltry, if possible, combined, thus entailing for twenty years at least an indefinite amount of money, anywhere from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 per year, in taxation upon a people already groaning under burdens near the point of inability to further pay the demands of greedy and remorseless plutocratic tyrants. And for what? Simply to enable shipbuilders and shipowners to carry on their private business at a greater profit, and this money, too, to be wrung from the hard earnings of all other classes. Why do I say the amount is indefinite? Because while computed by cents there is no limit to the number of ships to be built or corporations that may avail themselves of the bounty.

Mr. Chairman, why not give the farmer, the mechanic, the blacksmith, and all classes of laborers a similar pull on the Treasury to enable them to better carry on their business? They have as much right to a subsidy as the ship builder and owner. But, sir, none are entitled to it according to the principles of our Government. So let none have it, but let every business stand or fall upon its own merits. Who have asked for this legislation? The farmer, mechanic, and laborer generally have asked for no such special privilege, and they are not willing that any other class shall have it, because it is not right, it is not just to tax one industry to build up another. Then let us see who have come here asking for this favor, and then you can better judge as to what class will be the beneficiaries. Only those who expect corresponding benefit from it. Here they are; they speak for themselves.

In the first place, ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, a great corporation lawyer, a representative of the shipbuilders and shipowners of the United States, came here and went before the committee and pleaded with all his eloquence for the passage of the bill. Then came Mr. G. S. Griscom, the representative of the International Navigation Company, and asked for it and pleaded with all the earnestness of his heart for it. Mr. E. C. Stratton, a representative of the Board of Underwriters and the American Bureau of Shipping, of New York, appeared in behalf of the measure, and talked and talked and talked for it. Mr. F. J. Kimball, representing the Norfolk and Western Railway, next addressed the committee upon the merits of the measure. Then came Mr. Theodore C. Search, president of the National Association of Manufacturers of the United States, and proved conclusively that the bill would greatly benefit his side of the house. After him, Mr. Frank Thurber, president of the United States Export Association, made an exhaustive argument for his people, claiming for them their slice of the pie. Mr. Frank J. Firth, representing the Lake Carriers' Association at Buffalo, then had his say in advocacy of the scheme. In addition to these gentlemen, Mr. Thomas Clyde, of New York, Mr. Alexander B. Smith, Mr. T. W. Hyde, and E. Platt Stratton, all came forward to take "sugar in theirn" [laughter], of course representing like interests. And "lastly, but not leastly," came Mr. Arthur Sewall, of Maine, whom a good many of us supported for Vice-President in the last campaign—God forgive us! [laughter]—came forward and actually advocated the passage of the measure, as he said, "not for the ship builders or owners, but to build up a merchant marine." Great Scott! if it is not for ship builders and owners, who, in the name of God, is it for? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Sewall knows it is for that class alone and their tributaries, the other great public carriers of the country. They all know that it will be class legislation in the truest sense. Now you see men representing corporations worth over $20,000,000 asking for aid from the Treasury. Greedy, greedier, greediest!

Yes, sir; this crowd framed the bill and brought it here, and now they want it passed for their own benefit and profit. They continued to visit the committee room until they obtained a favorable report thereon from a majority of the committee, and now they hope to have it rushed through the House under the same plea.

Not a single farmer, mechanic, or laboring man from any source has asked for such a piece of legislation. In so many words, this measure proposes to take from the pockets of the great mass of the people enough money each year to make a handsome profit to be put into the pockets of such men as have asked for the enactment of such a bill. Do the farmers and workingmen of this country desire this thing? Let them answer for themselves through one of their Representatives, who, on being asked their opinion, said, "I can only say that the infamy of the Army bill is only surpassed by the ship subsidy in a further increase of taxation on the producing people and is fast forcing them to the point of inability to pay the demands of taxation."

I say, sir, they are arrayed against such injustice, and are tired of being "saddled to be ridden to death by a privileged class ready booted and spurred to do the riding." There will be a day of severe reckoning before long if this continual heaping up of wrongs is not stopped.

Mr. Chairman, of all the barefaced, undisguised, audacious attempts to rob the people in the interest of a few shipbuilders, this bill is without a parallel in the long and black history of Republican subsidy legislation. If the public conscience had not become hardened, if the country was not prepared by experience, the mere proposition to pay out of the public Treasury millions of dollars—how many millions no man can estimate—(which has the sanction of the majority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and which will doubtless have the approval of a majority of the Republicans in this Congress) would arouse the just indignation of the taxpayers and compel the corporations behind this scheme to abandon it without the simple formality of the briefest consideration in this House. But times have changed. Effrontery has taken the place of conscience.

However monstrous the scheme to use the public money to create and advance individual enterprise, it goes, and the more flagrant it is, the more it goes. Not long ago the men behind this subsidy scheme would not have dared to show their faces before a committee of the House in support of such a transparent scheme to enrich themselves at the public expense. But they have learned the value of cheek and effrontery, that it is only another name for patriotism and public spirit, and now in these expansion times of national greatness they stalk into the committee room with a prepared bill and with the air of not only shipowners, but owners of the public Treasury, and signify their willingness to aid the Government in rebuilding the shipping industry which they themselves have purposely destroyed. The devil himself never had more presumption and impertinence, and no doubt will give it up if he ever examines the bill, for it is robbery unadulterated, pure and simple. [Laughter.]

They submit to the committee a measure of their own concoction, a bill conceived in their own interests, and matured solely with a view to their own enrichment. A majority of the committee accept the measure. I do not intend to reflect upon the committee individually or collectively. I hold each and every member of the committee in the highest personal esteem, and knowing them all to be men of the highest integrity, I am all the more surprised that this measure has been accepted by them with the eagerness and alacrity of avowed championship. This bill is to be rushed through the House at this short session, practically without discussion, certainly without consideration. Why this indecent and hot haste, at this trying hour in the nation's history, to take from its coffers the millions of dollars put there by the honest, patriotic, impoverished taxpayer? Why railroad this scheme through Congress in its dying hours, involving as it does Government obligations that mean a quarter of a century of robbery and spoils? If they were disposed to be fair, why is it that they are not willing for longer discussion?

If the old and new Democratic hostility to Government subsidies needed any vindication, this shipbuilders and shipowners' scheme affords it. What, Mr. Chairman, is this Republican attempt to rebuild a dead industry, long ago destroyed by partisan and sectional Republican legislation, to cost the taxpayers? No man can tell. The alleged estimates are purely conjectural and theoretic. It is a speculation on Government money supplied by honest and suffering labor. What the subsidy will amount to in the course of time is guesswork. It may run into the billions. And to think that the great mass of the people are to be made to pay this bounty, for bounty it is, by the sweat of their brow to enrich a few, and a very few at that. Why not give the farmer a bounty to better enable him to carry on his farming, as he is losing yearly in his business? He, in his forlorn condition, does not ask for it. And remember, too, that this goes to a few wealthy men and rich corporations, with their millions behind them, who come to the Treasury of the people and boldly ask this bounty. It is shameless and ridiculous!

There is no assurance, no promise, no, not even an intimation, that billions of dollars of the people's hard-earned money will not be consumed in this shipbuilders' scheme to build their vessels at the public expense. The pending bill amounts to exactly that and nothing less. And you have as much right to build coaches for the railroad company as to build ships for the shipowner. With the largest export trade of any nation on the earth Congress is invoked to build a fleet of ships in private shipyards for individuals engaged in the shipping business in the New England States. Why do I use the word build? Because in a short time after building a ship enough money will soon be fleeced from the Treasury to pay for building the vessel.

No doubt, Mr. Chairman, it will be a good thing for the shipbuilders in Maine and other New England shipyards. I have no doubt if the inducement is sufficient the ocean will be white with sails from these shipyards. Eleven South Atlantic States have had in the past only about $15,000,000, while the same number of North Atlantic States have had over $50,000,000 in general appropriations of different kinds.

The title of the bill in part is "to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States," and, as though that designation too freely disguised its purpose, it is added hypocritically "and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary." I do not blame the New England shipbuilders in the least. An idle shipyard is about as profitless as the average farming in my country. But a Congress that abuses the confidence and trust of the whole people by wasting the public money or by diverting it to the uses of individuals in the promotion of private enterprises will be held to the fullest responsibility. I know it is the habit of Republican leaders to sneer at this sort of talk, but they will scoff once too often before they realize the consequences of such pernicious class legislation as this bill proposes to create in the future.

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to any form of subsidy. It is contrary, in any shape or form whatever, to the spirit of our institutions, and is unwarranted by the organic law of this country. This is a trite saying, I know, and it is ridiculed as old fogyism; but if I am not woefully at fault in my reflection, the time is not far distant when this old, threadbare subsidy issue must be met and decided once for all time by the people who bear the burden. It may be all right now to speak of it as a "platform platitude;" but pass this bill, fasten upon the country a quarter of a century of irritating and unconstitutional taxation imposed by this scheme, and there will not be enough left of this Republican Congress in 1900 to call for tellers on the bill to repeal it. I am not opposed to the establishment or the revival of our foreign trade through American ships. I am, on the contrary, heartily in favor of the largest possible trade in that direction and the employment of the largest number of American ships in that trade. It is more than desirable. I concede its great importance as a trade winner, and from the standpoint of American enterprise; but let it be built up by the energy and perseverance and industry of those persons who see fit to embark in the business, just as every other business should be carried on in this country. It was a dastardly policy in the Republican party to strike it down, destroy it, annihilate it utterly by proscriptive, sectional protection legislation. Having destroyed to a certain extent the trade by a short-sighted and narrow policy, you now seek to revive it by raiding the Treasury of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I appreciate the embarrassment of our Republican friends, Mr. Chairman, in this dilemma, in handling this question, and I am sorry that they have not had the frankness and candor to confess their dereliction like honest, courageous men. It is not like the distinguished Republican leader, the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to dodge behind a possible war emergency in dealing with a public question that ought to stand on its own merits. "To provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary!" This is not the manly, American way of meeting this question. This country will never fight a foreign war with subsidized ships, manned by subsidized seamen. This was not the case at Manila and Santiago. [Applause.]

Our Navy is the admiration of the world to-day. Its achievements at Manila and at Santiago command unstinted praise from foeman and friend. There is no prouder page in our history than Dewey's record at Manila and Schley's incomparable seamanship at Santiago. "The man behind the gun" at Manila and Santiago was an enlisted American sailor, and his bravery and gunnery have invested the American Navy with imperishable luster. [Applause.] It is a sacrilege now to couple with his name and deeds the effort to create an auxiliary service under the hateful and un-American name of subsidy. In the name of the brave American sailor I would ask the House to amend the title of the bill by striking from it the words I have quoted. If you intend, my Republican friends, to vote these millions into the pockets of individual shipowners, as you have the power to do, do it openly and aboveboard.

Do not, I beg you, reflect upon the valor and seamanship of the American Navy by even the suggestion of a subsidized auxiliary service in time of war. Another foreign war is too remote to justify the contemplation even of conditions that would demand the need of an auxiliary service. In the meantime there is unlimited money for the enlargement of the American Navy until it ranks with the greatest naval power in the world. The question of reviving our foreign trade by subsidizing American ships, Mr. Chairman, is not a new one. It has confronted almost every Congress in some form or other for a great many years. Apart from my opposition to subsidy legislation in general, I find the measure before the House essentially obnoxious and wholly indefensible. The expenditure of the money under this bill will be nothing less than profligacy. It can not be justified. It can not be defended. There is no excuse for it. No public necessity demands it. Pass this bill, will you? And when you do, you say to the world that you intend to build up a privileged class in free America. It will simply be a reckless abuse of power on the part of Congress, deserving the utter condemnation of all fair-minded men.

Only the International Navigation Company, a subsidized corporation composed of foreign and American capitalists, is "the man behind the gun," and the aim is straight at the vitals of the National Treasury, with possibly the assistance of Huntington and his Pacific Mail companies, and later on to be joined by a number of other corporations to be knocking at the door for bounty. This aggression upon the Treasury now finds its excuse in the agitation following the recent conflict with Spain. The time is opportune for the agitation of every alleged scheme looking to the glorification of the American flag. The agitators are no doubt amazed at their success in passing this bill through the committee with so much ease and forcing its passage through the House with so much expedition.

It is indeed, Mr. Chairman, a most extraordinary accomplishment even in these piping times of patriotic impulse. You know, Mr. Chairman, and we all know, that there are scores of important public bills on the Calendar of this House that must die with the expiration of this Congress. There are important measures of the greatest public interest demanding consideration and action. There are scores of bills on the Private Calendar of infinitely greater merit than this shipbuilder's scheme. No rule has been invoked in the interest of their consideration and in furtherance of absolute justice to aggrieved and wronged claimants. Many of these claims are hoary with age. Many of the claimants have died in the almshouse, while the Government, through the arbitrary rules of this House, denies the common justice of an honest and binding obligation.

This happens, Mr. Chairman, year after year, Congress after Congress. And as the days for the consideration of these claims in this Congress can be numbered on the fingers of one hand, we see a distinguished Republican leader obtain the floor and demand the adjournment of the House from Thursday until Saturday, thus striking from the Calendar one of the few remaining chances for the consideration of these claims. But how is it with the big shipowner and big shipbuilder when he presents his claim? With what distinguished consideration is the International Navigation Company received when the president of that American-British corporation brings along his little bill and demands its immediate passage! Why, the demand is obsequiously complied with. The bill goes whirling through the committee and is hurried to the House Calendar, promptly referred to the Committee on Rules, and we know the rest, as the tune now goes; or if not referred directly to the Committee on Rules this committee was consulted.

In the ordinary course of legislative procedure it would have taken two or three Congresses to reach this stage of its completion. But Mr. Griscom, president of the International Navigation Company, is no common, ordinary, everyday sort of a pauper. He does not enjoy the luxury and distinction of standing at the lobby doors of this House and buttonholing members. Oh, no. He comes here like a patriot, by way of the White House, and with the approval of the chairman of the Republican National Committee. In fact, he says himself he is a patriot. It costs the International Navigation Company, he says, $104,000 a year to carry the American flag. In other words, Mr. Griscom's pride in the American flag costs his American-British corporation over $100,000 every year it floats that flag.

If that is not true patriotism, Mr. Chairman, then what is it? Or is it the initiation of the American-British alliance about which so much has been said in the public prints? But if this bill becomes a law, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Griscom's patriotism will find its abundant reward in the stupendous dividends of the International Navigation Company. There was a time, Mr. Chairman, when this corporation did business exclusively under foreign flags. It started business in 1873 under the Belgian flag and under a Belgian subsidy. It continues to float that flag, and nobody will ever "haul down that flag" until the Belgian subsidy is exhausted. It hoisted the American flag under a postal subsidy in 1889, and has managed to get along and live and lose over $100,000 per year for the glory of floating that flag.

But that is not all. There is still a greater glory ahead. If this bill becomes a law, the International Navigation Company will build, President Griscom says, five 12,000-ton ships within ten years, representing an investment of over $7,500,000. And why not? There is no limit to this subsidy. It is an order from the Government without restriction. The bill appears to mean one thing, and means anything and everything. Only the beneficiaries understand it and appreciate its opportunities. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, after a very careful and painstaking examination of the bill in all its scope and bearings, after hearing patiently all that has been said in support of it by the people who are to be benefited by it, it is a most reckless and profligate piece of class legislation, and in my opinion, sir, it will be condemned by the American people. Other companies will follow suit building ships, and so it goes—the people are robbed and grow poorer and poorer.

I am opposed to taking money out of one man's pocket to protect another in his business. I am opposed to giving to these shipowners and shipbuilders money from the United States Treasury to carry on their private business. It is a privilege that should not be granted to any corporation or to any individual citizen. If it is given to one, the other should have it. The citizen does not ask it, and it should not be given to the corporation because it asks it. How long will such unfair and unjust discrimination be tolerated by a patient and long-suffering people? I believe I voice the sentiment of the great mass of people when I oppose this measure. They are patriotic; they are liberty-loving; but I do not believe they will much longer endure such barefaced discrimination. They may be driven to desperation by such policies. In their interest let us kill this bill.

Let me say, in conclusion, as I have before said, that unless the voice of the people is heard and heeded, sooner or later they may be driven to desperation, and appearing, not by proxy, but in person, at the gates of justice, demand their rights "in a mood incapable of reason, for when the flag of wrath and desperation is raised it is then too late to reason." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that for a moment to enable me to get the Indian bill into conference.

Mr. PAYNE. I withdraw it temporarily.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill be nonconcurred in, and that a conference thereon be asked with the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not see any member of the minority of the committee present, but I presume that this is satisfactory to them?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were nonconcurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the appointment of the conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. LITTLE.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also lay before the House at this time a request of the Senate for the return of a bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate Senate bill (No. 5465) authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain sailors, soldiers, and marines who served during the war with Spain.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be returned to the Senate.

There was no objection.

IMPERIALISM AND TERRITORIAL EXPANSION.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent of the House at this time to print in the RECORD a short supplemental statement, covering only two pages in manuscript, in connection with the speech I delivered on the 27th of January, simply elaborating certain legal propositions then set forth.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there is no objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The additional argument presented by Mr. FLEMING is as follows:

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short supplementary statement in reference to a legal proposition embodied in my speech against the policy of imperialism published in the RECORD of January 28, 1899.

In that speech I enumerated certain personal and civil rights that would attach, under the Constitution of the United States, to the inhabitants of our new possessions, whether we call them "Territories" or "colonies."

In connection with my argument, I used language (RECORD, page 1289) which might be construed to mean that those personal and civil rights were possessed by citizens of the States by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, and not by virtue of the constitutions of the several States. I do not mean to be so understood. Substantially all the rights enumerated by me are guaranteed by the several State constitutions, and the Supreme Court has many times decided that the first ten amendments to the Constitution, which contain most of the guaranties of personal and civil rights, were intended as restrictions on the powers of Congress alone, and did not affect the powers of the States one way or the other. So that it may be said generally that these rights are enjoyed by citizens of States under the protection of their State constitutions and by citizens of Territories under the protection of the Constitution of the United States.

The use I made of the legal proposition in applying it to citizens of Territories was entirely correct, and the argument stands intact, but I desired to make this statement lest I might lead some one into error on the side issue as to the source from which the citizens of States derive protection for their personal and civil rights.

If a State should undertake to deny to its citizens any of the well-recognized personal and civil rights, it is not at all impossible that protection might still be justly claimed under the Constitution of the United States. But that would seem to be a purely academic question which will probably never reach a practical issue.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GAINES, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. LOW, for three days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting additional estimate of appropriation for purchase of reindeer for Alaska and instruction of natives in their management—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the expenditures in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1898—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1899.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. LITTLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 5465) authorizing the renewal of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war with Spain.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1357) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1273) for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor; and

A bill (S. 4690) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1800) to reimburse George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., for money paid out by him as said postmaster;

A bill (H. R. 4790) for the relief of Homer D. McGraw, Lee County, Ala.;

A bill (H. R. 8306) for the relief of Z. C. Church;

A bill (H. R. 10969) for the erection of a public building in the city of Blair, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 11455) granting to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, certain land for park purposes and for the preservation of the native trees on said lands;

A bill (H. R. 11677) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 11685) granting the right of way through certain lands in the former Nez Perces Reservation, in the State of Idaho;

A bill (H. R. 11728) to remove the fire limit from the post-office at Bridgeport, Conn.;

A bill (H. R. 11785) for relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.;

A bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 11955) to amend sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to amend section 25 of the act passed June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 375) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Dennis Fitzpatrick;

A bill (H. R. 886) for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va.;

A bill (H. R. 5715) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones;

A bill (H. R. 8336) to correct the military record of William D. Kurfiss;

A bill (H. R. 10398) providing for the entry, free of customs duties, of certain bells presented by Edwin M. Stanton to the Iowa Agricultural College, of Ames, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 10563) to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Hammond, Ind.; and

A bill (H. R. 11142) granting to the mayor of the city of Victor, in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, the right to enter certain lands, therein described, for city purposes.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented the credentials of Chauncey Mitchell Depew, chosen by the legislature of New York a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1899; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. ELKINS. I present extracts from the journal of the senate of West Virginia, of January 24, 1899, relative to the election of Nathan B. Scott as a Senator from that State. I move that the papers be placed on the files of the Senate to accompany the credentials of the Senator-elect which were presented by me a few days ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of Local Union No. 6799, Bicycle Workers' Union, of Kenosha, Wis., and a petition of Local Union No. 304, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Racine, Wis., praying for the passage of the eight-hour bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT CAPE LOOKOUT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I present a statement of facts in relation to the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Cape Lookout, North Carolina, or at a point near to and south of Cape Hatteras. I move that the statement be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

MONETARY LAWS, ETC.

Mr. TELLER. I present the memorial of Anson Wolcott, of Wolcott, Ind., relative to the monetary laws and monetary condition of the United States. It is a very valuable and carefully prepared paper, and I move that it lie on the table and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHOUP (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3766) granting an increase of pension to Nancy M. Lindsey, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8445) granting a pension to Joseph N. Harmon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6502) granting increase of pension to William Rolley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9234) increasing the pension of George Blakesley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5805) for the relief of Col. George G. Pride, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. GALLINGER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 835) granting a pension to William B. Matchett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9314) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Stephens, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1675) granting a pension to Alice Smith, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4817) for the relief of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2657) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Selma, in the State of Alabama, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4881) for the extension of electric-lighting conduits in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. McMILLAN. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report certain amendments to the bill (S. 5289) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library. As the bill was read on a former day—the 26th of January—and went over under some objection, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call it up and have it considered, because it is a measure of very great importance.

Mr. CULLOM. Will it not lead to debate?

Mr. McMILLAN. It will take but a few minutes, I think. It is a matter of very great importance to the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM. Can it not wait another day? I wish to get up the appropriation bill as soon as possible.

Mr. McMILLAN. I feel certain there will be no debate about it. The bill has been read, and these are amendments which I was instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill has been already read, and if there is to be no discussion upon it I will consent to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia sundry amendments to the bill (S. 5289) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library, and asks unanimous consent that the amendments be acted upon at this time, the bill having been read heretofore. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. Let the amendments be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Has the morning business been concluded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are being made. This is a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not press the consideration of that bill for the time being. After disposing of the morning business perhaps more Senators will be present. I understand that there are several Senators now absent who wish to be present when this matter is considered. I do not know about it myself, and I have no personal objection to its being considered at this time, but I think its consideration had better be deferred until after the routine business.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the amendments may be read, so that Senators may understand how it is proposed to amend the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the amendments being read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have the amendments just been reported this morning?

Mr. McMILLAN. They have just been reported.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendments be read and let the bill lie over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments be read.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is no further morning business, I wish the Senate to resume the consideration of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is further morning business to transact if we can get to it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the morning business proceed, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is objection made to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments be read. There is no objection, I think, to reading the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as section 1 of the bill the following:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a site for the Washington Public Library, at a cost of not to exceed $250,000, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia. In case the said Commissioners shall be unable to purchase a site as aforesaid, the said Commissioners shall, within ninety days from the date of the passage of this act, begin suit for the condemnation of the land required for such purpose; and said proceeding shall be prosecuted under and in accordance with the provisions of those sections of chapter 57 of the Compiled Statutes of the United States in force in the District of Columbia concerning the condemnation of lands in said District for school sites, in so far as the same may apply.

That payment of the sum or sums of money adjudged to be due and payable for lands taken under its provisions shall be made by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, upon the warrant of the said Commissioners, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; and a sufficient sum to pay such judgments and awards, not to exceed $250,000, is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether he regards this limitation of $250,000 as essential? It seems to me that it presents a very grave constitutional question. We can not condemn private property for public use without a provision for its compensation. It has been held that a provision that just compensation——

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear on this side.

Mr. HOAR. It has been held——

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that we shall have order before we proceed with business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will request order on the part of Senators.

Mr. HOAR. My question was to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whether he cares to retain in this amendment the limitation to a certain sum. It seems to me that it presents a very grave constitutional question. You can not constitutionally take private property for public uses without compensation. It has been held very frequently, as we all know, that it is a sufficient provision for compensation to provide for the payment from the public Treasury of a sum awarded by a judicial tribunal to adjust the matter. But to say before that tribunal has been called in that the man shall be compensated only a certain limited sum, even if the jury should hold that there was twice that sum due, it seems to me to make a very serious doubt upon the validity of the process under the Constitution.

I suppose it makes no practical difference in this case, because I suppose the chairman knows generally the nature of the property and there is no danger of its being found to be worth more; but I do not see how you can say that if you take my property for public use you shall pay me for it a sum not exceeding $10.

Mr. McMILLAN. The idea was——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Can not the Government withdraw its condemnation proceedings at any time?

Mr. HOAR. I doubt very much whether the Government can withdraw its condemnation proceedings. Certainly it ought not, after an individual has been put to the charge and the property condemned. It takes possession of it; it goes on to adjudge it, and it is not fair to the individual that it should back out then a year or two afterwards.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is to be debate upon this bill I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. HOAR. I presume the Senator from Michigan will consent to withdraw that particular limitation. Otherwise——

Mr. McMILLAN. I think there will be no objection to doing so.

Mr. HOAR. Just strike out the limitation of any fixed sum.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have a more serious objection against striking out the limitation than the Senator from Massachusetts has reason in favor of striking it out.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is not up for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question of constitutional law I do not think can arise in this case. It is simply a limitation upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that they shall not select and proceed to condemn any property that will be valued at over $250,000. It has been almost a universal rule in regard to the condemnation of property that we fix a limit beyond which it shall not go. We say here that it shall not cost over $250,000. Condemnation proceedings are commenced. They get a set of appraisers that put the property that we believe ought not to cost over $250,000 at $500,000. Then we simply abandon the proceedings; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. No; the Senator will pardon me. That would be true if the condemnation were not consummated until after the amount had been ascertained, if it were for a preliminary ascertainment, but in this case the provision is express that there shall be a condemnation and that then, after the condemnation, this ascertainment shall be made. That is the reason——

Mr. COCKRELL. But the amendment does not provide for the condemnation of any specific piece of ground. They select the ground and institute proceedings; and if those proceedings are not approved, then they select other ground.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it reads so, if the Senator will look at the proposed amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have always put in such a provision. It has gone into the appropriation bill twenty times.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. In fact there are instances where we limit the amount to be paid to $10, in order to make the persons who have the land which ought to be condemned donate it instead of insisting upon a big price. In a number of cases in the District of Columbia appropriation bill we limited the amount to be paid to $10.

Mr. McMILLAN. The object of this provision was to prevent the Commissioners from spending more than $250,000. They may spend as much less as they see fit, but the amount is not to exceed $250,000.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this will eventuate like it always has eventuated in preceding cases. We order the property to be condemned. Then the appraisers select a piece property, and under that appraisement put it at $300,000 or $400,000 instead of $250,000, and invariably they come to Congress and, either by a special act, but most generally through a general appropriation act, have the amount increased so as to meet the appraisement that has been made.

Waiving any constitutional argument in regard to the matter, I want to say to the chairman of the committee who reports this amendment that I am opposed to taking any other site except the Mount Vernon Square site. It is not right to abandon that site now and to make the people of this District pay $250,000 when there is almost general consent that the Mount Vernon Square site is the best that can be taken. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have not heard the reasons assigned why the Mount Vernon Square site should not be taken. I agree with the Senator from Missouri that the library building ought to be put upon the Mount Vernon Square site. It is large enough, and I know of no legal reason or business reason or common-sense reason for not putting the library building there. I wish to hear stated to the Senate the reason why we are to buy or provide for buying an unknown site somewhere, anywhere, and paying $250,000 for it instead of getting a site free.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the bill at this time, and it goes over.

STATE EXPENSES FOR VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Mr. WARREN. I am unanimously directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, to report it with amendments.

This is a bill which I think every Senator and every State is interested in. Indeed, the interest has been such that some eight or ten bills and resolutions on this subject have been introduced and sent to the committee. It is to make provision so that the Government can pay to the States, the governors of States, and others the amounts that are standing due and have been appropriated for, but can not be paid because of conditions which have been developed and technicalities and difficulties found in the administration of the law. The auditing and disbursing officers can not, under the law and under their oath and bond, audit and pay many of these accounts, which are admittedly just and long since due.

I therefore report the bill, and in view of the importance of its getting to the other side of the Capitol soon, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming reports from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, the bill indicated by him and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BATE. I ask what committee recommends it?

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to have the bill read, and if there is no discussion upon it, I shall not object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read subject to objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill will be read subject to objection?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the bill now being considered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is now being considered, subject to objection.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very important bill, and it relates to matters in every State of the Union. I have not had time to examine the bill. I should prefer that the bill be printed, with the amendments, and that it go over for a day.

Mr. CULLOM. If objection is made——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but as its details are important I think it would be better to have it printed, in order that Senators may have an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to make a suggestion. If it could go over and come up in the morning hour to-morrow, I think it would be well to have it go over. But I suggest that this measure has been carefully considered by the Department and by the committee, and with the appeals that have come from the different States I think Senators will appreciate my haste for consideration. It is my desire to get the bill to the other end of the Capitol and have it become a law without being compelled to offer it as a rider to some appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator from Wyoming, and I only desire for myself an opportunity to examine the provisions as they stand with the amendments.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that he has probably omitted an amendment as to the limitation for presentation.

Mr. ALLISON. The 1st of July, 1899, is the time named in the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. It ought to have been the 1st of January, 1900.

Mr. WARREN. It has been amended as the Senator from Alabama suggests.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. That point is covered by an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments have not yet been read. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. For the moment I object. I would be glad to have the amendments printed in the RECORD and the bill and amendments printed, so that we may see them, and then I shall be perfectly willing that it shall be taken up to-morrow morning, or even later to-day, or at any other time.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator who has charge of the bill would look at the phrase reimbursing the governors before it comes up again. I understand that phrase has been used sometimes in legislation. It seems to me a very singular way of speaking of reimbursing the States to say that the governors shall be reimbursed. If he should die, it would go to his executor.

Mr. PASCO. The governors have made the advances under the law.

Mr. WARREN. In many cases the governors have made these advances personally.

Mr. PASCO. They have been made by the governors under the existing law, and not by the States.

Mr. TELLER. They were not made by the States.

Mr. PASCO. The States could not do it, because the legislatures were not in session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the request to be that the bill be laid over until to-morrow morning and that the amendments offered be printed. Is there objection to that course? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARREN. And it is to come up in the regular course of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To-morrow morning. That is the understanding.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Military Affairs are as follows:

In section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "ninety-eight," to strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for expenses incurred after August 12, 1898. And;" and in line 5, before the word "That," to strike out "further."

In section 2, page 2, line 22, after the word "faith," to strike out "volunteer for service" and insert "present himself for enrollment."

Add the following proviso at the end of section 2:

"And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply also to individual volunteers who presented themselves in good faith for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States."

In section 3, page 3, line 7, after the word "afterwards," to strike out "be" and insert "have been."

In section (4) 6, page 3, line 12, after the word "before," to strike out "July" and insert "January;" in the same line, after the word "first," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "nineteen;" and in the same line, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and ninety-nine."

Insert the following two sections:

"SEC. 4. That the expenses incurred by the governors of States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed and paid to them, notwithstanding any unsettled accounts, claims, or indebtedness of the United States against their States, and without prejudice to such unsettled accounts: And further provided, That where an officer of the Army detailed as mustering officer for volunteers purchased equipment necessary for the comfort of the men in camp or rendezvous, and said equipment was subsequently taken into the United States service by said volunteers and no receipts given to such military officer, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the settlement of such accounts.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the just and proper account or claim of any railroad, transportation company, or person who has, at the request of the Quartermaster-General of the Army, or his agents, or at the request of any United States mustering officer or other officer authorized by the Secretary of War to enroll, muster, or mobilize volunteers for the war with Spain, for transportation of men or troops from place of enrollment to point of rendezvous, and also to pay such just and proper accounts as may be presented for transportation back from point of rendezvous to place of enrollment of men who volunteered in good faith and were rejected on account of disqualification as found by medical officers duly appointed by the War Department: Provided, That the amount allowed and paid for such transportation shall not be in excess of the rates charged for transporting troops of the United States under like circumstances.

"All claims under the provision of this act must be filed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, and must be supported by proper vouchers or other conclusive evidence of interest."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, be so amended that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and is hereby, authorized to allow, in the settlement of the claims of the governors of States and Territories for reimbursement under the provisions of the said act, expenses incurred after as well as before July 8, 1898: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for service of members of the National Guard or organized militia of any State or Territory who were not accepted into the Volunteer Army of the United States as of the same grade.

SEC. 2. That under the appropriation made by said act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to reimburse the governor of any State or Territory for reasonable expenses incurred by him in the actual transportation of the members of organized militia or National Guard of his State from the place of company, battalion, or regimental rendezvous to the State rendezvous or place designated for examination and acceptance of the members of such organization into the Volunteer Army of the United States, and the actual transportation from the State rendezvous to their respective company, battalion, or regimental rendezvous of such men as were rejected for lack of physical qualifications: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for the transportation of any man who did not in good faith present himself for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply also to individual volunteers who presented themselves in good faith for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States.

SEC. 3. That nothing in said act of July 8, 1898, shall be so construed as to prohibit the reimbursement of the governor of any State or Territory for reasonable expenses incurred in the subsistence of the members of any organization of the organized militia or National Guard of his State or Territory after having been called out by the governor on or after April 25, 1898: Provided, That such organization shall afterwards have been accepted into the Volunteer Army of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the expenses incurred by the governors of States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed and paid to them, notwithstanding any unsettled accounts, claims, or indebtedness of the United States against their States, and without prejudice to such unsettled accounts: And provided further, That where an officer of the Army, detailed as mustering officer for volunteers, purchased equipment necessary for the comfort of the men in camp or rendezvous, and said equipment was subsequently taken into the United States service by said volunteers and no receipts given to such military officer, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the settlement of such accounts.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the just and proper account or claim of any railroad, transportation company, or person who has at the request of the Quartermaster-General of the Army or his agents, or at the request of any United States mustering officer or other officer authorized by the Secretary of War to enroll, muster, or mobilize volunteers for the war with Spain, for transportation of men or troops from place of enrollment to point of rendezvous, and also to pay such just and proper accounts as may be presented for transportation back from point of rendezvous to place of enrollment of men who volunteered in good faith and were rejected on account of disqualification as found by medical officers duly appointed by the War Department: Provided, That the amount allowed and paid for such transportation shall not be in excess of the rates charged for transporting troops of the United States under like circumstances.

All claims under the provision of this act must be filed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, and must be supported by proper vouchers or other conclusive evidence of interest.

SEC. 6. That all claims for reimbursement under this act or the act of July 8, 1898, shall be presented in itemized form to the Treasury Department on or before January 1, 1900, or be forever barred.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills is next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I trust that I shall soon be able to get the bill up.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 5483) making an appropriation for the support of the W. T. Whitaker Orphan Home, in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MURPHY introduced a bill (S. 5484) granting a pension to John Daly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5485) to designate distinctively parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessments and taxation; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 5486) for the extension of Le Droit avenue NW.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 5487) to establish a Branch Home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Castle Pinckney, in Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, for the use of disabled officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army and Navy of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5488) for the relief of Thomas Sherman, of Culpeper County, Va., which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask be read at length and lie on the table for the time being.

The joint resolution (S. R. 243) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That whereas two-thirds of both Houses of Congress deem it expedient and necessary to amend section 3, Article I, of the Constitution; therefore it is hereby recommended that the following amendment be, and the same is hereby, proposed to the legislatures of the several States of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of such legislatures, shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States, namely: That section 3, Article I, be amended as follows:

Strike out of the third section of Article I the following words: "The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The Senators shall be chosen by the legislatures of the several States unless the people of any State, either through the legislature or by the constitution thereof, shall provide for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, and then, in such case, and during the existence of such statutory or constitutional provision, United States Senators shall be elected in such State at large by a direct vote of the people; a plurality shall elect, and the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table, subject to call. I desire to address the Senate at a later date upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the order? The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for preliminary surveys or examinations to be made of one or more reservoir sites in each arid and semiarid State, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. HARDWICK.

Mr. GEAR. I respectfully request that an order be made by the Senate allowing George W. Hardwick to withdraw from the files of the office of the Secretary of the Senate the discharge papers of George W. Hardwick, for whom a bill was introduced January 14, 1890, to remove the charge of desertion, and that a copy be made of said discharge and left in the files of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

FIRST SOUTH DAKOTA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate what pattern of guns, or small arms, have been issued to the members of the First South Dakota Volunteer Infantry, now at Manila; and if these guns are of the pattern known as Springfield rifles, he is directed to give the date of manufacture and the effective range of the guns; also, the kind of powder used by said regiment of volunteers.

DOCTRINE OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unhesitatingly approves and reaffirms the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal," and "that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and "that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness;" and be it further

Resolved, That said doctrine is not, in its application, to be confined to the people of the United States, but is universal and extends to all peoples, wherever found, having a distinct and well-organized society and territory of their own.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution lies over.

PERSONNEL OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to send immediately to the Senate a concise estimate of the total annual cost of the personnel of the officers of the Navy under House bill No. 10493 as reported with amendments to the Senate from the Committee on Naval Affairs on February 8, compared with the cost of such personnel under existing laws, excluding any additional force employed during the late war; and also a like estimate of the cost of 22,500 seamen and apprentices compared with the cost of the regular force of seamen and apprentices; and a further like estimate of the cost of the personnel, including the officers and men of the Marine Corps under said bill, compared with the cost of such personnel under existing laws, excluding any temporary increase during the late war.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK AT VICKSBURG.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] desires consent to call up a bill, and I make no objection.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 4382) to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg.

I wish to say that this measure has been memorialized in twelve different States of the Union, and that twenty-five States of the thirty-five then existing had troops participating in the action at Vicksburg. The bill is recommended by every encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic and every association of Confederate veterans, so far as I have heard. I presume that no objection will be made to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11217) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask unanimous consent that a day be fixed for the vote to be taken on Senate joint resolution No. 240, which was introduced by me. If there be no objection, I suggest that the vote be taken on Monday next immediately after the close of the routine morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that on next Monday after the routine morning business the vote may be taken on the joint resolution (S. R. 240) declaring the purpose of the United States toward the Philippine Islands. Is there objection?

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the request is that a vote shall be taken?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That a vote shall be taken.

Mr. MALLORY. And no debate allowed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair puts the request as made by the Senator from Louisiana, that the vote be taken on next Monday, immediately after the routine morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. MALLORY. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed on page 52, at line 23, and continued to the end of the clause making appropriations for the "Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati," from line 5 to line 15, on page 56.

Mr. FORAKER. Yesterday I gave notice of an amendment which I intended to offer and which I now propose to this bill. The amendment is to strike out the clause from line 5 to line 15, both inclusive, on page 56, being the provision relating to the "Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati," and to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

I want to say in support of the amendment that it increases the total amount of the appropriation for that office about $1,400 and distributes the appropriation so as to meet the requirements of the office better than the distribution for salaries as heretofore allowed.

Mr. CULLOM. Regularly, the Senator's amendment can not be considered under the rule until after the reading of the bill has been completed and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations disposed of. I understand, however, that the Senator desires to leave the city, and I shall on that account make no objection to the consideration of his amendment now.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator for waiving the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56 it is proposed to strike out the clause from line 5 to line 15, as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,000; bookkeeper, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,500; check clerk, and interest clerk, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,000 each; two night watchmen, at $720 each; messenger, $600; watchman, $120; in all, $18,760.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,250; bookkeeper, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,600; check clerk, $1,500; interest clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one day watchman, at $840, and one day watchman, at $720; one night watchman, at $600; one clerk and stenographer, at $720; in all, $20,230.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask if there is any proposed change by this amendment except to increase the salaries of these officers?

Mr. FORAKER. I did not understand the inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the Senator's amendment goes no further than to raise the salaries of these officers.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it increases the number of clerks by one at least.

Mr. FORAKER. It drops out one employee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be again read, so that we may see what the changes are.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I can state in a moment what the changes are.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment, if adopted, will increase the total appropriation for that office by the amount of $1,470. Seven hundred and twenty dollars of that amount is for a stenographer. That office has never been allowed a stenographer. Every other office of that character in the United States, I understand, is provided with a stenographer, and certainly one is very necessary there.

The other increases, amounting to a little over $700, are, first, an increase of $250 to the cashier. The cashier has a receiving teller to assist him, but no paying teller, as is usual in other assistant subtreasuries. His work has therefore been more than is required of cashiers in any other subtreasury, and yet he is paid less—being paid only $2,000 a year—than any other cashier in any other subtreasury in the United States. At New Orleans the cashier is paid $2,250 and is allowed the practical help of which I spoke. In most of the other subtreasuries—as, for instance, at Baltimore and San Francisco, where practically about the same amount of work is done—the subtreasurers are paid $2,250, $2,500, and $3,000, respectively, and are given this additional help to which I have referred.

Then, in addition to the increase of $250, there is an increase to the receiving teller of $100 and an increase to the check clerk of only a similar amount, I believe. I have not the memoranda before me, as I thought I had; but the increases are slight, and are asked for upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and upon the recommendations to that Department by the assistant treasurer, who is trying to organize his office in such a way as that he may properly correlate these assistants to each other, and give them only the compensation to which they are entitled.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say, before the Senator from Nebraska interrupts me, that the total amount allowed the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati for the conduct of the office is less than is allowed to any other assistant treasurer in the United States.

Mr. CAFFERY. What is the increased appropriation which the Senator asks?

Mr. FORAKER. Fourteen hundred and seventy dollars, and $720 of that is for a stenographer alone. The assistant treasurer now employs and pays out of his own pocket his stenographer, and has done so for a long time.

Mr. ALLEN. Are the hours of labor of the cashier lengthened in consequence of his not having a paying teller?

Mr. FORAKER. I think in that office they work from the time they commence in the morning until they get through with the day's business, no matter how late that may require them. They have no regular hour at which they quit without regard to whether their work is done or not.

The cashier is a very faithful man who has been there for a great many years, and whose services have been regarded by the Treasury Department as entitling him to more compensation than he has been heretofore allowed. He has been allowed only $2,000, and that is all he is getting now. He has no assistant paying teller, as other cashiers have, and gets $250 less than any other cashier gets in any other subtreasury.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not dispute the Senator's statement at all. I admit the statement is in accordance with the facts, as the Senator is in a position to know; but the question with me was, whether the circumstances are not such in that office as to make $2,000 a fair compensation for the entire labor performed?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I will say to the Senator, from all that I can learn about the subject, that the compensation is not adequate. The man who holds that office is a very superior man; the labors required of him are very arduous; they are exceedingly responsible. There is constantly on hand at that subtreasury some five or six or seven or eight millions of money. It requires a good class of ability to satisfactorily discharge the duties of such a position.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing, if there are any good things going around, that a man from Ohio shall have them. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska, but I only want them for those who are entitled to them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say a word, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, before I yield to his interruption.

The bill as reported by the committee provides, as the law heretofore has done, for a watchman at $120. That is the only watchman which the law has ever provided for there.

Mr. CULLOM. At $720.

Mr. FORAKER. No; it is $120.

Mr. CULLOM. In the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; $120 in the bill for a watchman. I ask to strike that out altogether, and I ask, instead of a messenger, that we may have a night watchman at a salary of $600.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that the bill already provides for two watchmen.

Mr. FORAKER. Two night watchmen? So it does.

Mr CULLOM. One day watchman and one night watchman, at $720 each.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator from Illinois is mistaken. I see the bill provides for two night watchmen, but that is a mistake, for the two night watchmen provided for have been used as day watchmen, and there ought to be a difference in salaries allowed. One of them goes on duty at 6 o'clock in the morning and remains until late in the afternoon, and then the other relieves him and remains on duty only until 10 o'clock at night.

Mr. CULLOM. I see I was mistaken. I was looking at the provision in the bill relating to the subtreasury at New Orleans.

Mr. FORAKER. From that time on the building is watched simply by the policeman who watches two or three blocks, acting as a sort of private policeman at night for a number of business places. I so provide in the amendment as that it will be properly arranged for one day watchman at $840, one day watchman at $720, and one night watchman at $600, and then strike out the provision of $120 for a watchman. I want to dispense with him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say that I am opposed to this amendment. There are a number of subtreasuries, one at Baltimore, one at Boston, one at Chicago, one at Cincinnati, one at New Orleans, one at New York, one at Philadelphia, one at St. Louis, and one at San Francisco. In all these offices, as they were presented to the Committees on Appropriations in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, there were applications and recommendations for an increase of the clerical force or of the employees, and for an increase of salaries. The Committee on Appropriations gave full and fair consideration to all the recommendations, estimates, proposals, and amendments which were offered, and the only changes recommended by the Senate committee were the addition of two clerks and one watchman, on page 58, at the subtreasury in New York. That was all the additional force we recommended. We made no other changes. We left the appropriations and provisions for the assistant treasuries at Baltimore, at Boston, at Chicago, at Cincinnati, at New Orleans, at Philadelphia, at St. Louis, and at San Francisco unchanged. Now, if you make a change at one of these subtreasuries, it will necessitate changes at other subtreasuries, because all will claim that they are entitled to the same compensation.

There are no fixed titles or designations to the employees in the subtreasuries, and therefore there can be no relative comparison of the salaries of these different officers. In one place such an officer is called a cashier, in another place chief clerk and cashier, in another place paying cashier and accounting cashier, and in another coin clerk. All these different designations are used. So it is impossible to fix the compensation of these employees by a grade or classification as is done in the executive branches here, where we have clerks at $1,000, clerks of class 1 at $1,200, clerks of class 2 at $1,400, clerks of class 3 at $1,600, and clerks of class 4 at $1,800. You can not make that designation as to these outside offices.

In addition to that, the Senator from Ohio asks for the appointment of a stenographer, which is the creation of a new office. I understood the Senator to say that he asked for that because all the other subtreasurers had stenographers. In that, by inadvertence, the distinguished Senator was mistaken, because there is no stenographer provided by law for the subtreasurer at New Orleans; there is none at Philadelphia—and that is a much larger city, as I understand, than is Cincinnati, and does a much greater amount of business—there is none at San Francisco, and there is none at the subtreasury in the city of St. Louis.

If the subtreasurer at Cincinnati is entitled to a stenographer because other subtreasurers have been given stenographers, I shall certainly insist upon the subtreasurer at St. Louis having one, because St. Louis is certainly equal in importance to Cincinnati. I do not think it would be wise or appropriate to adopt the Senator's amendment. I think, too, that Ohio ought to be satisfied with the distinguished honors that have been conferred upon her and with the numerous and multitudinous appointments which have been received by the good people of Cincinnati and the other parts of the State of Ohio in all branches of the public service, from copyists and messengers up to the highest office in the gift of the American people.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Missouri must allow me to say that that argument does not appeal to this Senator from Ohio.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the other Senator from Ohio must have more than ought to belong to any one Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator has concluded, I want to say a word in reply.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have concluded for the present.

Mr. FORAKER. When I made the statement I did a while ago, that I understood a stenographer was provided for each of these subtreasuries, I supposed that was true according to the text of the bill. Since I made that statement my attention has been called to the fact that there is not that provision as to each and every one of these subtreasuries, but my information is that clerks who are not named as stenographers are drawn upon, so that the subtreasurers are supplied with stenographers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Allow me a suggestion just there.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt but that in every branch of the service there are stenographers who are not designated as such, and we decline to so designate them, because when you call a man a stenographer he will not do anything else; but if you call him a clerk and he is a stenographer, you can put him on stenographic work, or clerical work, or anything you choose. That is the reason why we have not named these clerks in the other departments there as stenographers strictly, because if you do you get no other service from them at all.

Mr. FORAKER. The fact is, as I understand it and as I stated it a moment ago, that each subtreasurer is provided, in the way I now state and in the way in which the Senator from Missouri agrees with me, with a stenographer, but neither in that way nor in any other has the subtreasurer at Cincinnati ever been supplied with a stenographer. The only stenographer provided is paid for out of the pocket of the assistant treasurer himself. He appreciates the honor that has come to Ohio, but he does not want to pay for it at that rate.

So far as concerns St. Louis having a stenographer, I have not any objection to their having one if they have not one there. I think they ought to have one, and I will agree that the bill shall be amended, so far as I am concerned, to give St. Louis a stenographer, especially so named.

Now, while it is true that these employees of the various assistant treasurers are not so designated in the bill as that a comparison can in every respect be made of the one with the other, yet in certain respects they are sufficiently named, and certain facts do sufficiently appear to admit of comparison, which I think ought to be conclusive in favor of Cincinnati in this matter.

To begin with, we were not before the committee with this matter, as we should have been. That, however, is not the fault of the committee. So this subtreasury has had no hearing until now. It is not the fault of the committee that such hearing was not had. It was not my fault. I was so occupied with other matters that it was impossible for me to attend to it. I am bringing it up now only because I have had no hearing heretofore. I believe if we had been before the committee I could have pointed out that this assistant treasurer should be supplied now with what other subtreasurers were supplied with when they were present and we were not, so far as concerns a stenographer, so named.

Inasmuch as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has spoken of Baltimore and New Orleans, I will call attention to the fact that the cashier at Baltimore is given under that name as his compensation $2,500, and then he is supplied, as I am informed, with the help of which I spoke a while ago, both a receiving and a paying teller, although they are not so named here. At Chicago the cashier gets $2,500 and he has a paying teller who gets $1,800, and other help to correspond. I do not think it is fair to compare Chicago with Cincinnati, as the business at Chicago is very much larger than that which is done at Cincinnati. But I call attention to New Orleans. That office has a cashier, especially so named, who gets a salary of $2,250. More business is done in Cincinnati, I am informed, than is done at the assistant treasurer's office in New Orleans, and certainly the cashier at Cincinnati should receive as much. In addition to that, he has specifically provided for him a receiving and a paying teller at $2,000 each, making $6,250 for the cashier and his immediate help at that office.

Now, I call attention to the aggregates. The aggregate allowance at Baltimore for the whole office is $23,800, while by this bill the allowance at Cincinnati is but $18,760. The total allowance at New Orleans is $20,490, and so I might run on through the bill pointing out in that way what I stated a moment ago in a general way, that the total allowance to the subtreasury at Cincinnati for the conduct of that office will be less with these amendments which I have proposed than is allowed by the bill to each and every one of these other offices; and the allowance to various clerks as provided in the amendment will not be in excess, but in every respect, except only in one instance, will be less, if the amendment is adopted, than the allowances for similar clerks and employees at the other places. It is in view of these considerations and because the requirements of the office really demand it that I have proposed the amendment, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I merely desire to say a word, and to point out exactly what the amendment proposes as compared with the paragraph of the bill with reference to the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati. There is no change in the salary of the assistant treasurer; that is left as the bill has it. A cashier is provided for there already, although I think the Senator from Ohio intimated that they did not have one. There is a cashier provided for in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I said a cashier, but not a paying teller to help him.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh! One of the propositions of the amendment is to raise the salary of the cashier from $2,000 to $2,250. The bookkeeper provided for in the bill is allowed to stand. The bill provides that the receiving teller shall have a salary of $1,500. The amendment proposes to increase that salary to $1,600. The check clerk and interest clerk get $1,200 each. As to the check clerk the salary is to be increased from $1,200 to $1,500, and the interest clerk's salary is to be increased from $1,200 to $1,400. Then there are provided two clerks——

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill provides a check clerk and an interest clerk at $1,200 each.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; the amendment proposes that the check clerk shall have $1,500 and the interest clerk $1,400.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULLOM. The two clerks at $1,200 each stand as they are in the bill. Then it is provided by the amendment that there shall be one clerk and stenographer at $720. While that is the provision of the amendment, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio and the Senate to the fact that the estimate is for only $500 for that clerk. Then it is provided in the amendment that there shall be one day watchman at $840 and another day watchman at $720. The bill, as it stands, provides for two night watchmen at $720 each. The amendment proposes that the messenger provided for in the bill shall be dropped out.

Mr. FORAKER. That he shall be called a night watchman at $600.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to state that a night watchman was to take the place of the messenger, so that it altogether foots up $1,470 increase in the paragraph with reference to the subtreasury at Cincinnati over the amount allowed by the bill as it stands.

Mr. President, I merely desired to call the attention of the Senate to the exact changes, and to say that the committee have tried to avoid the increase of salaries where it did not seem to be absolutely necessary to do so. I am sorry that the Senator from Ohio at this time in the consideration of the bill should come forward with a number of increases. I think we ought not to consent to their being incorporated in the bill. So far as I am personally concerned, I would have no objection to a clerk and stenographer at the allowance provided by the estimate.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Illinois certainly knows the fact that you can not for $500 a year get a clerk and stenographer who is well enough qualified to do work in an office of that character in a city like Cincinnati.

Mr. COCKRELL. You can get one for $600.

Mr. FORAKER. You can not for $600. A good stenographer in Cincinnati gets $15 or $20 a week. Nobody gets any less than that, and it runs up to a hundred dollars a month. It is very difficult to get an accomplished and capable stenographer and clerk for less than $1,200; certainly not for less than $1,000.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Ohio would be satisfied with the provision for the extra clerk and stenographer at $720, I would consent to it, so far as I am concerned; but I think the other amendments ought not to be adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not drive me to an alternative. I should like to have all these amendments agreed to. They have not been made merely for the sake of increasing salaries. They have been made for the purpose of doing justice to employees. Some of these men have been there for twenty years, working faithfully all that time. They are accomplished and are absolutely necessary. It would be difficult to supply their places. I suppose they will now stay there as long as they live, as they have remained this long, but I feel that it is only an act of justice to them. The assistant treasurer there, who is well qualified to judge of the value of the services, feels that they ought to have the compensation indicated by the amendment; and the assistant treasurer ought to organize the office, and ought to be allowed to organize the office, for the sake of efficiency, as the amendment proposes. I hope the Senate will accept the whole amendment. It makes a difference of only $700. Certainly in the conduct of an office involving so many million dollars, rendering such a public service, it is not an unreasonable request, particularly in view of the fact that we will then still be below any other subtreasury in the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose that is true as to the aggregate, but while I am not familiar with the exact amount of business done at Cincinnati, I am inclined to think it is one of the smaller offices of the country.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not myself know exactly, except that I have been told that it compares about equally with Baltimore; probably with New Orleans.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that I can say any more with reference to the matter. The amendment includes a large number of different items, and I should think we ought to have a vote upon each separate item, so that if any one of them is voted in by the Senate it will not include all the others. For instance, take the increase of the salary of the cashier. I should oppose that as one of the increases that ought not to be allowed at this time.

Mr. FORAKER. I think, if the Senator from Illinois insists upon his objection, that I will accept his offer, if it is still open, and be content.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that the considerations which he has urged in behalf of the increase of the salaries of these employees have been urged upon the committee from almost every branch of the service. Here are men who have served eight, ten, fifteen, or twenty years faithfully and efficiently. They are still there, and they think that because of their long service their salaries should now be increased. We have to resist appeals of that class coming from every branch of the service every year on every appropriation bill without exception. It is not pleasant for us to resist them.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the Senator from Ohio is willing, if he can be allowed a clerk and stenographer, to withdraw the other parts of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that. Now that the Senator from Ohio has withdrawn the other parts of the amendment, I was going to say when I got up that if the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati has no clerk who can perform the duties of a stenographer, I am willing that he shall have one, but I do not want to give it as a stenographer. I should say clerk and stenographer.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. Those are the proper words.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then he can do any duty.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the phraseology of the amendment as now proposed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want it to go in in that way, because we have found by experience that it is not wise to give just one title to a man where that employment and kind of work may not consume all his time, because he would claim that he has no right to do the work of other clerks, that he is not a clerk.

I wish to remind the Senator from Illinois that at no distant day, if I find that the office at St. Louis has not a clerk who can perform the duties of a stenographer, I shall want the same addition made there.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment which the Senator from Ohio proposes I desire to have come in just before the words "night watchman," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11, page 56, it is proposed to insert:

One clerk and stenographer, at $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The total, with that amendment adopted, will amount to $19,480.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, page 56, it is proposed to strike out "$18,760" and insert "$19,480."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause "For office of assistant treasurer at New York," on page 58, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "and two clerks;" in line 20, to increase the number of watchmen at $720 each from seven to eight; and in line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the office of the assistant treasurer at New York from $203,160 to $205,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 12, to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to supply the mint at Carson with silver bullion for conversion into standard silver dollars and all smaller denominations of silver.

If in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the mint at Carson, Nev., be not operated as a coinage mint during the whole or any part of the fiscal year 1900, the foregoing appropriations for said mint shall only be available during the fiscal year 1900, or such part of said year as the said mint is not operated for coinage purposes, for maintaining the same as an assay office, and as follows:

For assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; assistant assayer and one clerk, at $1,500 each; for wages of workmen and watchmen, $7,500; for incidental and contingent expenses, $3,000; in all, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, to increase the salary of assayer in charge of mint at Denver, Colo., from $2,500 to $3,000; in line 11, after the word "each," to insert "one clerk, $1,200;" and in line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the mint at Denver, Colo., from $12,350 to $14,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 14, to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen at the mint Denver, Colo., from $20,000 to $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 16, to increase the appropriation for incidental and contingent expenses of the mint at Denver, Colo., from $5,000 to $6,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 10, page 63.

Mr. MCENERY. I offer an amendment, which I desire to have read.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, page 62, it is proposed to strike out the words "three thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "four thousand five hundred dollars;" so as to read:

Mint at New Orleans, La.:
For superintendent, $4,500.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. That salary is $3,500.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment simply for the reason that recently the business of the mint at New Orleans has been very largely increased, and it will be further increased because of the requirements for coinage for Cuba and Porto Rico. Besides that, I understand the original appropriation was made when the superintendent of the mint had a residence in the mint. Since then the increase of the business of the mint has been so great that it has been necessary to give up the residence rooms for the purpose of the business of the mint. The output of the mint has increased over a million dollars a year. The loss of residence, the increase of business, the increase of responsibility, I think, justify this increase, so as to make the salary equal to that of the superintendent of the assay office in New York and the salary of the superintendent of the mint in Philadelphia and at San Francisco, in each of which cases it is $4,500 a year.

Mr. CULLOM. I raise the point of order that the increase is not estimated for. The officer is getting just what is estimated for, and therefore the amendment is not in order. It would change the existing law. It is not recommended by anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Illinois whether any of the other alternatives of the rule has been complied with?

Mr. CULLOM. Nothing has been heard of it until just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Senator from Louisiana desires to be heard, the Chair will be forced to sustain the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Book of Estimates shows whether there is any estimate.

Mr. McENERY. I do not propose to press the amendment or to call for a vote on it unless it meets with the judgment of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I have here the Book of Estimates, showing that the officer is getting just what the estimate provides for, and there has been no preliminary action taken with a view of increasing his salary.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 14, under the subhead "Mint at New Orleans, La.," to increase the appropriation for incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage of operative officers and loss on sale of sweeps, from $8,000 to $20,000.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 13, after the word "including," I move to insert the word "repairs;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including repairs, wastage of operative officers, and loss on sale of sweeps, $20,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the Senator insert "and repairs" after the word "sweeps" in line 14; so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage of operative officers and loss on sale of sweeps and repairs, $20,000.

Mr. CULLOM. That will do. It will come in there better.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "Assay office at Seattle, Wash.," on page 67, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "clerk, $1,200;" and in line 14 to increase the total appropriation for assay office at Seattle, Wash., from $4,000 to $5,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 17, to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen, rent, and contingent expenses at the assay office at Seattle, Wash., from $16,000 to $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Government in the Territories," on page 67, line 22, to increase the number of commissioners for the Territory of Alaska from nine to ten; in the same line, after the word "Kadiak," to insert "and one of whom shall reside in Forty-Mile mining district;" and on page 68, line 2, to increase the total of the appropriation for officers for the Territory of Alaska from $30,000 to $31,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to line 11 on page 68, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Territory of Arizona: For governor, $2,600; chief justice and three associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, $1,800; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all, $16,900.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say that, in my judgment, these appropriations for interpreters ought not to be made. We have had possession of Arizona and New Mexico ever since 1847, I may say. That is fifty-one years. If the inhabitants of those Territories have not yet learned to speak the English language, it is time that they were made to do so. I thought we had put an end to that business some years ago when we prohibited the publication of the laws and proceedings of the Territorial assembly in the Spanish language, requiring them to be published in the English language. Yet I see that we still have these interpreters.

In a Territory that has been possessed by the United States as long as New Mexico and Arizona have been we ought not to have any occasion for the use of an interpreter. It is in the bill now. My attention was not directed to it at the time when the bill was considered in the committee. I glanced over it and I did not notice those words. I intended before the consideration of the bill by the Senate to have a provision made that no such thing should be done, but it is in the bill now, and I want to give notice that hereafter I shall oppose an appropriation for any such purpose. They are American citizens, practically, born upon American soil, under the American flag, and owing allegiance to it. Our national language is the English language, and yet we have got to employ somebody to interpret what they say. I think it is time to stop it.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator; but I remember that a few years ago, when we were in some controversy over the admission of New Mexico, a judge in that Territory told me that no case could be tried in the Territory without an interpreter; that witnesses and other people connected with the court and the trial could not speak anything but Spanish.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt that that is true, and that condition of affairs will remain just as long as we permit them to go on in the way they have been going.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is true.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the reason why I want to put a stop to it, so that if they are not able to speak the English language and be understood, they shall have no right to go into the courts there and testify in matters.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose if a man who can not speak the English language has a case in court he ought to have a chance of trying it somehow.

Mr. COCKRELL. He ought to learn the English language.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator. The time surely will come very soon when we can dispense with this class of men.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 69, line 15, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Territory of Oklahoma, etc., from $500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," in the clause for "Office of the Secretary," on page 70, line 5, to increase the number of clerks of class 4 from four to five; and in line 14 to increase the total appropriation for the Office of the Secretary from $99,050 to $100,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 7, after the word "on," to strike out "and after the passage of this act" and insert "or before July 1, 1899;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For the employment during the nine months beginning July 1, 1899, of such additional temporary force of clerks, messengers, laborers, and other assistants as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the needs of the service may demand, $450,000. Persons in the classified service of the Government shall not be eligible to appointment under this appropriation, or to be transferred from any position in the classified service to positions paid hereunder; and any appointments or employments heretofore so made and payable from appropriations of this character for additional employees rendered necessary because of increased work incident to the war with Spain shall be vacated on or before July 1, 1899.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill why this amendment was made?

Mr. CULLOM. That change in the bill was made by the committee on the ground that if the bill was left to stand just as the House passed it all these clerks would be taken out of the service at once. They can not be placed elsewhere in the service without giving the Department a little time within which to carry out what evidently ought to be done. These men were selected and put in this temporary employment because of their special fitness, and it would hardly be fair that they should be dropped out of the service because they had been taken out of the regular line and put over the new men who came into the Department to perform extraordinary work. So the committee thought that we ought to give from the time of the passage of this act to the 1st of July to enable the Department to place them where they ought to be.

Mr. GORMAN. If I understand the operation of the order of the War Department under the special act of last year, they have taken clerks already in the classified service, say at a compensation of $1,200, and assigned them to other duties under this temporary employment at $1,500, $1,800, or $2,000, whatever it may be, I have not the exact figures, but they were transferred at an increased salary.

All that the provision as it comes from the House does, I understand, is to stop that practice, which was never contemplated, to say the least of it, and simply to restore the men who have been so temporarily appointed back to their positions at the salary provided for by law.

It occurs to me that there is no injustice in having the act go into operation immediately after the passage of this act, because I think it is concurred in by everybody that the provision that the Secretary of War made was rather an extraordinary one and was never contemplated by either House of Congress when the lump sum was placed in his hands for the employment of temporary clerks. It was a way of increasing salaries that I think never was contemplated.

I have no earthly objection in any case to making a fair provision for men who are competent. I know that in that Department, as in all the others, the men who have grown up in the service, who understand all the details of the Department, are very poorly paid. But I do believe that the compensation ought to be fixed in all these cases, and it was certainly outside of the idea we had in view when we made a lump appropriation to employ extra men that thereby there should be a large increase of salaries in the permanent force of the Department.

I think we ought to adhere to the House provision. It was considered by the committee, if I may say so here, and by a House that is entirely friendly to the Department and with no disposition to hamper it in any way. Very properly, in my judgment, the House made a rule in this case which has been the law in all other cases.

The war with Spain is over; it is past; and I hope not only in this case but in some others we may get back to a reasonable and fair administration of the Government. In the legislation of the last session, which I intend to call attention to later on, we passed acts authorizing, for instance, the promotion of a lieutenant in the Army so as to make him a colonel so long as he was assigned to a division of the War Department, and the provision of the law is that their pay as colonels—the pay of a colonel given to a lieutenant—shall last one year after the declaration of peace. So with these civilians. It was done in a hurry. It was done under circumstances where it could not be combated at the time. But now that has passed in so far as the war with Spain is concerned. We may have other wars, and probably we have other wars on hand, but with Spain, at all events, that condition has ceased.

I hope we will now come back to this provision, which I am very glad the House of Representatives have inserted, and reduce the compensation of these men, reducing it to that provided for by law, and not permit $100,000, as we are doing in this case, or $450,000 to be added in this way for favorites in the Department. I think it is demoralizing the service. It is creating a favoritism there which runs all through the Department and gives serious trouble.

I therefore trust that the Senator in charge of the bill will permit this provision to stand just as it came to us from the House of Representatives and let the law go into operation immediately upon the passage of this act.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that we continue the consideration of the bill now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. 4790) for the relief of Homer D. McGraw, Lee County, Ala.;

A bill (H. R. 8306) for the relief of Z. C. Church;

A bill (H. R. 11785) for relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to amend section 25 of the act passed June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes."

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 10969) for the erection of a public building in the city of Blair, Nebr.; and

A bill (H. R. 11728) to remove the fire limit from the post-office at Bridgeport, Conn.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 11685) granting the right of way through certain lands in the former Nez Perces Reservation, in the State of Idaho; and

A bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. 1800) to reimburse George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., for money paid out by him as said postmaster was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN FLORIDA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4690) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida; which was, in line 9, after the word "leave," to insert "and to remain away from."

Mr. PASCO. This bill is a very important one to some people in my State. The amendment made to the bill in the House of Representatives is not an important one. It will be entirely harmless. I move that it be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALTOONA, PA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1273) for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor; which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "cause to be erected thereon, a" and insert "to contract for the erection and completion of a;" on page 2, line 22, to strike out all after the word "alleys" down to and including the word "therein," in line 29; and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that a bill which was passed by the Senate and amended by the House of Representatives?

Mr. PENROSE. It is a bill which has been passed by the Senate and has been amended in the other House, as I understand, in a technical and verbal manner only.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments be again stated, so that we may understand the matter.

Mr. PENROSE. I think they are merely verbal and technical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the House of Representatives will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, before the word "suitable," the House of Representatives struck out the words "cause to be erected thereon, a" and inserted "to contract for the erection and completion of a;" and on page 2, line 22, after the word "alleys," the House of Representatives struck out:

And that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the said State and the service of civil process therein

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase by private sale or secure by condemnation a site for, and to contract for the erection and completion of a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Altoona, in the county of Blair and State of Pennsylvania. The plans, specifications, and full estimate for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building, complete, the sum of $125,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will be sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited, after the site shall have been purchased or condemned and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the last part stricken out in the proviso?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me we have inserted that provision in every such bill that we have ever passed. I ask that the bill may be printed with the amendments of the House of Representatives, and that it lie upon the table, so that it can be called up again. I want to examine it. That seems to me a very strange amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I am perfectly willing that that course may be pursued. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that my colleague [Mr. QUAY] is familiar with the amendments and that I only made the motion in his absence.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill and amendments be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill and amendments will lie upon the table and be ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 290) granting a pension to Charlotte Poe;

An act (S. 304) granting a pension to Henry Farmer;

An act (S. 383) granting an increase of pension to William W. Tumblin, of Bradford County, Fla.;

An act (S. 717) granting an increase of pension to Eva W. Brannan;

An act (S. 943) granting a pension to Jane B. Johnston;

An act (S. 1183) granting a pension to John Green;

An act (S. 4571) to extend Rhode Island avenue; and
An act (S. 4700) to receive arrearages of taxes due the District of Columbia to July 1, 1897, at 6 per cent per annum, in lieu of penalties and costs.

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL STATION IN NARRAGANSETT BAY.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], who is engaged in the Committee on Commerce during the session, is anxious to have a bill passed, and I yield to him.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is a bill of about five or six lines.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is the bill (H. R. 26) for the establishment of a light and fog-signal station on or near Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, and contains only a few lines. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to establish on or near Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, a light and fog-signal station, to take the place of the light vessel now there, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. Now let the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, on page 71, line 7, to strike out the words "and after the passage of this act" and to insert "or before July 1, 1899."

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, these clerks were detailed by the Secretary for this particular work because of their qualifications for the work and because some experienced clerks were needed in order to carry on the work being done by new men and persons put into the service who were not familiar with the public service at all. They are in the classified service, and unless the Department can have a little time after the law takes effect to place them again it will be doing a great injustice, as the committee thought, to those men. While I am just as anxious as the Senator from Maryland to close up the service of men when they are not needed, if there are any such men in the service, he will agree with me that it would be very unfair and unfortunate if these men should now be discharged before they could be taken care of in their old places in some way or other.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator misunderstands me. I have no disposition whatever to curtail the number of clerks that are absolutely necessary to close up the work incident to the war or to discharge any one of them. The suggestion that I made is not to discharge a single employee. It only prohibits, as the House has sent it to us, the payment of extra compensation to gentlemen who are already in the service of the Government under the classified service and who have fixed salaries. It merely provides that after the passage of this act they shall not receive more salary than that which the law provides. That is all. Not a single man is to be disturbed by the bill as it comes from the House. It is only a question whether we shall permit that extraordinary thing to continue—the increasing of the salaries of permanent employees out of a lump appropriation for a temporary purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that we would be doing an injustice if we should let the provision stand as it passed the House, and I hope that the words "or before July 1, 1899," will be retained.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. Does this refer to what is known as the roll established by the Secretary of the Treasury for old men?

Mr. CULLOM. No; it has no relation to that at all.

Mr. SEWELL. What does it refer to?

Mr. CULLOM. The first part of the paragraph under consideration, found on page 70 of the bill, is as follows:

> For the employment during the nine months beginning July 1, 1899, of such additional temporary force of clerks, messengers, laborers, and other assistants as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the needs of the service may demand, $450,000.

In order to make that additional force effective, which was composed of new men, men inexperienced in public affairs or in that kind of work, the Secretary detailed from the classified service a number of experienced clerks to take charge of the force and carry it on for the time being. Now the time has come when we want to get rid of them, and unless the Secretary can have a little time after the passage of this act, say until the 1st of July next, to replace those classified clerks, it would be very much to their detriment.

Mr. SEWELL. It was absolutely necessary, in order to instruct the additional force, to have these men detailed.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. SEWELL. And they ought to be restored to their former positions.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the last session of this Congress, at the beginning of hostilities, knowing that the clerical and other work in some of the Departments would be largely increased thereby, we provided for the employment of a temporary force in the Departments. That was intended as a force additional to the regularly employed clerks who were in the classified service, with salaries from $900 a year up to $1,800.

When this law was enacted and the Departments began to select the employees, a number of clerks with salaries, say, at $1,000 or $1,200 or $1,400 were anxious to go into this temporary service at a higher rate, in a class above, which was practically equivalent to a promotion. I understand that they were advised that they would have to take all the risks as to being placed back in their original positions. I am not certain, but my recollection is that the vacancies made by their being taken out were filled by promotions.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. And a clerk of the next lower grade was appointed, as a matter of course, under the civil-service law. The effect of the provision as it was passed by the House of Representatives would be to discharge from this temporary roll those who had gone into the temporary service in that way; perhaps it would not discharge them, but it would preclude the possibility of their being transferred back to their old positions. I have no idea that either House of Congress anticipated this method of administering that law; certainly the House of Representatives did not, or they would not have made the language so emphatic in this provision.

The only excuse that can be given is that here were quite a number of temporary employees, persons who had not been in the service, some of whom, at least, were doubtless not familiar with the business they had to transact. This was a new force; it was not organized, and the Departments thought it would be wise, as we have been advised, to let some of the more experienced clerks, who were familiar with the business, be placed in connection with the new clerks to assist them and show them how the work should be done. That is the only excuse, and under some circumstances I am not certain but that the action would be justifiable.

It seems to me that the new clerks ought to have had some experienced clerks associated with them. I do not know how the Departments disposed of these clerks. I do not know whether they were put under experienced chiefs of divisions having charge of this business. If that was done, then there was no necessity for the detail of any clerks. If, however, they were kept as a separate force and were not made a part and parcel of the existing divisions, so that they would come under the jurisdiction of the old chiefs, it was best to have some one having experience placed in charge of them; and we think that probably under the circumstances the Departments were at least justifiable, and that it might be well to extend the time until July 1, so that if vacancies occur the clerks who have been transferred to the temporary roll, or who have accepted appointments on the temporary roll—because there was no civil-service examination—who had resigned their places in the regular service, might have an opportunity of being reinstated under the law which authorizes the reinstatement of anyone who has resigned within one year after the resignation. Therefore this time was given. We thought it was a matter of clemency and of leniency to let it be done in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed with the clause making appropriations for the "Record and Pension Office," at line 9, on page 71.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for the "Office of the Adjutant-General," on page 72, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "clerk to the Adjutant-General, $1,800;" and in line 18 to increase the total appropriation for Office of the Adjutant-General from $159,280 to $161,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 25, on page 75.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill whether the reports referred to here to be made by the engineers have heretofore been made? The bill provides:

That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, shall not exceed $72,000; and that the Secretary of War shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed and the amount paid to each.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand such reports have heretofore been made. They are made annually.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not aware that there were any reports of that kind on file in the document room.

Mr. ALLISON. They are required each year. I understand they are found in the report of the Chief of Engineers. If the Senator will turn to the Book of Estimates, he will find the reports on page 363.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to suggest an amendment to this paragraph, to come after the words "number of persons so employed"——

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the committee amendments are being now considered, and that his amendment, under the agreement, is not in order.

Mr. ALLEN. That may be true.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not in order at this time; but later on the Senator will have an opportunity to offer it.

Mr. ALLEN. It may be true that the amendment is not strictly in order; but it is a mere verbal amendment, and I thought possibly the Senator might be willing to accept it. The amendment is to the effect that I want the character of the services of these persons reported as well as their salaries. Here we authorize the employment of a lot of persons for clerical purposes, whose duties are not specified by this bill, and necessarily must be specified to some extent by the appointing power. The character of their respective offices is not known; the services they are to perform are unknown; and the Secretary of War is not required to even report the character of the services performed by these men. A very essential thing for the country to know and for Congress to know, in my judgment, is what services these persons have rendered the Government, and then we could judge at another time whether their services could be properly dispensed with or not.

Mr. President, I desire to enter my protest, feeble as it is and necessarily must be, against any provision in a bill authorizing the employment indiscriminately of a great number of persons without it being made known before the bill is passed that their services are or will be necessary. We are in the habit of passing bills here authorizing some head of a Department to employ an army of clerks, to create subordinate offices without number, and to fix their compensation without the slightest information as to the duties to be performed or whether those officers and employees are necessary to conduct the public business or not. We have no right to complain under such circumstances of irregularities in the Departments.

I know of no reason, Mr. President, why this great Government of ours should not be run like a great machine. I do not mean a political machine, but a piece of mechanism, where every portion has a peculiar function to perform, which is necessary to the exercise of the entire power of the Government. I know of no reason, Mr. President, and I shall die without knowing any reason, why a vast army and horde of unnecessary employees are constantly pensioned upon this Government.

If any man in this country, I care not how wealthy he may be, would conduct his private business as the Appropriations Committees of the respective Houses of Congress conduct the business of the United States, he would be a hopeless bankrupt inside of twenty-four months, yet because the country is large, and because the great masses of our countrymen can not occupy the galleries from day to day, as the chronic habitues do, and witness the transaction of the public business; because they are isolated to a great extent and must depend largely upon the press for their information, which is always imperfect, it seems to be taken for granted that their money can be spent like the pouring out of the waters of a river, not for the benefit of the country, but for the benefit of individuals and particular interests.

I do not know how long this thing will continue. It certainly will continue until the people rise in their might and in their just indignation and overturn this whole system and turn out of power every man, high or low, who gives aid or comfort to this method of transacting the business of our country.

Mr. President, one of the weak features of a government like this is continuing in authority men so long that they absolutely forget, if they ever knew, that they are a part and parcel of the great struggling masses of their country. They become isolated in feeling and in fact. They have no sympathy with the masses of their kind; or, if they have any, it is a kind of sickly, maudlin, sentimental sympathy; it is not effectual.

That is one of the blots upon the institutions of this country as respects our Federal judiciary. We appoint men to the Supreme Court of the United States and to the subordinate judicial positions throughout the United States who at the time possibly have some slight knowledge of the wants and wishes of the masses of their countrymen, and especially in the States and communities where they reside; but, sir, they are there for life unless you can find a House of Representatives that will prefer articles of impeachment against them and a Senate that will expel them from their positions. They are secure in their salaries; secure from any accountability to the people whose rights they pass upon.

It is but a short time until their recollections of their early surroundings fade out like a transformation scene, and immediately they become sleek and give evidences of waxing fat and growing great, and they can not deal with anybody or associate with anybody unless he be a great railroad magnate, or a bank president, or a stock broker, or some other kind of money gambler. The result is, when the ordinary citizen, 2,000 miles from the scene where one of these courts is held, walks upon the two-dollar-and-a-half carpet which covers the court room, he goes crouching and cringing as a criminal would in the presence of a great dictator, instead of walking with his head erect like an American citizen in a court where he expected justice to be given him.

Mr. President, it may be somewhat divergent from the subject-matter or the text of these remarks, but I will say that the only tribunal which to-day stands between the masses of the people of this country and ruin is the State judiciary; and the State judiciary will do itself honor when it resists with every power in its hands the encroachments of a ruthless Federal judiciary.

Here we have the delightful spectacle of a case brought into a State court, with limitless jurisdiction, being changed to a Federal court, before it ever comes to issue, before there is a thing to be tried, by the order of some obscure fellow who enjoys a pull and gets himself onto the circuit or district bench of the United States, not on account of his great wisdom as a lawyer, but because he is the dependent of some man in power.

I have no desire, Mr. President, to refer to the present condition in the Senate—that would now be improper—but the Senate of the United States has much blame resting upon its shoulders concerning the appointment of the Federal judiciary of this country. We have the power to say "no." The man who comes into this presence to be confirmed as a judge should be a judge by nature as well as a judge by education, and he should, above all things, be a gentleman, which is necessary in every walk of life. Yet, Mr. President, since I have served here I will say that dozens of men have been confirmed upon party grounds who enjoyed no other qualification for a judicial position than that they were the political dependents and favorites of some man or some men in power, who were wholly as unqualified, from a judicial standpoint or from the standpoint of judicial temper, as a Five Points pettifogger.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not in charge of the bill; but the understanding was when the bill was first taken up that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations should be first considered. The Senator from Nebraska will have ample opportunity, however, to offer his amendment later.

Mr. ALLEN. Every rule, Mr. President, has its exceptions, and I did not know but the Senator would be willing to make an exception as to this mere verbal amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think if we make one exception, we shall be obliged to make others. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is in charge of the bill, and I felt as though I would not like to interfere with the rule which has been adopted.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the rule was interfered with a few moments ago.

Mr. CULLOM. I yielded for special reasons. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] was going to leave the city, and so would not have an opportunity to offer his amendment later.

Mr. ALLEN. I have never found any of these special reasons applied to me in any case, at least thus far, and I do not expect them to apply now.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will please state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is an amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the bill, which has not yet been stated.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska is still proceeding with his remarks?

Mr. ALLEN. I had reached a point where I thought I would yield the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I made the inquiry because I did not wish to interfere with the Senator's remarks. Other Senators have spoken, and I want to know whether the Senator from Nebraska has concluded. When a proper time arrives it will be my duty to move an executive session.

Mr. ALLEN. I should be perfectly willing to yield now to the Senator from Massachusetts for that purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make a remark before the motion is put?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not going to resist the motion of the Senator at a proper time at least, but I want to say that I am very anxious that the pending bill shall be concluded to-morrow, as I shall be compelled to be away the first part of the following week.

Mr. ALLEN. I think this bill ought to be thoroughly discussed before it is passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not opposing a thorough discussion of it.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a very important bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I know it is.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let there be an agreement that it shall be concluded before adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. All I desire—I would not ask that but for the fact that I am going away, to be gone two or three days——

Mr. ALLEN. I would not consent to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire. There are two or three provisions of the bill that ought to be ventilated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska agree that the bill shall be concluded before we adjourn to-morrow?

Mr. ALLEN. I think not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish the Senator would do that.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Nebraska declines to consent, I give notice that I will endeavor to call up the bill very early after the meeting of the Senate to-morrow, in the hope that we may be able to get through with it during the day.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Illinois insist on finishing the bill to-morrow?

Mr. CULLOM. I shall, unless it is perfectly obvious that it can not be done without keeping us here too late.

Mr. CHANDLER. It can be done. A majority of the Senators will stay here to finish the bill to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not wish to put myself in antagonism to the wishes of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, I feel that that would hardly be proper courtesy. But there is morning business from to-day which will come up to-morrow, and if necessary I think the full two hours should be taken to consider it. The Government is not suffering by the failure to pass the pending bill. It will be passed before Congress adjourns.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are a great many other bills to be passed before Congress adjourns.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not doubt, so far as I am concerned, that every appropriation bill will be passed before Congress adjourns.

Mr. CULLOM. I am satisfied that when to-morrow comes the Senator from Nebraska will not interpose to the extent——

Mr. ALLEN. I shall not interpose any captious objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sure the only thing the Senator from Nebraska desires is ample opportunity to debate the bill; and I hope that will be given.

Mr. ALLEN. That is all I desire.

PACIFIC CABLE SYSTEM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As a consequence of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain and its expected ratification by the Spanish Government, the United States will come into possession of the Philippine Islands on the farther shores of the Pacific. The Hawaiian Islands and Guam becoming United States territory and forming convenient stopping places on the way across the sea, the necessity for speedy cable communication between the United States and all these Pacific islands has become imperative. Such communication should be established in such a way as to be wholly under the control of the United States, whether in time of peace or of war. At present the Philippines can be reached only by cables which pass through many foreign countries, and the Hawaiian Islands and Guam can only be communicated with by steamers, involving delays in each instance of at least a week. The present condition should not be allowed to continue for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.

So long ago as 1865 reference was made in an Executive message to Congress to the necessity for cable communication between the United States and Hawaii. This necessity has greatly increased since then. The question has been discussed in the Fifty-second, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses, in each of which some effort has been made looking toward laying a cable, at least as far as the Hawaiian Islands. The time has now arrived when a cable in the Pacific must extend at least as far as Manila, touching at the Hawaiian Islands and Guam on the way. Two methods of establishing this cable communication at once suggest themselves. First, construction and maintenance of such a cable by and at the expense of the United States Government, and second, construction and maintenance of such a cable by a private United States corporation under such safeguards as Congress shall impose.

I do not make any recommendations to Congress as to which of these methods would be the more desirable. A cable of the length of that proposed requires so much time for construction and laying that it is estimated that at least two years must elapse after giving the order for the cable before the entire system could be successfully laid and put in operation. Further deep-sea soundings must be taken west of the Hawaiian Islands before the final route for the cable can be selected. Under these circumstances it becomes a paramount necessity that measures should be taken before the close of the present Congress to provide such means as may seem most suitable for the establishment of a cable system.

I commend the whole subject to the careful consideration of the Congress and to such prompt action as may seem advisable.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 10, 1899.

Mr. HALE. Some of the considerations suggested by the message have been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs and others by the Committee on Appropriations. I suggest, as immediate action or action at a near day is necessary, that the message be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. And printed.

Mr. HALE. And printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to make one observation, which I think would be greatly to the convenience of the Senate. We have these bridge bills coming before the Senate every little while. They are long bills, composed of several sections, and contain identically the same provisions. It seems to me the Committee on Commerce ought to report that So and So are authorized to construct a bridge, subject to the provisions of such a statute or chapter, referring to it. Thus they could, in two or three lines, save the Senate all this trouble. For instance, one containing all these conditions: The right of repeal, the right of taking tolls, the right of the Government forces to pass over it, the right of the Secretary of War to modify, the provisions about draws, and so on. If one such bill were properly drawn, then always after it we could say A B may construct a bridge at such a place, subject to the provisions of that act. I hope the committee will take notice of this observation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would it be any trouble, I ask the Senator from South Dakota, to change this special bill into a general bill to answer the purpose of this case and all others?

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean exactly a general bill, but, having all these provisions in some bill, every other special bill should refer to it instead of copying it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would not the Senator from South Dakota be willing to have it done in this bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not this evening.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to insert "to;" so as to read:

And to lay on and over said bridge, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 2, line 2, after the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to insert "to;" so as to read:

And to build, erect, and lay on and over said bridge, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 2, in line 16, after the word "such," to strike out "rules, regulations, and;" in line 17, after the word "for," to insert "such;" and in the same line, after the word "transit," to strike out "and transportation;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may at any time prescribe such rates of toll for such transit over said bridge as may be deemed proper and reasonable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 1, after the word "superstructure," to strike out "with straight girders;" so as to read:

Provided, That if the same shall be made of unbroken continuous spans, it shall not be in any case of less elevation than 50 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following additional proviso at the end of section 2:

And provided further, That the bridge herein authorized to be constructed shall not be built within less than 1 mile of any other bridge across said Missouri River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 24, before the word "construction," to strike out "such" and insert "its;" on page 5, line 1, after the word "bridge," to insert "or its accessory works;" in line 2, after the word "War," to strike out "substantially" and insert "unreasonably;" in line 5, after the word "bridge," to insert "or its accessory works;" so as to read:

That no bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and no bridge shall be commenced or built under this act until the location thereof and the plans and specifications for its construction shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War; and any change in the plan of its construction or any alteration in the bridge after its construction shall be subject to the like approval; and whenever said bridge or its accessory works shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of said river he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge or its accessory works to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 16, after the word "touches," to insert:

And the bridge shall not be opened to traffic until all piling and other false work used in constructing the bridge shall have been wholly removed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 6, line 9, after the word "within," to strike out "two years" and insert "one year;" and in line 10, before the word "years," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOURTH ARKANSAS MOUNTED INFANTRY.

Mr. HOAR. I renew my motion.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I am between two raging lions, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]; and the lions are not chained. I must therefore decline to yield unless the Senator from Arkansas gets the consent of both of those Senators.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no doubt that both of those Senators will consent. The bill will detain the Senate but a very short time. It is a House bill. There are amendments proposed by the Senate committee, and it must be passed now if there is any hope of its becoming a law this session. It is justice long delayed to something like 100 or 150 old Federal soldiers in Arkansas. It is a matter that will commend itself to the judgment of every member of the Senate and about which there can be no controversy. It will occupy the attention of the Senate, in my opinion, not more than three minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9219) for the relief of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, which were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "appoint," to insert "and detail a competent and experienced officer of the United States Army;" in line 5, before the word "referee," to strike out "a" and insert "as;" in line 6, before the word "authority," to strike out "with" and insert "who shall have;" on page 3, line 12, before the word "shall," to strike out "referee" and insert "officer;" in the same line, after the word "receive," to strike out "such;" and in the same line, after the word "compensation," to strike out "as the Secretary of War shall deem reasonable, together with" and insert "for;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint and detail a competent and experienced officer of the United States Army as referee, who shall have authority to administer oaths, who shall give notice of the times and places of taking testimony in the State of Arkansas or elsewhere, if necessary, that claimants and their witnesses may appear before him, and shall carefully examine into the facts and take proof upon the claims for service of the members of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry, and return the same, together with his report thereon, to the Secretary of War; and that the Secretary of War is hereby directed to pay such claims to the members of said regiment, or to their heirs, as he shall be satisfied are due under the joint resolution of Congress approved March 18, 1870. Said officer shall receive compensation for actual expenses incurred under the provisions hereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

CLEARWATER SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. HEITFELD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5427) granting to the Clearwater Short Line Railway Company a right of way through the Nez Perces Indian lands in Idaho.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I move to amend the bill by inserting, on page 2, line 16, after the word "occupants," the words "or owners;" and in line 17, after the word "occupant," the words "or owner;" so as to make the first clause of section 3 read:

That before said railroad shall be constructed through any land, claim, or improvement held by individual occupants or owners according to any treaties or laws of the United States compensation shall be made such occupant or owner or claimant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LINDSAY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 11, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BIG THREE RAILROAD COMPANY, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill (H. R. 11409) to entitle and authorize the Big Three Railroad Company to construct, own, and operate a main and branch of railway in Indian and Oklahoma Territories was read. It provides that the Big Three Railroad Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, authorized, invested, and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, beginning at a point to be selected by said railroad company at or near the west line of Little River County, Ark., and running thence over the most practicable and feasible route through the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole nations, Indian Territory; thence through the Territory of Oklahoma to Oklahoma City and Guthrie, in said Territory, with a branch line to begin at or near the line of Oklahoma and Indian Territories and running south through Oklahoma and Indian Territories to Sherman, Tex., with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem to its interest to construct and maintain along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman what railroad company this is?

Mr. CLARDY. The Big Three Railroad Company.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the Big Three Railroad Company? I desire to know whether it was incorporated under that name, or whether several railroads are operating under that name by common consent.

Mr. CLARDY. My understanding is that it is incorporated by that name in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. That is correct.

Mr. CLARDY. The president lives in my district. He is the only party whom I know anything about in connection with the matter.

Mr. McRAE. That is the name of the corporation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the gentleman would have any objection to the consideration of a general bill which has been reported from the same committee, and which will obviate the necessity of giving consideration to these private bills for rights of way through the Indian Territory? If that bill could be considered at this time, the whole matter could then be placed in the hands of the Department, and the rights of those interested could be protected. Otherwise——

Mr. CLARDY. A great many bills of this kind have already passed at this session.

Mr. McRAE. If the general bill can be passed, this bill need not be passed by the Senate.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman has no objection to the consideration of the general bill, I think we had better take that up first.

Mr. CLARDY. Let us get through with this first.

Mr. TAWNEY. This whole subject is a matter that ought to be carefully scrutinized by the House.

Mr. McRAE. You can take up the general bill after the passage of this one.

Mr. CLARDY. I wish to say that this bill has received as careful consideration as any bill could receive, in my opinion.

Mr. TAWNEY. I observe one thing, that the evidence of indebtedness need only be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. That is no protection to creditors at all in the locality in which the road is operated. The general rule is that these evidences of indebtedness, such as mortgages, and so forth, shall be recorded in the several counties through which the road is operated.

Mr. CLARDY. This bill has been indorsed by the Interior Department and has been especially recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the amendments which he suggested have all been put in the bill.

Mr. McRAE. This is the Indian Territory, an unorganized government so far as the United States are concerned. Of course there must be some place where these mortgages should be recorded, and the universal practice in such cases has been to require them to be recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the inspection of all concerned.

Mr. TAWNEY. But there is nothing in the act itself requiring the recording of these evidences of indebtedness in the several counties.

Mr. McRAE. There are no counties.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, in the Territory.

Mr. McRAE. There is no place there, except for the Indians, and we have no right to require those officers to do anything.

Mr. TAWNEY. Surely there is a land office.

Mr. McRAE. Oh, no; there is no land office. This is the Indian country, and the lands are owned by the Indians.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand it is the Indian country.

Mr. McRAE. There is no land office there at all.

Mr. CLARDY. This bill is recommended by the Department of the Interior, and especially by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why not pass a general bill?

Mr. BRUCKER. Quite a number of bills have been passed granting rights of way through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and I should like to ask whether this bill is in the usual form?

Mr. CLARDY. It is. I think it is in a better form than most of them.

Mr. BRUCKER. It struck me in listening to the reading of the bill that there was much more to it than there has been to many of the bills of this kind which have passed.

Mr. CLARDY. Every point is safeguarded.

Mr. BRUCKER. This provides for mortgaging the road, condemnation proceedings, and the payment of awards and securities?

Mr. ALLEN. They all have that.

Mr. McRAE. This is a provision that they all have and should have.

Mr. BRUCKER. I do not remember that the other bills passed were as lengthy as this or that they contained these provisions.

Mr. McRAE. The compensation has been increased from what it was prior to this year. Prior to this year the amount of annual tax was $15 per mile, but on account of the settlement of the country it has increased to $25 per mile.

Mr. BRUCKER. With that statement, I have no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I ascertain that the bill will take some time to consider.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There are but a few pages of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. But a gentleman has said to me that he intends to discuss it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I withdraw my request.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the sundry civil bill, and pending that——

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made by the gentleman from Minnesota to the bill that was before the House.

Mr. CANNON. And pending that motion, I would be glad to know of the gentleman of the minority in charge of this bill [Mr. McRAE] if we can not agree for the closing of general debate? I would like to have as early a close as practicable at this stage of the session.

Mr. McRAE. In one moment I will answer. [After a pause.] I suggest seven hours.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say to my friend that it seems to me that general debate ought to be closed to-day. Suppose that we say——

Mr. McRAE. That would only give us four hours and a half.

Mr. CANNON. That is right; and still, after the general debate comes the five-minute debate; and I am very anxious to get on with this bill. I would be glad if my friend would say that general debate should conclude with this legislative day, and then the House, if necessary, could sit beyond 5.

Mr. McRAE. Well, I make this suggestion in answer to that, that we close general debate with this day, and that we have three hours debate on the twenty-million Philippine paragraph when we reach it.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather not make that agreement, because we may not desire it. I will say to my friend, touching the twenty-million paragraph, when it is reached in the five-minute rule, we all recognize the fact that if gentlemen desire we will take something of time; and I feel quite sure that any reasonable time—say thirty, sixty, or ninety minutes—my friend and I can agree about it without a motion to close debate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Can not that be debated to-day?

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt it will be, somewhat.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman will agree now, so that those who desire to speak on that subject may reserve their remarks until then and give us, say, two hours—one on each side.

Mr. CANNON. I would not agree as to that time now, but I am quite sure my friend and myself, when we reach that point, could agree about it. There will be no desire to shorten debate arbitrarily unless there is a waste of time; but my friend can see, as well as I can, the importance of disposing of the bill as early as possible. Maybe one or both of us would want to have quite a short debate when we reached it, and here is the 10th of February. I think my friend had better——

Mr. HENDERSON. And four other general appropriation bills to pass the House?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McRAE. I understood from the gentleman from Illinois that there would be pretty long general debate upon this bill, and I have promised to try to secure time for a number of gentlemen, if I could, and they will be quite disappointed if they fail to get in. Let us have two hours on the twenty-million paragraph and we will be satisfied on this side.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather not agree to two hours.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Then, pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I move that all general debate on the sundry civil bill be closed with the end of this legislative day; and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending that——

Mr. HENDERSON. Regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Leave the paragraph for twenty millions open for future agreement.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather not.

Mr. McRAE. Will you not leave the debate on the paragraph for twenty millions open, to be determined when reached?

Mr. CANNON. I prefer not. I am quite sure my friends will recollect the way these bills have been handled that we can agree about it when we reach it. I would rather not make any agreement now.

Mr. HENDERSON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill; and, pending that, moves that all general debate be closed with the legislative day; and on that asks the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on limiting debate in Committee of the Whole with the end of the legislative day.

The question was taken and the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, one word before the question is put. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] desires very much that I shall ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON. And I want to add to that that it shall be done within five days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that that will be limited to gentlemen who address the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, that members may extend their remarks in the RECORD for five days? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was then taken on Mr. CANNON'S motion, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair) for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such portion of my time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], and I reserve the remainder of my time, if there be any.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, the sum of $20,000,000 appropriated by this bill to carry into execution the stipulations of the treaty, looked at with the natural eye, disconnected with all circumstances, seems like a large sum. But placed in the scale of the verities and weighed against those higher considerations which make for the duty, the moral grandeur, and glory of this Republic, it is a mere bagatelle and drops out of consideration.

I listened yesterday with unusual satisfaction to some brief remarks from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] which, in my judgment, were as sound in principle and as noble in patriotism as they were elevated in morals. I take great pleasure, Mr. Chairman, in directing public attention to those brief utterances, and I will read from the RECORD one passage from them as a sample:

"The world has been given the example of an unselfish Christian nation waging a war, expending her millions, and sending forth her great Army and Navy to suffer and to do battle for humanity's sake without any personal interest, without any motive of gain or aggrandizement."

There were other observations made by the distinguished gentleman equally sound, equally noble, and equally elevated. I take them for my text this morning to place the discussion of this transcendent theme on a higher plane than it has yet been placed by those who have debated it. I was pleased with the observations of my friend from Indiana, particularly because they did not revise, revamp, and reiterate the argument that I have heard so often from that side of the Chamber, and sometimes on this, that it would be very wicked and wrong and unpatriotic for this Republic to compel by force, against the will of the people, the annexation of the Philippine Islands to the United States. Since no one has ever proposed such a policy, I sweep from the floor of debate all that kind of argument in the simple language of Abraham Lincoln, in replying to his distinguished rival, Senator Douglas, when he said:

"Does the gentleman expect to stand in majestic dignity and pass through his apotheosis and become a god by his antagonism to a proposition which neither man nor mouse in all God's creation has ever advocated?"

I was pleased in another respect that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] did not invoke the stupendous argument which is so frequently invoked by gentlemen on that side of the Chamber, the traditions of the fathers.

TRADITION.

Have the traditions of the past any claim upon us that should cause us to falter in that forward movement to which we are counseled by the wisdom of the present? It was the wise reflection of the philosophic Buckle "that of all the ways in which truth has been distorted, there is none that has worked so much harm as an exaggerated respect for the past." As a guide to our footsteps it may be useful, but as a manacle on our limbs it can only cripple our movement and hinder progress. Jefferson, the original American expansionist, suggested that this country would not tolerate the Gothic idea of looking backward instead of forward for our improvements in government or religion, or consulting the annals of our ancestors for the duties we owe the present.

History abounds in illustrations of the fatality of submissive acquiescence in the traditions of the fathers. For ages the dicta of the ecclesiastical sages of the past were followed, under the delusion that they were superior in piety and excelled in wisdom all other men, and so the patristic errors in theology, science, and learning were perpetuated and human knowledge and progress halted for centuries. If I would assert that it is impossible there should be inhabitants on the opposite side of the earth, I would be adhering to the traditions of the fathers and could cite so notable an authority as St. Augustine.

After the obstacles the geographic traditions of the patristic fathers had thrown in the way of maritime adventure and discovery were overcome, says Dr. Draper, their ethnological traditions led to one of the monumental tragedies of history. It was believed by the Spaniards, for the fathers had so declared it, that the people of Asia, Africa, and Europe, descending through the sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, comprised all the people on the earth of Adamic descent. When they found the New World inhabited, a question arose: What was the lineage of these new people?

The voice of the fathers was altogether against their Adamic descent. St. Augustine had denied the globular form of the earth; and there could be no human beings outside of Asia, Africa, and Europe, since none are mentioned in the Scriptures. So the Spaniards, following the traditions of the fathers, proceeded to treat the natives of South America as outside the pale of the Adamic race and enslaved and murdered them by the millions. Blind adherence to the traditions of the fathers made the Spaniards easily the greatest assassins of the human race the world has ever known. This suggests the admonition—and I only allude to it because it is so suggestive—that we shun the example of Spain lest by our adherence to the supposed traditions of the fathers we dishonor the American Republic and discredit American civilization.

The fathers themselves needed no admonitions of this character. They knew that each century must do its own thinking. They would have agreed with Dr. Abbott, that if one generation has no Washington or Jefferson or Hamilton it must create them or die. They were wise enough to judge opinions as they judged coins—considering much less whose inscriptions they bore than what metal they were made of; that soundness of opinions was more to be valued than their antiquity. Their minds were free from the shackles of the past. They knew that new occasions teach new duties; that blind adherence to tradition is neither patriotism nor wisdom nor courage, but intellectual slavery and moral cowardice; and they accordingly turned their backs upon the past, broke the tyranny of tradition, made their own precedents, blazed a new pathway, and gave to the family of nations a new birth. The lesson of it all which I desire to emphasize is that every great question must come to the touchstone of the present. To-day, and not a hundred years ago, is the judgment day for the question of American expansion.

EXPANSION HAS BEEN THE HABIT OF THE REPUBLIC.

But it remains to be said that this policy is not in violation of the traditions of the fathers of the Republic, as strenuously contended in some quarters. Our policy for a hundred years has been one of expansion. We have expanded from the Alleghenies to the Golden Gate and far out into the Pacific Sea. The eagle's wings have grown until they are 8,000 miles from tip to tip.

Mr. Seeley, a philosophic and discriminating English writer, says: "In the United States we have the most striking example of confident and successful expansion. Those colonies, which when they parted from us did but fringe the Atlantic seaboard, have covered with their States and Territories, first, the mighty Mississippi Valley, next the Rocky Mountains, and then the Pacific coast, and all this without shaking their political system." "The greatness of the United States," says he, "is the best proof that a state may become immensely large and yet prosper. The Union is a great example of a system under which an indefinite number of provinces are firmly held together without any of the inconveniences which have been felt in other cases."

It must not be forgotten that when the Union was formed the United States did not own a foot of land on this continent. The public domain was owned by individual States under grants from the British Crown. In 1780 Congress passed a resolution recommending to the several States to cede their unappropriated lands to the United States. Later in the same year Congress passed another resolution that the lands ceded to the United States by any particular State should be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States. This was the initial step in the American policy of expansion. Agreeably to this policy and under this legislative sanction Virginia, in 1784, ceded to the United States the territory northwest of the Ohio River. This extended domain was under Congressional government until the States carved out of it were admitted to the Union.

Wisconsin, the last of that splendid galaxy of States, was governed as a Territory sixty-one years, the inhabitants having no voice in their government save as Congress in its wisdom permitted them. Alabama and Mississippi, formed from territory ceded to the United States by South Carolina, were long governed as Territories. Louisiana, purchased of France in 1803, enjoyed nine years of Territorial pupilage. I need not pursue our later Territorial history. In all these and similar cases the President appointed the governors and judges, whose salaries were paid out of the public Treasury of the United States. No power was exercised by the people in their own government save as Congress in its wisdom permitted.

This Government was as absolute, as despotic as Congress chose to make it. They were possessions of the United States and were under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United States, domain and people alike. They had no independence, no right of self-government, no power to declare their own sovereignty or to choose whom their sovereign should be. They were in abject vassalage to a power, a sovereignty which they had no voice in choosing. The bulk of our domain has been acquired in the same way by cession from a foreign sovereignty.

The inhabitants came with the land as if attached to it, possessing themselves no attributes of sovereignty. The Philippines have come to us in the same way by cession of the sovereignty possessing them. In themselves they possessed none of the attributes of sovereignty and are now under the sovereignty of the United States which succeeded to that of Spain. There is no more warrant for the contention that the people of the Philippines are vested with sovereignty than that the inhabitants of California were vested with sovereignty the day after the execution of the treaty with Mexico by which that territory was acquired.

FEDERAL SOVEREIGNTY ABSOLUTE OVER TERRITORY.

So that not only has it been the policy of the United States from the beginning to acquire territory, as illustrated by the instances I have named, together with more recent ones with which we are all familiar, but we have always exercised without question absolute sovereignty over the people occupying the acquired territory Mr. Jefferson and many other able statesmen of his day, and some of later periods, held that this power of sovereignty was perpetual—necessarily so—for they denied any constitutional warrant for the admission of a State excepting such as were formed out of territory belonging to the nation at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. This view was strenuously insisted upon by many able statesmen in different periods of our history.

In 1811 Josiah Quincy, in the House of Representatives, in the debate on the bill for the admission of Louisiana, said: "This bill which is now proposed to be passed has this assured principle for its basis, that the Congress, without recurrence to conventions of the people in the States or to the legislatures of the States, are authorized to admit new partners to a share of the political power in countries out of the original limits of the United States. Now, this assumed principle I maintain to be altogether without any sanction of the Constitution. I declare it to be a manifest and atrocious usurpation of power, of a nature dissolving, according to undeniable principles of moral law, the obligations of our national compact, and leading to all the awful consequences which flow from such a state of things."

Mr. McMasters, speaking of this argument, says: "Mr. Quincy insisted that we had no right to throw the liberty and property of this people into hodgepodge with the wild men on the Missouri, nor with the mixed though more respectable Anglo-Hispano-Gallo-Americans who bask on the sands at the mouth of the Mississippi." The bill passed notwithstanding this speech, and everybody knows that 20 States lying without the original limits of the United States have since been admitted to the Union, and, singularly enough, the Constitution still lives and the Union survives.

When the bill to authorize the President to establish a Territorial government for Oregon was under discussion, Mr. Dickerson, Senator from New Jersey, said that Oregon could never become a State and would have to remain a colony, and that a colonization system was something the United States had never yet adopted, and he hoped never would adopt. "Is this Territory of Oregon," said he, "ever to become a State, a member of this Union? Never. The Union is already too extensive. The distance from Washington to the mouth of the Columbia is 4,650 miles. A member of Congress coming from Oregon would have to travel 9,300 miles, and this, at $8 for each 20 miles, the sum allowed by law to Congressmen, would make his journey cost the Government $3,720. If he were to travel 30 miles a day steadily he would spend 306 days in coming to the seat of Government and returning to his home."

Senator Benton in the same debate argued that this Republic should have limits. Westward the ridge of the Rocky Mountains was a natural and everlasting boundary. Along the back of this ridge the westward limit of this Republic should be drawn and "the statue of the fabled god Terminus should be raised upon its highest peak, never to be thrown down."

Senator McDuffie, of South Carolina, said: "I do not wish to tempt the people to form settlements there. I wish this to be a great empire grown up by the natural course of civilization and the natural extension of population. I thank God even more for placing the Rocky Mountains there. I believe if it had not been for those mountains we would have been already in the Pacific."

Mr. McMasters suggests in connection with these quotations that the drift of evil influence was mistaken. Even while he spoke the tide of immigration was beginning to set toward the uninhabitable country which lay beyond the impassable mountains. Seven years from the day on which Senator McDuffie addressed the Senate the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon was sitting in the House of Representatives.

So late as 1850, in a speech in this House, in the Thirth-ninth Congress, Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, discussed the question of the right of sovereignty of the United States over territory and people acquired by cession. In that discussion he said:

"For sixty years and upward, after the passage of the ordinance of 1787 and the adoption of the Constitution, no one seriously doubted the right of Congress to control the whole legislation of the Territories, to establish territorial governments, create courts, fix the tenure of the judges and other officers, in short to exercise all acts of municipal as well as political legislation. For sixty years all that authority has been exercised over the Northwestern territory, the Southwestern territory, over Louisiana, Florida, and Oregon. In the meantime the question had been definitely and conclusively settled by all the branches of the Government—by Presidents, by Congresses, by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Elementary writers—Story, Rawle, and others—had so laid down the law.

"By the law of nations, when a nation acquires territory, either by conquest or treaty, it becomes subject to the will of the acquiring power. The laws of such power, however, do not spread over it until some express legislation. In the meantime their own laws remain in full force. Not unfrequently such subject-provinces are for a long time governed by very different laws from the country to which they become attached. Canada and other British provinces are to this day. But the very fact of acquisition gives to the sovereign power of the acquiring State all power to legislate for such acquisitions. It requires no constitutional or treaty provision. Wherever the legislative power of the new sovereign is placed, whether in king, parliament, or Congress, there is the whole and only power to govern them.

"Our Constitution places the legislative power in Congress. Consequently, Congress has exclusive power over the territories newly acquired. The Constitution itself does not extend to them, and can have no influence upon them, except so far as it creates and defines the legislative organ of the sovereign will of the nation. None of the officers in the Territories hold by a constitutional tenure. No law of the United States was ever supposed to be extended to any of the Territories by the mere force of the Constitution. The provision for the return of fugitive slaves does not extend to the Territories. Any slave escaping or being taken into New Mexico or California would be instantly free. Hence by the act of 1793 express provision for the subject was made with regard to the Territories which we then had."

NO ABANDONMENT OF AMERICAN PRINCIPLES.

It may, then, be asserted with absolute confidence that to hold possession and exercise sovereignty over the islands in such form and by such agencies as Congress prescribes is not an abandonment of the American principle of self-government for the European principle of conquest. This mode of governing territories and possessions of the United States is as old as the Government itself. All our Territories have been the subjects of Congressional government, with but little regard to the principle of the consent of the governed.

The capital city of the Republic is so governed to-day. If they are not capable of self-government, we must govern them in the best way possible until they can govern themselves. If we can not govern them in accordance with the principles of a New England town meeting, as Colonel Roosevelt suggests, then it is our duty to find out the principles in accordance with which we can govern them, and apply those. The idea of government by any other than American ideals is not proposed by the Administration any more than is forcible annexation of the islands to the United States.

THE FATHERS COVETED TERRITORIAL ACQUISITIONS.

Jefferson not only desired Cuba, but Canada as well, and saw no insuperable difficulties in the Constitution to the attainment of so desirable an acquisition. Not only the fathers, but the sons of the fathers had the same hunger and thirst for the righteousness of empire. In 1854 President Pierce directed Buchanan, Mason, and Soulé, our ministers at London, Paris, and Madrid, to meet in some European city to confer in regard to the best means of getting possession of Cuba. Accordingly they met at Ostend.

The result of their deliberations was transmitted to our Government in a dispatch known as the Ostend manifesto. In that dispatch it was said: "The time has arrived when the interests of Spain are as seriously involved in the sale as those of the United States in the purchase of the island, and that the transaction would be equally honorable to both nations. They said the United States ought to purchase Cuba with as little delay as possible, for it is as necessary to the North American Republic as any of its present members, and that it belongs as naturally to that great family of States of which the Union is the providential nursery. Indeed, without it the Union can never enjoy repose nor possess reliable security."

But I had not completed my observations on the traditions of the fathers. Jefferson had some scruples at first about the constitutional warrant for the purchase, but he soon disposed of them, and in his message to the special session of Congress convened to act on the treaty no allusion was made to the subject. He entertained no doubt of the wisdom of the purchase, and was not alarmed at the growth of our domain. Alluding to the apprehension some were under of danger to the Union from the enlargement of our territory, he said: "But who can limit the extent to which the federative principle can operate effectively? The larger the association the less will it be shaken by local passions."

Cuba he desired and confidently expected to obtain. He said: "When we have Cuba, I would go no farther in that direction.

I would erect a column in the southernmost limit of the island and inscribe on it a ne plus ultra as to us in that direction. We should then have only to include the North (that is, Canada) in our Confederacy, which would be, of course, in the first war, and we should have such an empire for liberty as she has never surveyed since the creation, and I am persuaded that no Constitution was ever so well calculated as ours for extensive empire and self-government. But if Spain, dead to the voice of her own interest, and actuated by stubborn pride and a false sense of honor, should refuse to sell Cuba to the United States, then the question will arise, What ought to be the course of the American Government under such circumstances?"

It was also declared in that memorable document "That self-preservation is the first law of nature with states as well as with individuals, and we must apply this great law to Cuba; and if we preserve our own conscious rectitude and our own self-respect we can afford to disregard the censures of the world." That reveals the character of the ethical principles governing the Democratic party. That was the way they poulticed their consciences before entering upon some piece of enormous rascality.

Buchanan, after his nomination for President, in 1856, said he was not opposed to territorial expansion; that our necessities might require us to make other acquisitions; that the acquisition of Cuba was very desirable now, and was likely to become a national necessity. "If," said he, "I can settle the slavery question and then add Cuba to the Union, I shall be willing to give up the ghost and let Breckinridge take the Government." The Democratic national platform of 1860, adopted at Charleston, contained this resolution:

"Resolved, That the Democratic party are in favor of the acquisition of the island of Cuba on such terms as shall be honorable to ourselves and just to Spain."

I trust I have made it clear what principle has been recognized through our entire history touching the power of the Government over Territories, as well as the policy and traditions of our people in respect to expansion. And if those who criticise and condemn the policy of the President would reflect upon the demonstrated wisdom of the expansion of our territory in the past and the glorious growth and splendid achievements it made possible, and would doubt a little of the fallibility of their views and defer a little to the judgment of others, they would come to the conclusion of a very excellent man who once opposed expansion but now says: "When I survey the past and recall the misgivings which far-sighted statesmen had at the time of acquiring new territory in the Mississippi Valley, of taking on fresh responsibilities with Louisiana, of contesting the Oregon line, of welcoming Texas, and crossing the Rio Grande, I am taught by the impressive lessons of our past that, in the language of Hosea Bigelow, 'We don't know all things down in Judee.'"

THE ETHICS OF EXPANSION.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct attention to some higher considerations. It may be true that there is no decalogue for nations, and that the Sermon on the Mount was not addressed to states. The Christian world, however, rejoices to know that in the evolution of international morals we have reached a time when nations can not dispense with a distinct ethical warrant for their treatment of each other. If we trace the stream of civilization from its first faint glimmering to the present splendor of its altruistic development, we can easily see how marked has been its growth on the ethical side. Steadily has the basis for social and political union widened with the lapse of ages, progressively extending the area of fraternal feelings and moral obligations. John Fisk has shown how the ideas of duty, humanity, and brotherhood, once confined to blood relationship and to the clan, have become expanded and ennobled until they embrace states, empires, mankind.

How marked the contrast between this side of the life of English-speaking nations and that of the most civilized peoples of antiquity. The most enlightened Greeks and Romans exhibited a revolting callousness and brutality toward the people of other nations. Mr. Mahaffy assures us that they were scarcely superior to the savages of the present day in those nobler and kindlier feelings which are the redeeming side of human character. Plato, we are told, never recognized rights on the part of the barbarian; and Aristotle, the most sober and comprehensive thinker of antiquity, classed war with the chase as two species of the art of acquisition. When we see that it is amongst the races which have risen to the grandest preeminence that the greatest development of the humanitarian feeling has been observed; that it is a part of the progress of the most advanced people, and a chief constituent in their glory; when we note how sensible we have become that this is an ethical world, a divine universe, God's workshop, in which the moral law is as unfailing as the law of gravitation in the material world; when we see that the universal hope is that this Republic may be placed on the foundations of righteousness where the ages will not prevail against it, that it may become the foremost nation to recognize that equity, justice, humanity, are the winning forces of civilization, the moral trade winds of the universe, we may well inquire what is the purpose, the function of this altruistic development in connection with the tendency to expansion which American civilization exhibits? Is there not warrant for the assumption that the United States have a mission to guide this force of humanitarian feeling to beneficent ends in the amelioration and civilization of the inferior people within the sphere of our influence?

History until recently has been largely the story of fighting. War at the beginning of the historical period was the normal, if not necessary, condition of nations. Leaping the ages, we behold an era in which it is not the trade of nations, and, indeed, but infrequently employed even as the ultima ratio in their disputes, which are mostly composed by peaceful arbitrament. For every war, every act of aggression, a civilized country feels it necessary to put forward justifying reasons based upon moral grounds. It is stated by a recent writer that in every modern instance of interference—those, for example, of the European powers with Crete, of Great Britain in the Soudan, and of the United States in Cuba—there was advanced a justification having to a greater or less extent an ethical basis, a humanitarian purpose, as the rescue of the oppressed, the cessation of cruelty, the stopping of intermittent massacres and the horrors of civil war.

We behold an era in which it is prosecuted for pacific ends, when "We draw the sword for peace and smite to save." The Revolutionary war, says Mr. Fisk, was fought for the pacific principle of equal representation; the war of secession in behalf of the pacific principle of federalism. The war with Spain we know was waged in behalf of the pacific principles of liberty, justice, and humanity. In each case victory advanced the principles of peace. This progressive development on the ethical side of civilization, based on the solidarity of the human race, is destined to go on in accordance with the providential order until war ceases upon the earth.

Already it is under the ban of Christendom. Civilized man, remembering its inhumanity, its "splendid murder," its ghastly terrors, its terrible compensations, contemplates it with undisguised horror. Yet there are occasions when it must be tolerated as the choice of evils. When the objects are such as engage the favor and secure the alliance of just powers in heaven and earth, when necessary to crush wickedness, destroy tyrants and rescue society from evils incomparably greater than itself, war becomes a high and responsible duty. When offered by the hand of necessity or commanded by humanity, said Sir Philip Sidney, not otherwise, it must be accepted.

Our encounter with Spain was no rash and fruitless war, waged for wanton glory, territorial aggrandizement, commercial gain, or other selfish or sordid purpose. We entered upon the undertaking for the grandest and noblest purpose that ever moved a nation to arms.

Rabbi Krauskopf did not put it too strongly when he said: "What monument, what inscription, will or can do justice to our American heroes and martyrs who fell on Cuban soil and died in American camps, not in our own country's defense, but for liberty for other nations and for the rights of other people and for the salvation of another continent?"

We struck the blow in the name of liberty, justice, and humanity. We took the sword to redress the wrongs of others, not our own, and gave the world a sublime illustration of how nations as well as men in their ascent pass from the plane of the struggle for their own lives to that of the struggle for the lives of others, from self-regarding to other-regarding motives, a distinctly higher level. Service for others at the call of humanity is the noblest exercise of power and marks the highest outlook of national purpose and conscience.

From this point of view the war with Spain appears to be unexampled in history, not alone in its origin, but in its results as well; and if our expectations are not disappointed, it can not fail to be regarded by the dispassionate judgment of mankind, as far as the United States are concerned, as one of the few totally disinterested, stainless, and wholly virtuous acts recorded in the history of the race. It may sound like rhapsody, but it is not when Edward Everett Hale declares "that in one hundred days God has set forward the civilization of the world one hundred years."

I have no doubt that even this extravagant hope will be, in a large measure, realized if we have the nerve to embrace our opportunity and the heroism to meet manfully the duties and responsibilities which the results of the war impose. If the same elevated purpose and altruistic spirit shall characterize the last as gave just renown to the first act of the drama, immeasurable good will come to ourselves, to the inferior peoples involved, and to mankind. To ourselves in raising our Republic into prominence as a coequal with the great world powers, and making it a conspicuous factor in the world problems which loom in the near future, giving us that influential place among nations which belongs to a people who stand distinctly for freedom, humanity, justice, progress—the essential principles of Western civilization. To the people of the islands of the sea in their gradual instruction in the art of right living and in the principles of just government, in having planted among them the essential spirit of American institutions, education, law, order, industry, commerce, and self-control. To all mankind in the impetus it will give to the development of those principles and qualities which are the product of the ethical system on which Christian civilization is founded, and which have, through the ages and by the rivalries of races, advanced toward that altruistic ideal which is the goal toward which humanity has tended from the beginning.

THE SITUATION.

I need not dwell upon the facts which constitute the situation to which we are to apply the ethical principles which in this age of the world ought to regulate the conduct of nations. That the situation is one we did not see from the beginning does not lessen our responsibility. It is characteristic of important enterprises to lead to results not contemplated in the initial steps. It is a maxim of diplomacy that "no war ever left a nation where it found it." Our relations with Cuba and Porto Rico need not engage our attention at this time, for our duty in respect to them is so clear as to be free from difficulty. We must take care of them until they can take care of themselves. The policy of the Government for three-quarters of a century imposes this duty.

Under that policy no other European nation can succeed to the rights of Spain in any of her former dependencies in the Western Hemisphere. The Philippine Islands, however, present a different question in that it is free from some limitations which simplify the West Indian question and is complicated by some considerations from which the latter is entirely free. We can not be said ever to have had a policy with respect to possessions in the Pacific Ocean or elsewhere outside this hemisphere. It has never been conceived that changes in possessions or modifications in government in the Eastern Hemisphere could be dangerous to our peace and safety or a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. The Philippine Islands, therefore, present a new question, unhampered by traditional policy or preconceived opinion, and it is to be treated on grounds of general reasoning in the light of its own circumstances and conditions with absolute fidelity to good morals and to our obligations to our own people and the inhabitants of the islands.

I do not think there is any ethical warrant for the vain jingo boast that the American flag should never be hauled down. That depends on whether it was properly put up. The form of statement which is agreeable to reason and compatible with morals is that where the flag of freedom is once rightfully planted it shall never be replaced by an emblem of despotism, and at all times and in every place it must stand for just, humane, and righteous government.

The maintenance of this just and conservative attitude involves not only a change in the direction we have been sailing, but the putting on of more sail as well. My sense of the gravity of the situation can not be better expressed than in the words of Jefferson to Monroe, which were, no doubt, the origin of the Monroe doctrine:

"The question," said Jefferson, "is the most momentous which has ever been offered for my contemplation since that of independence; that made us a nation; this sets our compass, and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us." The ethical warrant, the humanitarian motive, and altruistic spirit of our undertaking set the compass that points the way we are to go. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the obligations of duty toward mankind as well as toward the people who have been brought within the sphere of our influence and our own future usefulness imperiously demand that we hold and defend our title to the possession and sovereignty of the Philippines until we have fully accomplished the moral purpose which inspired our undertaking in the beginning and rounded out the noble destiny upon which we are just entering.

That some rough surgery may become necessary, as Colonel Roosevelt suggests, must not deter us from a manifest duty. We had some rough surgery in our country in coercing a portion of our own people to acquiesce in the government of the Union. We must undergo this ordeal if necessity imposes it in any portion of our wide domain. We have never shrunk from it in the past and never will in the future. That our way is beset with dangers no one doubts, but these must be incentives, not deterrents. It may be as Judge Grosscup suggests, that a providential hand, gloved in the smoke of battle, is leading us out of our isolation on to a moral elevation where we can see more clearly the pointing of the finger of duty and destiny, and from which a wider outlook will open a view of the way we are to advance as the evangel of liberty, the messenger of civilization and hope to the inhabitants of our new possessions.

COMMERCIAL SPIRIT.

I have said nothing of the commercial advantage which the policy of expansion wisely pursued will bring to us, because no thrifty policy of selfishness, no action with respect to the Philippines, whose motive is the pursuit of gain, without more, could justify the assumption of the stupendous responsibilities which the policy of expansion imposes. No results which are recorded in the merchant's ledger or on the balance sheets of commerce, without more, can give validity to the course we are pursuing.

But that course being justified by other and higher grounds, the fact that the situation carries on its wings a double blessing will not diminish the satisfaction with which we contemplate the new character we are taking on. That the gates of the East are open and all the possibilities of world commerce solicit us is a fact we can all look at with undisguised complacency. This, too, though incidental to our main purpose has its ethical side. Commerce is an apostle of peace, the forerunner of civilization. There is much truth in Judge Grosscup's reflections on this point. He says: "Civil liberty and better culture follow the lead of commerce. By creating new wants it stirs new aspirations. By giving to men new surroundings it quickens new character of thought. It reaches a people on their human side, and having thus obtained a permanent foothold, opens to them a higher civilization. If Anglo-Saxon law ever takes root in Asiatic soil, if the people of that far-off continent ever rise to the individual ennoblement and dignity that constitute the distinguishing feature of the English-speaking race, if true popular institutions ever come to supplant the present species of paternal despotism, if the religion of Christianity, like the light of the sun swallowing up in its effulgence other lights, displaces their crude religions, these will come to pass because the primal germs will have been borne in upon the tide of commerce. In the character of her rising commerce is bound up the future civilization of the Asiatic people." This is indeed an alluring picture of the possibilities in the way of world beneficence which opens to the march of American expansion.

Henry Buckel shows how contact with nations removes ignorance, which is a powerful cause of hatred and war. It is the true bond of charity and an influential teacher of moral lessons. Every new railroad laid down, every new steamship which plows the wave, is a guaranty of peace. The advantages of what has been called oceanic civilization are not to be overlooked. Europe entered upon this after the discovery of America. Till then the ocean was a boundary; then it became a pathway. Till then the Mediterranean Sea was the seat of the world's industry and civilization. The maritime countries always enjoyed commercial supremacy and excelled in knowledge and progress, because, as Mr. Seeley says, they reaped the benefits of the "civilizing sea."

England achieved the commercial primacy of the world because she was mistress of the sea. Columbus transferred the seat of trade and civilization from the center to the western coast of Europe by making the Atlantic instead of the Mediterranean the highway of commerce. There is a lesson for ourselves as well as the Philippines in the fact noticed by historians that the sea gave an intellectual stimulus to the western nations. Holland took the lead in scholarship as well as commerce. Dr. Draper has shown that when the commercial Phœnicians were masters of the Mediterranean Sea, Europe was in a state of barbarism. When the early Greeks became endued with the commercial spirit their intellect awoke and expanded with their commerce.

The arts flourished, science had its birth, education was encouraged, and schools of philosophy established. Not only this, but the cause of the rapid propagation of Christianity in its first ages we are assured lay in the extraordinary facilities existing among the commercial communities scattered round the shores of the Mediterranean Sea. Through the ages commercial activity has been in a marked degree conducive to the propagation of thought through the constant excitement to intellectual activity. So, too, the history of the reaction of the New World upon the Old illustrates how the sea became the theater of some of the most stupendous results in the evolution of the world's commerce and civilization, and the star actors in that splendid drama were sea powers. Among all the powers of Europe which competed for the New World, success came to that one which most cultivated the sea and whose march, as the song declares, "was on the ocean wave."

THE ETHICAL REQUIREMENTS OF THE SITUATION.

Now what are the ethical requirements of the situation? There were four possible alternatives presented: either to send the Philippines back under the yoke of Spain or dispose of them to other powers, or abandon them to anarchy and misgovernment to become at last the prey of any government that deemed them worth a struggle to possess, or lastly, take care of them ourselves until they are capable of taking care of themselves. From a necessity arising from natural conditions they are wards of the civilized and enlightened powers whose duty it is to give them good government and promote their advancement in civilization. The United States being in possession legitimately are in honor and good morals bound to hold control in trust for civilization, and discharge the duties which dominion and responsibility impose.

The ratification of the treaty will make us responsible for law and order in the Philippines before all the world. This obligation we solemnly assumed when we destroyed Spanish authority and accepted a cession of Spain's title and sovereignty. We are morally bound to provide them with the best government their condition will admit of. This duty can not be performed by leaving the people to govern themselves in any way they can. We must teach them the ways of good government. We must make conditions favorable to the growth of intelligence, integrity, and honest living. We must teach them self-control, obedience to law, and make them capable of self-government before we abandon them to the tender mercies of mercenary adventurers, unscrupulous military leaders, or to become a casus belli to involve the world in war. The national honor is involved in the manner in which we fulfill these responsible obligations. The eyes of the world are upon us, and for the character of our conduct and the elevation of our principles we must answer to the deliberate judgment of enlightened Christendom.

There is but one safe path. The conscience of the American people must control our policy and guide its administration. The problem is not how to escape our responsibilities—any coward can solve such a problem—but how to meet them; not how to use these new possessions for our own benefit, but for their own and the world's. We must be the most conscientious of all nations in our national actions. Scruples of conscience should deter us from a wrong act. Neither the interest nor the glory of the nation should be an excuse for an unjust act. We have duties to the weal of the human race. What we do may give a facility to commerce, a stimulus to shipbuilding, an encouragement to intercourse, and therefore to civilization, which would give our action just title to rank among those acts whose beneficence justify them, but that is not enough to justify us. We must find our justification in the higher motives of liberty, humanity, justice—duties we owe the people who have by the fortunes of war come under our protection—and the more sacrifice we make in discharging them the greater the glory that redounds to us.

This should be our guiding principle, for in it is lodged the power and potency of the humanitarian purpose in our Eastern policy. The government we set up must be for the benefit of the people governed, not the government that will conduce most to the benefit of the United States, nor to some fraction of the people of the islands, or to the revolutionary, adventurous, and ambitious leaders, but to the body of the people who inhabit the islands. Their peace, happiness, growth, education, and civilization are the first objects of our solicitude, and all the agencies employed should bend to these beneficent ends.

The government of an inferior race is a trust, and the ruling and protecting people must never forget that they are in a position of trustees and bound like them to serve the objects of the trust. I agree with Dr. Lyman Abbott that to attempt to govern these islands for our own benefit exclusively, to utilize them for our trade, and exploit them for our commercial advantage merely, would be to reenact the folly, if not to repeat the crime, of Spain. And any such attempt, however disguised, the patriotism and conscience of the American people should promptly repudiate and condemn.

But no such policy is proposed. No one is more sensible of the true nature of the problem of our Eastern policy than the President of the United States. He recognizes more perhaps than any other man the claims of our moral obligations to these weak people, dependent upon us for civilized modes of life, law, order, justice, and liberty, so that they may grow into civilization and become capable of self-government. He knows that all power to do this is lodged in the Congress of the United States, and he insists that it shall be exercised in subjection to the great principles of justice, humanity, and liberty, whose sanction is necessary to the validity of our administration. The agencies we employ are but means to an end, and that end the civilization of the people and their capability to maintain stable government themselves, after which, without their solicitation to remain, our helping hand should be withdrawn.

That the President does not promulgate a policy for the future, whose conditions and requirements no one can foresee, does not justify the criticism that he is taking a "leap in the dark." On the contrary, it shows the superior wisdom which guides his course. Happily for the country, he is not a man who is daunted by dangers. He is a man of nerve, capable, courageous, and conscientious, and I can easily hear his noble and undaunted spirit retorting upon cavilers and critics—

> I accept the peril;
> I prefer to walk in sublime dread,
> Rather than crawl in safety.

These high considerations must be our guide in the Oceanic policy we are about entering upon. No maxims of prudence, no considerations of economy, no sordid purpose can stand in the way of those ethical principles which alone afford justification for our new departure. We enter upon no unholy rivalry for the possessions of others. We have no adversary in all the world to which the old threat can be applied, "Delenda est Carthago." Dr. Abbott expresses the full scope of our purpose—to put an end to foreign tyranny, to terminate domestic anarchy, to establish the foundations of just and stable government and build the superstructure as fast and as far as the conditions of population make it possible.

We seek to destroy no country that we may rear an empire upon its ruins. We propose only to take care of our own possessions and protect and safeguard the weak and defenseless until they are capable of self-government. We will be a knight of chivalry among nations, bringing valor, heroism, and statesmanship to the rescue of the victims of oppression and wrong and teaching the world that liberty and law, right and justice shall be lords paramount within the sphere of American influence.

In carrying forward our new and enlarged policy, which is made necessary by the new relations in which we stand to the world, and the new obligations to humanity and civilization we have assumed, we propose cultivating peaceful relations with all the world, so that the increased commerce, for which we are an honorable candidate, will not be a cause of disturbance or war, but will, as Adam Smith said it ought to be among nations, as individuals, a bond of union and friendship. We are advancing according to the higher altruistic law governing the development of States and nations and the growth of empire; we are moving in harmony with that providential order by which all races are to come under the reign of a higher social régime. Civilization can not spare any portions of the earth to the waste of barbarism; savage tribes can not forever cumber the richest parts of our heritage. They must become civilized or become extinct.

I accept the thought of Henry Wilson, uttered a quarter of a century ago in the Senate of the United States, when he said: "I believe, sir, that every race God has made is capable of improvement, of civilization, of elevation, of Christianity, whether they dwell in the temperate or tropical regions of the earth. I believe Christian civilization will not be limited to lines of latitude, but will make the tour of the globe—lifting up all races and conditions of men. * * * I have undoubting faith that every portion of this globe is to be the home of civilized man. * * * This doctrine that the Tropics are doomed, that the people who now inhabit or are hereafter to inhabit them are destined by the inexorable hand of nature to perpetual deterioration, that the men of other climes and races who go into these doomed regions to carry capital, science, skill, and Christianity are to go down with them, is a doctrine contrary to God's Holy Word, to the aspirations and hopes of humanity. It is anti-republican and anti-Christian, and ought never to be entertained by an American statesman or uttered in the Congress of a nation that believes in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

So I believe this is the goal toward which the moral forces of this vital, organic, divine universe, the beneficent Power that is in and over all, is certainly tending. He who opposes this progress fights against the nature of things, contends with God, and must wage a losing battle. In this majestic march from height to height of world beneficence we must not forget that America can only establish the legitimacy of her title to that leadership which belongs to the English-speaking people by so minding her footsteps and guarding her action that every page of our annals will reveal elevation of mind, rectitude of purpose, integrity of principles, and supremacy of conscience, thus certifying to all the world that we are moving on the everlasting lines of equity, truth, humanity, and liberty, following the foreshadowings of the ethical method of God in human history.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have said enough. At some length and some pains I have answered the leading arguments which from time to time have been advanced against the policy of the Administration in respect to "expansion," and I have tried to lift the great theme above the pages of the merchant's ledger or the balance sheets of commerce and place it in the companionship of those higher considerations upon which the true grandeur of the Republic must ever depend.

CONCLUSION.

If we adhere to these principles and aspire after these high ideals, the outcry of the alarmist, the shibboleth "imperialism" used by those who think it safe to sail by the light on the stern of the ship, can produce no terror in those who are not affrighted by the inviting prospect of our country's greatness. Imperialism is not incompatible with federalism. Germany is a federal, yet an imperial monarchy. We are a federal, but we may still be an imperial republic, deserving and holding the noblest primacy that can ever crown a nation, the primacy of humanity, justice, and liberty, going boldly forward to the completion of our destiny, carrying free thought, free speech, free press, free religion, and free government to every people under our flag who are capable of such blessings, and when they are not, making them so as speedily as possible by such civilizing agencies as have for their object the care, comfort, and culture of the human race, and then show the world an example of the only imperialism suitable to this Republic, the imperialism of man.

This is the imperial spirit James Bryce advises us to cultivate, not a spirit of vain glory or aggression or defiance, but a spirit of pride and joy in the extension of our language, our literature, our laws, our institutions, our commerce over the vast spaces of the earth and the farthest islands of the sea, with a sense of the splendid opportunities and solemn responsibilities that extension carries with it.

I have faith to believe that we will be equal to our opportunities and worthy the grand and noble destiny that awaits us. We have but to remember what it is the primal duty of Americans never to forget, "That man is more than nations, that wisdom is more than glory, that virtue is more than dominion of the sea, and that justice is the supreme good."

Lord, God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

[Applause.]

In closing I give my countrymen this sentiment:

And so I give you all the ship of state,
Freedom's last venture is her priceless freight,
God speed her, keep her, bless her, while she steers
Amid the breakers of unsounded years.
Lead her through danger's paths with even keel
And guide the honest hand that holds her wheel.

[Applause.]

In the lap of the Orient, mother of nations, I fling this pearl of poesy:

Mother Asia, we stand at your threshold.
In far immemorial yore
We left you, great Mother of Nations,
And now we return to your door.
We have circled the seas and their islands,
We have found us new worlds in the main,
We have found us young brides o'er the alien tides—
Now we come to our mother again.

We wandered through ages unnumbered,
We were mad with the fever to roam,
But the new flag that waves at Manila
Proclaims that your sons have come home.
There are weeds in the Gardens of Morning,
There are mildew and dearth and decay,
And your blind days are drear and your heart has grown sore,
The years that your sons were away.

But turn your old eyes to the seaward
Where the flag of the West is discerned.
Be glad, gray old Mother of Nations,
The youth of the world has returned.
They come with the wealth of their wanderings,
They come with the strength of their pride:
Now, old mother, arise and lift up your dim eyes—
Behold your strong sons at your side.

They will toil in your Gardens of Morning,
They will cleanse you of mire and fen;
You shall hear the glad laughter of children,
You shall see the strong arms of young men.
New hope shall come back to your borders,
Despair from your threshold is spurned,
A new day shall rise in your Orient skies—
The youth of the world has returned.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. I now desire to return the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROSIUS. I have no time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. FLEMING. I think he might allow me to ask him one question, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would permit it. I only want to ask him if he does not——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not seem to yield.

Mr. BROSIUS. If I had anything to yield, it would give me the profoundest satisfaction; but I have nothing to yield; and if anybody will yield it to me, I will be delighted to yield to my friend.

Mr. FLEMING. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if I can get the time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will give you thirty seconds.

Mr. FLEMING. I simply want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. BROSIUS. I may not be able to answer it in thirty seconds.

Mr. FLEMING. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. MOODY. This does not come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. FLEMING. If he does not think that the prose interpretation of this poetry is simply this, that the boys in Asia—old mother Asia—that went out to war, they want them to come back with rifles and cannon to shoot down the boys that stayed at home?

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to make a complete exhibit of the Treasury situation. Later in the session I will do so. I desire, however, at this moment to congratulate the House and the country on the fact that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on yesterday performed a duty which, if it had been discharged earlier in the session, might have saved millions to the people of the United States. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] submitted a Treasury exhibit which disclosed a mortgaged Treasury and a rapidly decreasing Treasury surplus.

As I am to yield most of my time to one of my colleagues, I desire but a moment to emphasize one or two statements of that exhibit. We have now in the Treasury, as shown by the report of the Secretary, $273,233,629.29. Two hundred millions of this cash balance was realized from the sale of bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report estimated the probable deficiency at the close of the current fiscal year at $112,000,000. That estimate, as shown by the gentleman from Illinois on yesterday, is clearly an inaccurate one, because the deficiency on the 1st of this month amounted to $93,151,000, and if the same rate of expenditure shall be maintained during the remainder of the fiscal year the deficiency will, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, amount to $159,000,000. This estimated deficiency is entirely exclusive of the $20,000,000 carried in this bill for the payment due to the Spanish Government under the treaty which has just been ratified by the Senate.

The actual expenditures of the Government for the last fiscal year amounted to $532,381,201.35. Of this amount, $56,000,000 was on account of the war with Spain.

The Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the expenditures for the present fiscal year will be $689,874,647.37, and for the ensuing fiscal year $610,958,112.

The estimated deficiency of $30,000,000 for the next fiscal year is manifestly an underestimate of at least $37,000,000, as is shown by the gentleman from Illinois.

It is obvious, therefore, that if there be no unusual obligations imposed upon the Treasury there will be a deficiency of at least $67,000,000 at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this deficiency because it is entirely exclusive of the $20,000,000 for the payment on account of the Philippines, and is entirely exclusive of the increased expenditure authorized by the Navy personnel bill, which will add, it is admitted, $2,100,000, and in my opinion $2,500,000, annually to the total of our expenditures. This deficiency is also exclusive of the cost of twelve new war ships, which, according to the newspaper reports, are included in the naval bill to be reported to the House in a few days.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And what will they cost?

Mr. DOCKERY. A battle ship fully equipped costs from five to six million dollars, and a cruiser from three to four millions.

The naval bill, according to rumor, carries three battle ships. The deficiency is also exclusive of the Cuban claims which, under the treaty just ratified, may be filed against the United States, $25,000,000 of such claims having already been filed against our Government. It is also exclusive of the $10,923,900 liabilities for public buildings, which received favorable consideration in Committee of the Whole a few days ago. It is also exclusive of the amount necessary to meet the requirements of what is known as the Hanna-Payne ocean subsidy bill, a liability which will aggregate, if that legislation is consummated, not less than $165,000,000 during the next twenty years, and probably reaching as high as $300,000,000.

This deficiency is also exclusive of the amount necessary to construct the Nicaragua Canal, estimated all the way from $115,000,000 to $200,000,000. So that, Mr. Chairman, it must be obvious to the House that during the coming fiscal year, even though we should now call a halt upon lavish expenditures, there must be another bond issue to meet the obligations of the National Treasury.

It was with real pleasure, therefore, that I heard the belated statement of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was with much pleasure that I heard "the voice of one crying in the wilderness" across the aisle, warning his party associates that the time had come for the application of rigid economy to the expenditures of this great Government.

Mr. LOUD. Would not that have been better if it had come before the appropriation for public buildings?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think so; and yet I do not desire to criticise my good friend, because he is not now present. Yes, I think it would have been more effective then than now. When the previous question was demanded on Wednesday last on the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole, a bill to give Blair, Nebr., a public building costing $43,000, I was permitted to make this statement:

Mr. DOCKERY. Just a moment. It is obvious to me, Mr. Speaker, that some of these bills are entitled to the favorable action of the House, but I am fully satisfied that a good many of them should not be approved, especially in view of the fact that the deficiency in our current revenues for the present fiscal year will be perhaps $150,000,000, and our expenses during the coming year will amount to not less than $675,000,000.

I then estimated the deficiency at $150,000,000. The chairman's estimate is now $9,000,000 larger.

That warning, Mr. Chairman, I made when confronted with an overwhelming majority favorable to the public-building bills then pending. I knew then that the Treasury deficiency for this fiscal year would be at least $150,000,000, and that the total expenditures would aggregate not less than $675,000,000 for the coming fiscal year. I uttered that word of warning to the House when facing an organized raid upon the Treasury to secure the construction of public buildings—some of them worthy, but many of them absolutely without merit.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am glad even now to have the powerful and efficient aid of my friend from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. My words have not been forceful enough to reach this House and perhaps not sufficiently potent to challenge the attention of the country, but, reenforced, as they are, by the gentleman from Illinois, I indulge the hope that during the remaining days of this session we may return to the principles of economy which command a reduction of expenditures wherever that result can be accomplished without injury to the public service.

Sir, I remember that just after the civil war Congress reveled and rioted for a time in the substance of the people; I recall that period when our expenditures reached startling proportions; I remember that, following that period, came the memorable Forty-fourth Congress. That Congress, in response to the command of the people (for they had been aroused), reduced the annual expenditures of the Government by $30,000,000.

Let me predict, Mr. Chairman, there will be another Forty-fourth Congress soon. It will not, it is true, be designated technically by that number, and I do not know whether it will be the Fifty-seventh Congress or the Fifty-eighth; but, nevertheless, a Congress will be elected and sent here—perhaps the Fifty-seventh, certainly the Fifty-eighth—animated by the spirit of the Representatives who controlled that memorable Forty-fourth Congress; and it will reduce Federal expenditures so that labor may be less heavily burdened than it is under existing conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman this question: How is it going to be possible ever to cut down expenses under the foreign policy, the policy of expansion, inaugurated by this Administration? Does not the gentleman know that the necessary and direct effect of that policy is that we must greatly augment in the future our appropriations and our expenses?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana that I recognize that, so far as the military and naval establishments are concerned, this foreign policy necessarily involves a large increase of expenditure. Yet I do believe, if the people send a Congress here that will reenact the Holman rule, permitting the repeal of legislation upon appropriation bills, that Congress can succeed in largely reducing the expenses of the Government. I share with my friend from Indiana the apprehension of constantly augmenting expenditures on account of the military and naval establishments being placed upon a war footing to maintain the foreign policy of this Administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In other words, we are to cut down the necessary expenses of this people for their internal affairs in order to build up a great Army and Navy to sustain an iniquitous foreign policy.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman from Indiana is substantially correct in that statement. But I want to say to him that somewhere—whether it be along the line of domestic expenditures or along the line of appropriations for our military and naval establishments—somewhere the pruning knife must be applied, else we must reach out again and lay additional tax burdens upon the people, who are already heavily weighted with taxation.

Congress can not lay the burden upon wealth, because the Supreme Court interposes a decision that an income tax is unconstitutional. If this policy of constantly adding to our expenditures by unwise legislation is continued and the present foreign policy maintained, Congress may be coerced into reducing the expenses of our domestic establishment so as to meet the demands of our Army and Navy upon a war footing in time of peace.

I do not agree with this policy of the Republican party. I do not expect, however, that any appeal of mine will influence the other side of the House. I do not think my appeals will avail much, although a number of gentlemen on that side of the Chamber during the recent public-building raid upon the Treasury stood valiantly for economy in national expenditures. I hardly expect to secure very many recruits from Republican Representatives here, but I do appeal to gentlemen on this side—especially to the Representatives from the South, descendants of the men who for sixty long years controlled and dominated the policies of this Government.

Sir, say what you may about "the old South," about its haughty and aristocratic leaders (as they are characterized by some), it nevertheless is true that while they were ofttimes prodigal in their own personal expenditures, yet so thoroughly were they imbued with the fundamental doctrines of the Democratic party during the long period in which they guided its destinies they still guarded the National Treasury against extravagance and corruption. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to-day especially to the descendants of those illustrious men—members of the great party in which we are honored with membership—I appeal to them to stand by the cardinal tenets of our organization at this perilous time when there is a growing disposition to revel and to riot in the money of the people. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 4382. An act to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

S. 5355. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings ship channel, in Aransas County, Tex.;"

S. 5086. An act for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg.;

S. 5076. An act authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes; and

S. 5006. An act to restore to their original status as to promotion officers of the Navy and Marine Corps losing numbers by reason of the advancement of other officers for exceptional and meritorious service during the war with Spain.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] has called the attention of the House and, I hope, of the country, to the state of affairs at present existing, which may be ignored here now, but which certainly must be made note of at no distant time. Ever since this Congress began there has been a degree of recklessness in public expenditure which, in ordinary times and under ordinary circumstances, truly would be appalling. It seems to make no difference to some gentlemen how great expenditures are, or how heavy may be the burdens upon the people in order to meet them.

My colleague, who is exceedingly well informed upon these matters, and whose remarks, however brief, deserve the careful consideration of those who would be enlightened on the subject treated, hopes that under the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations there may be, in the declining hours of this session, a turning toward economy and from extravagance. That, in my judgment, is a vain hope. That leadership is a leadership toward economy in public expenditure when that economy does not interfere with the leader. But when economy does not subserve his purposes, then he can lead or follow, as the case may be, in the direction of reckless and extravagant expenditure, as fast and as far as any.

The suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] that, by the imperial policy entered upon by the party in power, there will be created a necessity for extraordinary expenditures which must swell the total, is one, too, that may be ignored here and now, but one, Mr. Chairman, that certainly will challenge the attention of the people of the United States, when they come to pay the increased taxes, which surely will be necessarily imposed to meet the burdens fixed upon them by the increased outlay, and the issuance of bonds; and the question arises, How are these taxes to be raised? How are the extraordinary obligations of the Government made in this manner to be met? There is no one upon the other side of the House who has addressed himself to the question, who seems ready to answer it, or to be able to furnish information.

There is a blind crusade toward something, they know not what. They have started out on new paths; they are plowing strange fields; they seem to be intoxicated with the spectacle opening up before them; utterly indifferent to the facts, or absolutely ignorant as to whether they are nearing the precipice or the morass; led on by false lights and following devious ways, instead of going straight ahead under the guidance of that light which for a hundred years American statesmen have followed, with results so fruitful of good to our country and to the human race.

In this time, Mr. Chairman, of great extravagance, how strange it is that the party in power, if it wishes to deal fairly with the people, shows no thought of their burdens and avoids a recurrence, so natural, to that species of legislation which will cast part of the load of taxation upon the wealth of the nation, upon the people who are best able to bear it. Why have we not tried, in this emergency, the raising of funds for the war by the agency of a just income tax? It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States decided—overruling the precedents and disregarding the principles of a hundred years to do it—that the income-tax provision in the Wilson bill is unconstitutional; and yet there is a saving clause even in that decision, which points to the fact that in times of public necessity, to meet war expenditures, such legislation would be constitutional.

When legislation to raise money to carry on the war was to be enacted, our friends on the other side scornfully rejected the proposition, which came from this side, for the imposition of this just, equal legislation—an income tax. Instead of that they are willing to place the additional annual burden of fifty millions, or a hundred millions or more, as the case may be, upon the heavily burdened taxpayers of the country, who are least able to bear the taxation, instead of applying a just principle which would operate equally and fairly upon all.

Now, when the plaintive cry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is raised, urging simply a little economy here and there, but nowhere in the region where he is interested, the endeavor to turn to an available, a just means of taxation, which would meet the requirements without imposing any burden on the masses of the people—the income tax, so fruitful for the Treasury of the United States—we are met with a gleeful denial that such a provision shall ever be enacted into law by the United States.

I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] that he favors this imperial policy which has been entered upon; that he fears that, within the narrow confines of the United States of America, there is not room enough to grow and expand: that population is becoming too dense; that there is too much jostling of man against man; that we need a broader field for our future operations; and that we must seek amongst those islands, thousands of miles away in the Philippine Archipelago, a new field in which to grow and expand and perform and work out the destiny which has been set before us.

We owe an extraordinary duty, it seems, to the Filipinos. A year ago, perhaps hardly one among twenty intelligent people of the country had more than the vaguest knowledge that such people existed at all; and, even at this hour, the wisest of the expansionists will differ by hundreds as to the number of islands embraced in this remarkable find. A few, it is true, may know something about the number, and little else; and yet, with the limited knowledge possessed upon so important a subject and all that it involves, we are to appropriate the money, $20,000,000, to acquire the Spanish title to these almost unknown possessions.

We are about making an investment in real estate, and about purchasing some chattels expected to go with the real estate. Are we buying 2,000 islands? They do not know. Only a thousand? They can not tell you. But 500? Perhaps; but they must investigate further before they can say. At all events, we need them! At all events, we can not grow and expand and meet the requirements of "manifest destiny," unless we have those distant islands of the sea.

What are we to do with them? Oh, they do not know. They do not attempt to tell us. Every one of them, I believe, who has spoken in a way that might be regarded as oracular, with the exception of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], took especial pains to declare that he had no knowledge of the purposes of the Administration; that he knew not what was to be done; that especially he wished the House and the country to understand that he spoke only for himself.

An occasional one would be quite well satisfied that, pursuing this track of manifest destiny as he thought he saw it, we would achieve great success in the Orient; we would attach to this country permanently, with the blessed chains of affection and under the shadowing folds of the grand old flag, those distant islands and that distant people. Another, also without authority to speak for anybody, confining his remarks to himself and binding nobody else, was quite well satisfied that in a comparatively short time we would retire with honor from the Philippines, somehow, in some way, turning over those islands to the inhabitants.

Somebody suggests that the President ought to have a policy and ought to disclose it. Why, no, they say, the President ought not to have a policy. Simply give him the Army. Give him all the Army he wants. Give him all the Navy he calls for. Give him all the money that you can rake and scrape. "I have confidence in the President," say the gentlemen. That is an answer to everybody and everything. What is the President going to do, or what is to be the result? What is to be the cost? They do not know. They do not even speculate upon it except along the lines of glittering generalities. But they do say, as all-sufficient, "I have confidence in the President. I can trust the President."

Why, the Constitution and our constituents, Mr. Chairman, have placed some trust in us. It may not be well reposed, but yet we came here of our own volition, and in many instances made a considerable effort to come. [Laughter.] And really we are charged with some duties, now that we are here.

I am not one of those who are going to indulge in harsh criticism of the President because he has not declared some policy. I believe that the Presidential policy ought to be the policy of the Congress of the United States; his duty, simply to execute the laws that we make. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe the duty to declare a policy is here. The Congress ought to declare what is to be done. The Congress ought to fix the bounds and the limits. The Congress ought to confer power and withhold power. Instead of that, this gentleman and the other gentleman on the other side does not know anything about what the purposes are; but he has confidence in the President! Therefore he is in favor of making the Army a hundred thousand men; would make it 500,000 if the President suggested it. He is in favor of stumbling along in the dark blindfolded, because he has confidence in the President!

Here is a proposition now to appropriate $20,000,000. A short little paragraph, but it means $20,000,000 from the American people, when expenditures are outstripping receipts. It means a draft of $20,000,000 upon the industries, the hopes, and the possessions of the people, not only in the present, but in the future. Twenty millions of dollars—a mere bagatelle! Twenty millions of dollars for the acquisition of that territory and that people.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] suggests that we will remain over there a long time. We are to go as the pioneers of commerce, and commerce is to draw in its wake civilization and Christianity. Here is the grand procession, in the regular order. The flag of the United States of America, far away from its home, far away from republican territory, far in the Orient—the home of the race, the gentleman suggests. And then the beneficent march behind it of commerce, civilization, and Christianity! And what may happen here meanwhile? How shall our people here fare? Oh, it is enough upon that point to say, as gentlemen do say, "I have confidence in the President. I am willing to trust the President." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, if this $20,000,000 is to be appropriated now, why ought not this House to fix the bounds and the limits? Do you propose to take in those Philippine Islands as a part and a parcel of our domain, part and parcel of the territory of the United States, to endure and to continue such as long as we can hold them? If you do, say so. If you do not, say not. If you do not know, then why the hot haste for your legislation; why the extraordinary demand for a very large army?

Why the imperious spirit here and in the other end of the Capitol, which rejects all suggestion of amendment; which at the same time that it proclaims that you know not whether your policy is to be temporary or permanent, that you know not whether you are to acquire this territory as a permanent acquisition or for a short time, yet demands the Army permanently; insists upon an army of a hundred thousand men; causes the huge expenditures that are made directly, and the greater expenditures that will follow in their wake, through the extravagance and recklessness and general demoralization which certainly must attend this loose legislation and looser policy? You want so many things permanently; but what will you do with them, how long will you use them? Oh, excuse you from saying anything about that! The President has not informed you, and you do not know.

It has been suggested that the President did not bring on this Spanish war. Perhaps not. Ought the President, therefore, to have an opportunity to make war perpetual? Has the President such an opportunity, or ought one to be made for him?

It is not quite true, however, that the President did not have anything to do with bringing on the Spanish-American war. The President had a great deal to do with it. The sentiment of the country, the sentiment of the Senate, the sentiment of the House, was overwhelming in favor of that measure of justice and decency which would have found expression in the recognition of Cuban belligerency.

The Administration stood against it, and against it stood its agent and henchman, the effective servant of the Administration here, the gentleman who presides over the deliberations of this House. Injustice has been done the Speaker, in the country. Of course I do not take upon myself the duty of setting him right, because he can set himself right, if he chooses to do so. It has gone to the country that the Speaker of the House was opposed to the war. On the contrary, no man in the country, no dozen men in the country, did so much to bring about the war, to make the conditions which made war inevitable, as the Speaker of this House. He did it by suppressing debate; he did it by suppressing the judgment and the sentiment and the conscience of men upon the other side of this Chamber. He did it here in this House, with the iron hand.

Some supposed that he would not be so subservient to the wishes and so ready in compliance with the demands or the purposes of the Administration. Certainly they must have been mistaken about it. Had the President been here himself, he could not have done, and he would not have done, what was done for him by the representative of his party in the Speaker's chair. He would not have attempted to suppress the judgment and the conscience of the House, and to be himself the whole House. He would not have dammed up the waters until a flood was inevitable.

Why, two things, notwithstanding the opinion of my colleague on the subject—I refer to Mr. CLARK—two things, more than all other things, brought about the war; but really the prime one thing was the suppression of the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House. The House of Representatives would have declared and done what was American and what should have been done; what was humane, patriotic, and noble; and the House of Representatives was prevented from doing it. And then indignation was abroad in the country. The desire to do what ought to be done increased with every obstacle placed in the way of its execution.

Then came about the condition of things that, in order to appease public sentiment, in order to allure the American people into the belief that something American was to be done, the ill-starred battle ship Maine, with the consent and approval of Spain, was sent to Havana; and, unforeseen by every American, the Administration and everybody in the country, that ship was sent to the bottom of Havana Bay, with the brave men who manned her. Then American patriotism and American courage and American manhood rose and swelled above all the petty bounds, above all the obstacles that could be thrown in the way. Then, with the wild tumult and outburst of American patriotism, the war came. Then we were hurried and carried into the war.

But no matter how we got into war; no matter who put us into the war, are we to continue perpetually in warfare? Who can tell when peace will reign in those islands, provided we take up the Spanish title, such as it is, and with it take up also the Spanish policy of repression and aggression; provided we throw to the winds as we cross the calm Pacific into tropical storms the principles which have made us great, and there impose upon a distant people a government which they do not desire?

Who knows how long this may last? Who knows how many gallant American soldiers may be laid in their last resting places close by the shore of this or that island, as vainly they attempt to push into the interior and conquer it, as for two hundred years Spaniards have fought and died and not conquered the interior of a single one of those islands? Then if you do conquer, if you do subdue, if you do bring peace to those islands, what have you? What are you going to do with islands or islanders? How are you going to deal with them, except under the Constitution of the United States? Can you, on the contrary, operate outside of the Constitution? Is that your design?

Are you going to throw the Constitution to the winds? Are you going to turn your backs on the teachings of your fathers? Is the experience of one hundred years to be thrown away, only to establish a new and distinct form of government from that our fathers made, and which it is our duty to uphold because we know well it is blessed? There is no easy stopping in the downward course if you once enter upon it.

Some gentlemen think a great work of patriotism was accomplished when the treaty with Spain was ratified, without the declaration of any policy, without amendment; that it is a mighty triumph of American patriotism. Why ought it to have been ratified without amendment, provided amendment would make it better? The question of whether amendment would make it better or not is a debatable one. The man who thinks it would, certainly displays as much character and ability, in standing for that which he believes is right, as the other man who accepts blindly, relying on the President in excuse for recklessly plunging into the dark, by ratification without qualification.

I feared, I fear now, that following the ratification of that treaty will come the appeal to American pride and American vanity: Shall we part with a portion of our territory? Shall we declare that what we have attempted we can not do? Shall we confess in the face of the world that we are unequal to the task we have assumed?

Gentlemen, what are you going to do? Are you going to perpetuate a military government in the Philippines? If not, how long is your reign to endure? Who is to fix its bounds; who is to terminate it? Upon what basis is it to be terminated?

Who is to make the laws for the Philippines? Who is to make the laws for Porto Rico? Who is to make the laws for Cuba? No power or agency is supplied or suggested so far, except the will of the President of the United States. You may be willing to transfer to him the legislative power, you may be willing to tear the Constitution to shreds, in your confidence in your present Chief Executive, but I certainly am not willing to do so. The harm done may not be so much in specific acts of the President as in the evils sure to flow from autocratic rule.

You are luring the American people into the belief and hope that they can depart with safety, and probably with profit, from the principles to which they and their fathers before them adhered through storm and sunshine, in peace and in war, with this party and that party dominant, as parties rose and fell, for over one hundred years. When once you have broken the image in the heart of self-governing American manhood, when once you have torn down the altar at which American freeman have worshiped, it may be you can set up again the image, and it may be you can build anew the altar; but history is against it. Every milestone in the progress of the race, upward or downward, since the world began, is mutely eloquent in admonition to us. The chronicles of the ages are big with the lesson that when republics turn toward imperialism, turn backward, it is only a question of time when the end will come.

What a magnificent domain we have! How broad the area of the forty-five free States and the four or five Territories that constitute the birthright of American citizenship! And yet do we need more! What for? Who is crowded? Where does population press upon population? Where are our energies impaired or dwarfed because our population is too dense? Why, in many parts of the country the virgin soil is hardly yet broken. Primeval forests and prairie grass yet remain where a hundred millions could dwell unhampered. The bowels of the earth are full almost to bursting with their richness of mineral wealth.

Upon every hand, whether in the fullness of maturity or the virgin freshness of budding promise, the grandeur of American opportunity invites every American citizen, under the protecting folds of our own flag, within the sacred guardianship of our own Constitution, to renewed effort for expansion and growth and glory in our own home country and hemisphere. And upon all this, recklessly, in the dark, knowing not where you are going, having fixed for yourselves no bounds, utterly ignorant of the results that may follow, you are turning your backs. You take the road through the graveyard of republics without being able to tell, without caring even to ask, where, when, or how you will stop or be stopped.

Now, how much better it would be, it seems to me, for the party in control of the Government and for the nation if the President, its Chief Executive, were constrained to use his powers—if the Government in all its branches would employ its energies—toward holding the American people in loving trust in their own country; to help our countrymen to dwell upon the glories to be won here, in view of the glories that have been won here; to help them to look forward to the coming years of their own lives, and in blissful hope to the lives of their children and their children's children, anticipating the growth of our great Republic, with the Western Hemisphere big enough for it. That would be better far than chasing phantoms in the China Sea.

In this magnificent domain, this splendid heritage, this rich and glorious territory devoted and dedicated to freedom, we are working out the grandest experiment in free government and the elevation of mankind ever known or ever dreamed of by sage, seer, or poet. But all this is to be abandoned. Twenty million dollars for two thousand islands, or one thousand islands, or five hundred islands, and for eight or ten or twelve million people! Twenty million dollars! Twenty million dollars from these white American citizens—$20,000,000 from these Caucasian freemen—$20,000,000 from the toiling American patriots—to buy troubles far away, to be added to the troubles at home, and to intensify them!

Can there be no pause in this progress downward? Must you grope and plunge in darkness? Will you not stop? Will you not think? Will you not determine where you are going; whether you wish to go so far?

Mr. Chairman, how easy it would be even now, in this late day of the session, upon this very bill, to put into the law of the country what you desire to do. Do you wish to hold these islands permanently?

Then away with all this talk about getting out of them as soon as possible, about leading those people onward and upward until they shall be capable of taking care of themselves. Let the American public know, if you can, what they have to face. Let them see the worst from the beginning. If, upon the contrary, it be your purpose to depart from these islands in a year, two years, or five years—to depart from them in a reasonable time—why can not you declare it and make it law? Why can you not declare yourselves and assure the country, by legislation upon this bill?

Are you going to educate the Filipinos up until they reach the average of American citizenship? A hundred years—aye, a thousand years—any period this side of the millennium—will find your task uncompleted. Are you going to educate them up to the point when they shall be capable of self-government? What do you mean by self-government? Do you propose to hold those people until there can be formed in their islands a government the equal of ours? If so, vain is your task; idle is your dream.

Such a thing never can be accomplished, and you know it. But self-government does not involve the idea of having a government as good as the best. Self-government, as far as we are concerned with the Filipinos and their islands, if we will be just to our own people and faithful to the principles which have been laid down for our government and which the fathers followed, means simply to let those people take care of themselves, free from interference on our part. "But," somebody says, "the islands will be overrun. A stronger power will come in and subdue the Filipinos." Are we to stand as guardians for them? Who limits our guardianship to the Philippine Islands? Why not stand guardian for the Chinese? Why not plunge into the jungles of Africa? Why not go into far Central America?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] suggests that if we are to be the leading nation of the Anglo-Saxon race, we must undertake these tasks and perform them. Sir, our tasks are here. Our duty is to our own people. [Applause.] When we have builded a greater republic here, when we have advanced in the development of our resources, when we have furnished the steady light for the guidance of the world, then we shall have performed well our part in history. Here is our theater. Here Providence has cast our lot. Here is the scene of our duty. Here is the field of the glorious achievements of our fathers. Here is the arena for our children. Why seek to enlarge it in the Old World? Why seek to add to it that which never can be harmonized with it?

Some gentlemen suggest that the Filipinos shall not come in as citizens of the United States. That is a confession of the whole offense. What, then, do you want with them? What is to be their relation to the people of this country, if they are not to become citizens of the United States? I do not wish them to be citizens of the United States. I do not believe in lowering the level of citizenship so that they can reach it. I do not believe in adding to the bulk of illiteracy, of venality, of corruption, that which is to come in by the incorporation of the Filipinos.

But do you say, "Let us hold them?" What a magnificent spectacle that would be to the rest of the world! What a travesty upon republicanism for the giant Republic, the exemplar Republic, the Republic in the van, to go into the business of holding colonies and subduing and governing people as the monarchies, absolute and despicable, do!

What encouragement, Mr. Chairman, could we thus afford to struggling humanity the world over? How many thousands, aye, how many millions of people, have looked across the dark scenes of the present, hoping to see the brighter light of the future—hoping to see the gleam of the star of liberty blazing in the great Republic of America, in the western world, and trusting that thence the inspiration would come, teaching that man can govern himself, and inviting the brave, the resolute, the true, the generous, to escape from onerous conditions existing and partake of that liberty which we Americans long have enjoyed.

What message shall we send out to those people if, instead of continuing the champion of personal liberty, we now turn to be the oppressor? How shall we hope to maintain a Government such as we have so long boasted of—a Government of freemen by freemen—if the Government itself is to engage in the business of subjugating and oppressing the Filipinos, lately our allies, in another hemisphere? How shall we hope, after having taken up the business of protecting the oppressed and affording an asylum to the weak and suffering throughout the whole world, to escape condemnation, if in turn, we, ourselves, adopt a policy of subjugation and force rule?

But here are practical questions. What are the results to be? What the benefits? What is the return which is to come to us for the abandonment of the principles of our forefathers and the policy of our Government? The trade returns manifestly will be insignificant. We are told that we will secure "the trade of those islands." Ah, Mr. Chairman, if our people could have the opportunity which would come to them under just laws, to sail the seas with freedom, and participate in the commerce of other lands, under wise and proper legislation, there would be no trouble about commercial progress.

Under wise regulations the commercial instincts of the people will take care of our interests. Our manufacturers, our farmers, our tradesmen, our laboring people, all can win anywhere in the markets of the world, if the restrictions which now hamper them are removed. They need not fear competition with any other nation on the face of the earth. There is no necessity for the acquisition of these Asiatic islands. There is no menace to our present security, for lack of territory. The hopes for the future do not rest upon such course as the party in power blindly would force upon the people. There is nothing of an inducement in the future, to warrant us in incurring all of the dangers of this scheme in the far East, and flying from the inviting fields which are challenging our energies in the Western World.

Will you not, my friends, before going to a point from which you can not return, even if you would, declare in this very bill that your hold in the Philippines is only a temporary one; that we are there by the chance of war and the necessity of circumstances, rather than by design on our part, or in pursuit of a policy in the direction of imperialism; that soon, and we hope very soon, the prows of our vessels will be turned toward our own land—"the land of the free and the home of the brave"—that soon the last of our heroic soldiers will be on their way to the American shores; that through us soon the Filipinos will have that liberty which we claim to prize so highly—freedom to govern themselves, well or ill, according to their own ability? If that be done now, the benedictions of the people of the land we leave will be mingled with the benedictions of our own people, to whose shores we return; and the President and the party in power will receive the approbation of the populace of the entire United States, simply for doing what it ought to be natural and easy to do.

But, on the contrary, you seem to be turning away from the opportunities which present themselves. You are trampling upon the opportunity fate has brought to you. You are refusing to do for humanity what seems to have been allotted to you to do. You are plunging into an unfathomed gulf, knowing not and seemingly not caring where your landing will be or what will happen.

If the President of the United States, if the Congress of the United States, would authoritatively proclaim to the entire world that we are not usurpers; that we believe in republican principles and the republican doctrines to which we have adhered for so many years; that we are not turning our backs on the ark of safety which so long has protected us—it would be well. In giving liberty to the yellow men of the Philippine Islands we would simply be acting in harmony with the traditions and policies of our own people. Our example then would be grand and unique in the history of the world.

Let us hope—although I fear the hope is vain, but I wish it were otherwise—let us hope that the shackles which bind the House may be riven, and the American Representative, realizing that he is here where he should speak and act for probably 200,000 American people, may rise to the dignity of the occasion and the honorable position in which he is placed, assert his manhood and, acting in behalf of the constituency behind him, sustain the principles and the doctrines of the Constitution of the United States. I am for free government here, opposed to oppression the wide world over.

No expressions about who will haul down the flag affect me. No talk about "manifest destiny," which is concealed from everybody, even those who speak upon it, amounts to argument or reason. If we are true to our trust we will hesitate, we will halt, we will turn back, before we hurl our American fellow-citizens into a sea of debt and overwhelm them with a flood of difficulties.

It is not too late to retrace the false steps taken in haste. Much of the vantage ground was lost, much was lost to America, when the treaty was ratified without amendment or condition. But all is not yet lost. But a little while hence, let this Congress expire, let matters drift on, and then, I warn you now, you will find men rising up here and there and everywhere, and out of pride, or vanity if you please to call it so, protesting against parting with territory "which belongs to us."

They will say, "It is ours. We bought it. We shed blood for it. We hold it. We will not confess that our venture is a failure. Perhaps we ought not to have entered upon this project; perhaps we ought not to have engaged in this enterprise; but we are in it, and we will fight it through. We will endure and suffer; we will risk our fabric of government and the hope not only of coming generations here, but of humanity upon it."

Let us not stumble along blindfolded until the fact, that we never have parted with any territory once regarded as our own, may be used as an argument and a sentiment against doing what is certain, if we persist in this course of imperialism, soon to be proved necessary for our own welfare—to get away from the Orient and devote our energies to our own country and hemisphere, to the protection and the upbuilding of our own institutions at home. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BENNETT). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Whom does the Chair recognize?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky upon the other side [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. PUGH. Reserving the remainder of my time, I desire to yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as one who would much rather pay $20,000,000 to be honorably rid of the Philippines than to pay $20,000,000 for them, I wish briefly to state my reasons for voting for this appropriation, and I feel that I have the more title to do so because it seems to me rather a gross case of larceny on the part of the Appropriations Committee to control this resolution and to take it from the committee to which I belong.

The rules of this House provide that the relations of the United States with foreign nations, including appropriations therefor, shall go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which language would certainly include this payment; but I suppose the Committee on Appropriations, with their natural proclivity for appropriating, seeing this little item of $20,000,000 lying about, appropriated it, as they would a vacant clerkship, and I am ready to admit that it probably is the simplest and the best way to bring it before the House, and that it makes little difference.

I do not arise now because I have a speech to deliver, for I only reached here from a necessary absence this morning and unexpectedly find this subject up, so that I am entirely unprepared; but no one whom I have heard or read has exactly expressed my views, and as this is the last opportunity before the Philippines pass from the sphere of foreign affairs into that of territories, I wish to state my opinion of the transfer.

I have heard some abuse of the Administration here and some sarcasm even on this side of the House, with which I do not at all sympathize. Through the critical times before the breaking out of the war and during its magnificent progress the President had not only my hearty support, but my enthusiastic admiration. At the time of the signing of the protocol I considered the annexation of the Philippines undesirable and unwise, and I had good reason to think I was still in full accord with the Administration.

I have not at all changed my opinions, but I recognize that to continue always of the same opinion is no proof of being right and that new facts and changed conditions may properly alter conclusions. I have entire confidence in the high purpose and patriotism of the Administration; and although I have not approved its recent policy of ratifying the treaty without any declaration of our future intentions, yet that issue is now past and the future will determine its wisdom.

Originally I did not see why we should take anything more than the harbor of Manila, or at most the island of Luzon. The other islands we had not captured or invaded. We were under no obligation to them, and they could easily be ignored. Any acquisition there more than a harbor and port seemed to me a misfortune, bringing to us a half-civilized people impossible of assimilation, a country fertile indeed, but with a climate unfit for our citizens or soldiers, and a difficulty of administration which would put to test our republican virtues.

I fear that it will be difficult to maintain a pure government at such a distance without the restraining influence of an alert press and a powerful public opinion, and a general publicity such as obtains here. And I fear that the habitual denial of the equality of men and the consent of the governed, which will be necessary there, will react here at home, and may tend to make us less mindful of these fundamental bulwarks of our strength.

Every thoughtful American citizen will agree that our future safety and prosperity and greatness depend upon our respect for these inherited principles. And to hold territories when we can not apply these principles at all will be apt to raise at home questions of their vitality, and create a doubt whether here, too, caste and inequality and subserviency should not flourish. The expense of such possessions we are already feeling. I see that one of our prominent military authorities said yesterday in New York that our probability of war was increased a hundred per cent.

Our Army and Navy must grow in proportion. The war revenue is still insufficient for our expenses. And for it all I see no compensating advantage. To gain our share in the trade of the East a great port like Manila is sufficient without encumbering ourselves with other islands. So that on merely selfish grounds I was opposed to these larger acquisitions. But the argument was urged with force, Can we turn these people back to the tyranny of Spain? We owe a duty to them dating from our accidental connection which we can not ignore. That duty we could have well admitted and assumed and yet not incorporated these people into our Republic.

To my mind this has been the serious mistake. The treaty should have been so framed or so amended that we should only assume a temporary protectorate as in Cuba, so that when they were fit for self-government we could set them free if we wished it and must if they wished it. That would have been in strict accord with the humanitarian spirit in which we declared the war. It would have saved us the battle which I have just heard is raging to-day between our soldiers and the Filipinos.

Of course when the armed conflict is on, every American's sympathy and support is with the American soldier. We all glory in their bravery and perpetual success. Yet we all feel, too, that conflict with those to whom we wish to bring peace and freedom and improvement is deplorable and pitiful. It reminds us of the satirical remark of one of our colleagues months ago, "We are going to carry them the Bible in one hand and the shotgun in the other; and if they will not subscribe to one, we will shoot the down with the other."

I trust the blame for this collision is all with our antagonists. Certainly I shall believe so until the contrary is proved. And yet we must remember that one of the weaknesses of military administration is that the best soldier is not always also the most tactful diplomat. Indeed, we have recently had graphic illustration that a very high position in the Army does not always accompany temperance of language or self-restraint. [Laughter.]

Even in this House I have heard remarks about our allies whose wisdom I questioned. A fortnight ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] had a controversy as to whether Aguinaldo was a second George Washington or a second Benedict Arnold. I do not know which was right; I do not believe either of them does, though both think they do. That is one of the troubles with our new venture, that although we have got beyond Mr. Dooley's uncertainty as to whether the Philippines are islands or canned goods, it is very difficult to get definite knowledge.

But inasmuch as Aguinaldo was at that time our ally, the most important personage in the island, the commander of a large force which his personality had assembled and with which we wished friendship, it seemed to me that it was much more politic to call him George Washington than Benedict Arnold; and though I should never have characterized the gentleman from Indiana as a diplomatic person, he was more discreet than the gentleman from Ohio.

The argument has been put forward elsewhere that although we do not want the Philippines permanently, and by holding them until they were fit for self-government we should be doing our whole duty to them and relieving ourselves, yet it was better not to bind ourselves to that in advance, but to wait until the time for release came.

But in that way we expose ourselves to the suspicion of acting selfishly and graspingly. Perhaps we can afford to be, regardless of the opinion of the rest of the world; but there was one people to whom we might well have given a formal pledge of our disinterestedness, and that was the Filipinos themselves. Then I greatly fear that unless settled in advance there will always be reasons for postponing the settlement. The selfish interests of investors and capitalists and speculators in the new territory will always oppose it.

Those who sincerely desire a great expansion of our power, who see us the center of a great colonial empire, will always oppose it. They say nothing now, except "Wait until the time comes;" but for them the time will never come. I do not wish to see this country a great military power. Before this war proved our martial skill and valor, we were the greatest world power, not by force of arms, but by the influence of our ideas and principles, which have acted more on other nations and achieved more change and progress in this century than all the armaments of the world.

Then, too, the cry, "Don't haul down the flag," will always be used to prevent abandoning the islands, but every successful nation has often hauled down its flag. It is not a mark of weakness or of cowardice, but often shows a loftier courage and a nobler heroism than was required to raise it. We shall haul down our flag in Cuba, but I suspect that unless we had made our declaration of that purpose at the beginning of the war we should never achieve it. I feel that if we were consulting only our own interests, Cuba would be a far more advantageous acquisition for us than all the other dependencies of Spain combined. But because of a resolution which had no binding force except on our honor no one has suggested yielding to that temptation, and no one, I trust, ever will.

If we should ever desire to separate from the Philippines, it is uncertain how under the present treaty we could accomplish it. Our Constitution provides for admitting new States, for taking new territory, and we have tested its provisions in that regard, but it does not provide for setting off portions of our territory, unless the provision "to dispose of" territory covers it. We have thus far no guide of experience. And we are similarly at a loss what constitutional rights the people of this new territory have.

Whether they have all the rights of citizens, including immigration, trial by jury, etc., whether customs duties there must be the same as here, are all unsettled and great divergence of opinion already appears. I think those who reserve their judgment are most discreet. On doubtful questions of constitutional law, applying the words of the Constitution to facts which it framers certainly did not have in mind, men always have been governed largely by their wishes.

If a question is very doubtful, one's mind may well be swayed by what he thinks is for the good of the State. Men might argue in opposition to annexation that it gave the natives all the rights of citizens, who, after annexation was accomplished, would hold it most undesirable that they should have a citizen's constitutional rights. Most important and difficult constitutional questions will now arise. One good result may be that it will turn men's thoughts again to the study of the Constitution, and possibly once more, as in former days, make party divisions depend on constitutional interpretations.

Albert Gallatin wrote in 1841:

> The objects to which our faculties are applied have a necessary influence over our minds. How diminutive, nay, pitiful those appear which now engross public attention and for which parties contend when compared with those for which the founders of the Republic staked their fortunes and their lives.

Possibly the renewed study of the Constitution may do us more good than the harm I dread from our new territories.

I shall at the proper time offer an amendment declaring that we do not contemplate permanent sovereignty of the Philippines. I am aware it will be of doubtful efficacy, that the appropriate time was at Paris or in the Senate. By a statement then, it seems to me, all our duty to the Filipinos, our missionary purposes could have been effected, and most of our embarrassments avoided. But a declaration now might bind us in honor to free them if they wished.

I shall, however, at all events vote for this appropriation. I recognize that the Constitution gives the Senate power to make treaties; that by their vote this treaty is now a law of the land, and under it this twenty millions is due to Spain, and I shall vote to discharge that legal debt. I do it with regret that the form of the treaty is not different, that the slight changes which would have removed my objections and relieved us from such a permanent burden and made improbable our present state of war were not made, but I can only hope my forebodings may not be realized. [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 4, 1899:

H. R. 312. An act granting a pension to Ellen Wright;

H. R. 2026. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Halter;

H. R. 4973. An act granting a pension to Jacob N. Atherton;

H. R. 6635. An act granting a pension to George B. Stone;

H. R. 4973. An act granting a pension to May J. Brown;

H. R. 5069. An act granting a pension to Jacob N. Atherton;

H. R. 2867. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Briggs;

H. R. 8037. An act granting a pension to Lizzie Waltz;

H. R. 5402. An act to increase the pension of Louis Hirsch;

H. R. 8862. An act granting an increase of pension to Jorden Thomas;

H. R. 4173. An act granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Otis;

H. R. 8299. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Tefft;

H. R. 9295. An act granting an increase of pension to Justin O. Hottenstein;

H. R. 6411. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry K. Opp;

H. R. 3790. An act to remove the charge of desertion against John Willoughby;

H. R. 7561. An act to correct the military record of William P. Brassington;

H. R. 11157. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11116. An act to authorize the Little River Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, in the Indian Territory, and branches thereof, and for other purposes.

On February 8, 1899:

H. R. 637. An act for the benefit of J. C. Rudd;

H. R. 10666. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the use of the buildings of Fort Supply Military Reservation by Oklahoma Territory for an insane asylum;

H. R. 774. An act for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard;

H. R. 2274. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Daniel Straw, late private, Company F, Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers;

H. R. 10912. An act for adjusting clothing account for deceased soldiers in certain cases; and

H. R. 6901. An act to prevent the abatement of certain actions.

On February 9, 1899:

H. R. 11487. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900;

H. R. 11036. An act to restore Capt. Robert W. Dowdy to the active list of the Army;

H. R. 967. An act to correct the war record of George W. McBride;

H. Res. 344. Joint resolution granting authority to the Republic of Venezuela to send a cadet to West Point Military Academy;

H. R. 10316. An act granting a pension to Georgie Smiley; and

H. R. 10509. An act to authorize the Missouri and Kansas Telephone Company to construct and maintain lines and offices for general business purposes in the Ponca, Otoe, and Missouria Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to my friend from Massachusetts for the purpose of addressing the committee, but I would not have it understood by the House that I therefore indorse his argument as to the policy of the Government with respect to the Philippine Islands, and much less would I have it understood that I approve the sentiment he has enunciated that the committee of which I have the honor to be a member has been guilty of grand larceny. In the hope that I may find an opportunity on some occasion to refute the charges, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, I only wish to say that I have no doubt that the gentleman from Kentucky understood how serious my charges were. [Laughter.]

Mr. PUGH. Of course I was not disposed to give a serious interpretation to the remark.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy the five minutes allotted to me to give notice that at the proper time in the consideration of this bill I will offer, as an additional section or otherwise, as may be deemed best, the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Grey Town, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Grey Town, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest depth now in use, and it shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Grey Town to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such fortifications for defense as will be required for the convenience and safety of all vessels desiring the use of said canal.

SEC. 3. That in making surveys for and in the construction of said canal and harbors, the President may detail such number of engineer officers of the Army and Navy or employ such civil engineers as may be necessary, and may require of them the performance of such professional duties as he may desire. The Secretary of War shall have power to enter into contracts for the performance of all or such portion of the work as may be necessary to most speedily and advantageously complete the construction of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $115,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of the work herein authorized, said money to be drawn from the Treasury from time to time, as the same shall be needed, upon warrants of the President made and verified by the chief engineer in charge of the work and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire, Mr. Chairman, as explanatory of the motive for offering this proposition as an amendment to the pending bill, to refer to the statement made on yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which I assume is an authoritative statement, although not made as such, that it was not the intention to allow this bill to which the amendment refers to be considered by this Congress. I shall therefore offer this amendment with a view to meeting what I regard as the necessities of the situation.

I know, sir, that it is entirely possible, under the rules of the House, to prevent the consideration of the measure as an independent proposition, and hence I desire to have it incorporated in this bill.

Mr. PUGH. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and the remainder of the hour allotted to me to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. PUGH. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me a moment so that I may yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], who wishes to make a single suggestion?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to discuss the pending bill, but I take the floor only for the purpose of noticing a remark made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], to which I desire to call the attention of the committee, namely, that if we take these islands and declare that we shall undertake to govern them temporarily, but shall leave them when the people are satisfied that we should leave them, a condition is offered which places us in a very embarrassing position. Suppose they are never satisfied that we should leave them. How are you to get them out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, for many years the project of severing the American Isthmus to connect the two oceans by a ship canal has been a prolific subject of popular discussion, furnishing fine field for promoters, lively speculation in concessions, and the most thorough and comprehensive advertising that ever exploited any enterprise.

Rival projects have of course retarded one another, while it is suggested that transisthmian and transcontinental railroads have displayed considerable activity and probably some liberality in disseminating the impression that none of the canal projects ought to or could succeed.

It is not possible to exaggerate the magnitude nor the importance of the undertaking nor the glory of the achievement when completed.

The ancients regarded engineering skill as exhausted in the creation of Lake Mœris. Monarchy, genius, and wealth united all their power in the earth to pile stones into pyramids, and humanity gazed in awe and wonder at the supposed limit of human accomplishment. The Augustan age, favored by luxury and power as well as great learning, laid out splendid roads and erected handsome villas, created seas and demolished mountains, and compassed land and sea to increase the splendor and greatness of a people claiming to enjoy the highest condition of human civilization and progress. But it was reserved for the present century, dominated by the Anglo-Saxon race, to glorify the lofty achievements of that genius which demonstrates the kinship of man with Omnipotence. Having subdued and utilized all the elements, having harnessed the lightning to annihilate distance by instant communication and to operate vehicles, which, while warming, lighting, and transporting the passengers, almost typify a veritable chariot of fire; having pierced the granite base of the eternal mountains for the thundering passage of the engines of commerce; having bridled the ocean and the winds around us, and analyzed the stars in the heavens above us, we now prepare to rend in twain the mighty continent of the West by an interoceanic canal that will eliminate one-third of the voyage around the world and unite as in one place the eastern and western shores of this mighty country. Exhaustive surveys and estimates have demonstrated the practicability of opening a canal by the aid of Lake Nicaragua and the San Juan River, where is found the lowest depression in the Cordillera Mountains, about 110 feet above the sea level, coupled with the great advantage of vast lakes, thousands of miles in extent, occupying the summit and insuring abundant water supply to flood the necessary locks.

By the work of many promoters and agitators traversing this country and the world, a popular demand has been created that this canal be constructed, and legislative and civic organizations have taken action favoring its construction. But it is unfortunate that the method of its construction has not been definitely pointed out, nor is intelligent discrimination always had as to the different characters of canal, as to construction, ownership, and control. Great prominence has been given to the commercial benefits which are promised by the completion of the enterprise. That would be a good reason to induce commercial people to embark in the venture and construct the canal with their own money.

But, unfortunately, money is chary of risk. It is too conservative. Under the present financial system it does not embark in doubtful enterprises. It alone of all things requires government to provide for its safe investment and profitable use. When its holders venture for a profit less than outright robbery, they want the security of the Government's bond or bank stock. When any great enterprise is to be undertaken, even for individual emolument, they demand that the Government undertake it, though patriotically willing to takes its bonds if they can be bought low at good interest, but they do not want any of the hazard of the enterprise. They are very solicitous about the honor and faith of the Government, to the end that it may maintain a standard that would augment in value while multiplying the dollars in their pockets, but they experience no qualms of conscience when many millions of dollars go out from their country's Treasury for the benefit of favorites.

True, capitalists organize companies and send out promoters, who are defined to be "men who sell what they have not to people who do not want it and who have nothing when they get it." They talk very largely about the honesty and wealth of the incorporators, thereby seeking to delude the people who do not know how these fraudulent corporations are organized, nor the difference between what a man owns individually and the little that he pays in or becomes liable for by taking stock in a corporation. The world has been full of this kind of stuff for years, the rich men speculating in concessions and talking about canals instead of putting their money in and constructing the canal, while in the main the millions that have been expended and stolen were obtained by blarney from the poor; and while the Panama ditch stands as the grave where were buried the hopes and pittances of poor people who were beggared through their deluded investments, it also stands as a monument to incompetency and corruption which will perhaps deter similar private subscriptions for generations to come.

So, in my judgment, if a ship ever sails across the Isthmus, its way will have to be opened by this or some other government or combination of governments. I utterly repudiate as an economic and political heresy the idea that this Government has constitutional power, even with the consent of the Central American Governments, to construct that canal primarily for the use of commerce. If it were built by private capital or by other nations untrammeled by constitutional limitations, this Government could properly participate in a guaranty of neutrality, and in such case it is folly to confuse the subject by talking of our exclusive ownership and control. We could only exercise those rights in case our Government constructed the canal for its own use; and we could only justify its construction at the public cost on the ground that its use was a military and naval necessity.

I am willing that the Government should undertake it for that reason. If incidental commercial benefits result to our fellow-citizens, I will rejoice; and if we could remain at peace with the world so as to offer universal use of the canal and secure tolls enough to make profitable returns to the Government for its investment, it would be exceedingly fortunate. It is assumed that our Government would never undertake to penetrate with this canal the territory of any government which has not fully and voluntarily consented thereto.

That being true, the safe and honorable course to pursue is to proceed according to the Hepburn bill to negotiate directly and fairly with the isthmian Governments, which, understanding better than we do the obligations and complications arising out of the many concessions previously made, are much better prepared to judge the present status of those matters and deal intelligently, fairly, and conclusively with all the various concessionaires. If those Governments are willing that we should construct a governmental canal, they can find a way either by negotiation or by decree and arbitration to annul and conclude every concession hitherto granted, so as to remove all cloud from their right and power and enable them to authorize us to construct, maintain, control, and defend the canal.

They are sovereign as far as their strength will maintain their sovereignty, and have the right to vacate and brush away all unexecuted concessions upon indemnifying the grantees for loss or damage. Their sovereignty will be respected as much more potent if supported by our great Republic as the beneficiary thereof. Of course it is to be expected that whatever reasonable amount those Governments should properly expend in clearing their titles and enabling them to convey to us the desired rights could be reimbursed in the lump sums which we would pay to those Governments for the concessions granted us.

Mr. Chairman, while I have no objection to the construction of the canal by private and corporate capital if among the holders thereof honesty and courage to do so could be mustered up under the authority of any of the 124 concessions heretofore granted, in which case it would be right and proper for our Government to participate in guaranteeing the neutral and uninterrupted use of the canal by all people and all nations; yet I can never vote for this Government to embark as stockholder or partner in any of those enterprises, based on commercial and corporate plans, for various reasons, in discussing which it is perhaps immaterial to advert to any concessions antedating that of the Maritime Canal Company, though the shades of many supposed-to-be-defunct spirits are wandering about and enlivening the atmosphere with reminders of rights and privileges largely imaginary or entirely forgotten.

Those whisperings would be fanned into a tumult and those spirits would be transformed into insatiable demons of greed if the United States should commit the unpardonable folly of undertaking to satisfy all the claims which cupidity and the lobby could invest with apparent necessity to our construction of the canal. I understand that claims have been filed attempting to rejuvenate concessions musty from the decay and damp of half a century. For one I decline to involve my country in such a broil of contention and riot of corruption.

There is no good reason for placing the Government in a corporation to be looted by officials, harassed by litigants, obstructed and interfered with by courts—a proposed course wholly unjustified by principle if for commercial purposes, and entirely unnecessary if for governmental purposes. Whatever it may properly do for the public good the Government can do better in its own name and through its own instrumentality.

I refuse utterly to subscribe to the proposition to prosecute the enterprise under the charter and claims of the Maritime Canal Company. Though I have sought diligently for some plausible pretext to adapt and extend that concession to meet the requirements of the situation, yet the more I have studied it the more surely has the conviction grown that that concession did not authorize, but utterly prohibited, the acquirement of necessary privileges and property by this Government. It is equally certain that it did not authorize the acquisition of stock in the corporation by any government except those in Central America, which were invited to take 5 per cent of the stock.

In Articles VII and VIII of the Costa Rican concession and Articles VIII and IX of the Nicaraguan concession it is made apparent that only isthmian governments are invited to take stock, and it is stipulated in language substantially identical that "in no case shall the concessions be transferred to any foreign government or any foreign public power," nor shall the association "transfer to any foreign government or public power any part of the lands granted." Such "transfers can be made to private parties only under the same restrictions." Both the spirit and language of the instruments would be violated by the proposed subterfuge of seeking through majority stock of the corporation the benefit of rights and franchises, ownership of which is utterly prohibited.

In some instances where corporate influence is potent with the judiciary that legal device has been used in judicial interpretation to nullify constitutional prohibitions. Even if the doctrine were technically tenable that prohibited ownership of a franchise may rightfully be made available by acquiring major interest in the stock of a corporation designed for its control, yet it would be the refinement of evasion, and could not be wise or honorable, for this great Republic to base its conduct in the greatest work of all the ages on so ungenerous and contemptible a subterfuge to evade the positive language and clear intent to protect two weak sister Republics, to which it is proposed to issue but 6½ per cent of the entire capital stock, which are not likely to acquiesce in such views of the matter, and would probably refuse to accept any stock in the corporation or participate in an organization in the management of which they would have no power.

Mr. Chairman, the scheme of involving the Government in the plans and fortunes, or misfortunes, of the Maritime Canal Company provides for securing the United States for money used in constructing the canal by declaring a lien upon the assets and franchises and empowering the President in case of default to forfeit everything to the United States without judicial or other action, thereby vesting full title in the United States. That raises several important questions. If the United States can legally own 93½ per cent of the stock, it should actually pay in, not merely loan, 93½ per cent of the capital stock ordinarily. But in this case the concessions themselves constitute full payment on the stock and all possible assessments as to the 6½ per cent reserved to the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

All future assessments having thus been satisfied in advance, their stock is not answerable for any assessments, and the other stockholders must not only pay in all the capital stock but meet all future assessments. Then there could never be a debt or a loan for any money the owner of the 93½ per cent stock might see fit to invest in the canal. This is clearly in accord with the purpose of the stipulations of those two Republics. There can be no serious pretense that the possibility of loss or forfeiture of their interests was ever provided for or contemplated in the grants by those Governments.

Again, if valid title can not be acquired by transfer, how can it be done by forfeiture? And, furthermore, if title can not be legally acquired by transfer or forfeiture, how can a lien be valuable or available? It is by no means necessary to conclude that those Governments would not consent for us to construct a canal under a new concession imposing different terms and based on an adequate price; but the point is that that particular concession, considering its terms and the price paid for it, does not justify the construction of the canal by this Government on the lines proposed. Consent was obtained in 1884 for us to build a governmental canal for a price no greater than the amount now demanded by the promoters of the Maritime Canal scheme, something less than $5,000,000. At a reasonable price and on fair terms another concession can be negotiated.

Waving considerations of principle, it is not wise to rely on the forfeited rights of that company and its hopes of extension. They are not tenable before a board of arbitration or a court of law. If we take them, we take them with notice that they have been declared forfeited by the decree of Nicaragua. The suggestion that we ignore that notice and override that decree, "holding a club over" that little Government, as often forcibly expressed, is unworthy the brain or the tongue of an American statesman. This Government can not honorably force upon a weak government recognition of a claim in support of which we would not with equal readiness go to war with the most powerful government or combination of governments on earth, and which no reputable lawyer would support in court.

The publication of such unworthy suggestions is taken advantage of by rival powers and made the text and pretext to arouse the jealousy of our sister republics and fill them with misgivings as to our intentions with regard to their prerogatives, sovereignty, and permanence, they being constantly persuaded into distrust that in our peculiar combination of expansion as to territory and contraction as to currency, liberty, and opportunity we desire to absorb and utilize them as provinces in which to station, support, and reward an innumerable army of political favorites. Let us assure them that, while we have made a great noise about the acquisition of a few trifling, refuse islands that no other respectable nation has coveted for a thousand years, they were all wrested from the control and oppression of a despot professedly in the interest of liberty, and we will never deflour the liberty and prosperity nor disregard the rights and interests of any sister republic, however limited in territory or insignificant in military strength.

If we consume much time and spend $5,000,000 of money to acquire the imaginary rights and assets of the Maritime Canal Company, who can tell how much time and money will be requisite to dispose of the Grace syndicate? It appears to have the only existing concession from Nicaragua of any value, but it has nothing from Costa Rica. Its contract for concession declares that the Maritime Canal Company has forfeited its right, and that its concession, together with its claims to property, will terminate next October, and that contract authorizes the Grace syndicate to negotiate with the Maritime Canal Company for an earlier termination and surrender of its claims. The Grace contract would allow a transfer to this Government by consent of Nicaragua, but we are left in the dark as to the possible cost of that consent. But that concession provides for a neutral canal for commercial purposes, and would require further negotiation to make it available for Government control.

It is stated without denial that the question of securing an extension by the Maritime Company has never so much as been mentioned in Central America. Its friends and the projects they suggest admit, and even the Senate bill provides, that further negotiation be had to make its concession available. Notwithstanding adroit efforts to keep it in the background, the question forces itself on us, after having reimbursed the Maritime Canal Company and taken possession of its so-called rights and assets, then how much more money and how much more time will be necessary to satisfy the Grace syndicate and secure their concession? Those people are evidently preparing for a hold-up of tremendous proportions. If "rats desert a sinking ship," their instinct also finds the cheese.

Hon. Warner Miller, who exploited this scheme throughout the world and knows more about it than any other man, tearfully regrets persuading poor men into the enterprise, but admits that he had placed "some eggs in another basket" himself by taking stock with the Grace syndicate. I do not mean to call him a rat, however "sly and old," but I think that he can be relied on as a weathercock, and when he spies a storm I should fear to put to sea. It is said, I do not know how truly, that $100,000 furnished to Nicaragua in time of need, when the Maritime Canal Company was unable to respond to the call, secured this Grace concession. If that be true, it could not be difficult for Nicaragua, in case public policy demanded it, to make handsome indemnity to these people, cancel that contract, and arrange to have a canal constructed instead of permitting an eternal speculation about uncertain concessions and the greater uncertainty about raising money.

The worst feature about that Grace concession is that it was contracted for in violation of the stipulation in the canal company's concession not to grant another during its existence; and the only plausible ground on which the Maritime Canal Company could base a demand for extension is the bad faith apparently practiced by Nicaragua a year before the expiration of their concession by declaring it forfeited, negotiating another, and thereby placing an active competitor in the field to operate against all possibility of success if any existed. I oppose buying out anybody unless we are satisfied with the goods and find a clear title. Even if we knew how many millions the Grace syndicate is arranging to strike the United States Treasury for, and were sure that Nicaragua would consent, we are not certain that Nicaragua would agree to such amendment as would authorize a Government canal—the only kind we can rightfully construct—nor that Costa Rica would concur. Therefore we should go direct to those two Governments in the outset, negotiate for what we need, and leave them to deal with previous contracts and concessionaires.

I shall not discuss the diplomatic situation as affected by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It is assumed that if difficulties exist the State Department would proceed to remove them by proper and timely negotiation to amend or abrogate that treaty. Even if altered conditions have not rendered that treaty obsolete, and England still insists that it bars the construction of the canal under Government control, yet it is believed that with proper assurances of fair and universal use of the canal England would yield her consent to its construction by our Government. She knows what some of our people seem not to have learned, that in us looms up her only rival in power and her only dangerous competitor in business. She knows that while friendly with us she will be satisfied, if accorded fair treatment, to risk her chances of dealing with the balance of mankind, and she feels confident that in the event of a quarrel with us she would be able with her navy to seize the canal and appropriate it to her own purposes. Whether correct or not, these are doubtless her opinions and would probably incline her consent to our construction of the canal.

Our committee eliminated the original provision for the acquirement of sovereignty, as I think, wisely, for our only object is to operate, control, and defend a canal, and does not necessarily involve the necessity and responsibility for governing additional territory. There ought to be little difficulty in arranging to police the canal, with its appurtenances and environments, in time of peace, while existing and possible treaties supplementing international law could be relied upon for the disposition of all criminal trials as well as the transaction of all civil business. If our citizens ramble into that section, they may take their chances of protection, if their conduct deserves it, just as they do when traveling in other foreign lands. There is no force in the contention that because Congress chartered the Maritime Canal Company it is incumbent on us to champion the claims of that company, regardless of their merits, and pay for the privilege. The promiscuous creation of corporations is a small business for Congress to engage in at best, especially when the courts and State legislatures afford such splendid facilities for their manufacture.

If it should be now determined that by assuming their paternity Congress also becomes responsible for the bantlings and is expected to wage their battles, regardless of right or wrong, and stand ready to buy out their promoters whenever they wish to unload, it will greatly strengthen the position of those who contend that the Government ought to abstain from such works of supererogation and confine itself to the business of governing within the powers delegated to it and limited to the purposes of its creation. If the General Government is to take up the cudgel in behalf of all exploded enterprises in which its adventurous citizens have embarked, and all other governments adopt the same policy, "pandemonium" would indeed "reign supreme" early and universal; and if all the concessionaires were backed by strong governments insisting on their rights to rend the Isthmus with canals and deplete the various governmental treasuries, imagination alone can depict the unutterable state of confusion, strife, and robbery. Reductio ad absurdum ought to place an everlasting quietus on that ridiculous argument.

If commercial interests would construct a neutral canal which our Navy and Army could in common with all other people and nations use, when necessary, on fair terms, it would remove the apparent demand for its construction by our Government. If we have anything to do with providing the means of construction, our Government must own and exclusively control. If the canal is not necessary to the naval use of the Government, we ought to dismiss the subject from consideration. If, as some conspicuous authority contends, we are not financially able to undertake the work, of course we will be driven to abandon the enterprise, however necessary.

I take no stock in the sensational claims that recent events and new territory have made the demand for the canal imperative. If that were the only argument, it would be more prudent to forego the pleasures and luxuries promised to some enthusiasts by our new possessions, and in that case we ought to lop off while we can, wisely and properly, those prolific and promising hotbeds of disease, speculation, patronage, expense, and corruption, thereby saving the cost of the canal, as well as the expense, slaughter, and humiliation of holding and governing vassal colonies.

If we undertake it from governmental necessity, we must beware of the increased temptations which its possession might offer us to enter upon a career of war and conquest. Increased facilities and opportunities afforded by its existence and readiness for use, rather than stimulate to reckless combat, ought to prove one of the elements of preparation which would discourage and avert the levying of wars against us. I believe with Jefferson that we have territory enough for our growth and glory for thousands of years. If we can return and adhere to our traditional policy of confining our attention to our own affairs and development, scrupulously abstaining from quarrel or alliances with foreign powers, while dealing justly and seeking to maintain friendship with all, "grim-visaged war" no longer will "lift his horrid, front" to distract and destroy, but give place to the benign reign the dulcet strains and inviting opportunities of enduring peace.

True, we are expert and valorous in battle. Our wars, foreign and civil, have given to history revelations of genius and bravery unrivaled in military annals. We have little reason to doubt that success and glory would attend our arms if we could see in combat and carnage the fulfillment of our high destiny; but we, above all people, have capacity to demonstrate that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." Our fertile country, vast in extent, salubrious in climate, varied in products of field, mill, and mine, invites every talent and inclination to pursue fortune and happiness in a labyrinth of industrial avenues, affording endless and numberless opportunities.

Despite restrictive laws limiting our trade and unequal financial legislation, discriminating against general business and production, our commerce, domestic and foreign, equals in volume the balance of the world combined. Our material force and resources exceed those of every other country. Our instructed citizens, equipped for mental work, surpass in grade and number those of any other nation, past or present. The stock from which our people descended—sturdy, honest, and intelligent—improved under the institutions of this favored land, has developed a population whose character and attainments will never find a rival beneath the stars. It has been remarked that in discovering America to revive and renew the energies and resources of a worn and wasted world, heaven exhausted its bounty to man. Our country combines the blessings, exempt from the disadvantages, of all others. Her mines rival Golconda. Her balmy sunlight and gorgeous sunsets and cloud pictures and draperies surpass the beauty and genial glow of Italian skies.

Our sparkling water and invigorating breezes insure health and delight, while our rivers enrich and water the land through which they bear our commerce to the seas; we love our towering mountains, heaven-kissed; we honor our noble men, heaven-blessed; and with unspeakable devotion we adore our matchless women, radiant in beauty, while excelling in virtue and every womanly charm of person, mind, and heart. While in the terrible art of war we shall maintain our prowess, it is only in the balmy sunshine of peace that we may reasonably hope to correct our politics by restoring government to the control of the people, reenacting the equable laws of finance and tariff which permitted general prosperity, and so stimulate industry, genius, and good morals as to verify the melodious prophecy—

> Columbia, Columbia, to glory shall rise,
> The queen of the world and the child of the skies.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PUGH] desired to yield a few moments to the gentleman from Ohio, as the Chair understood. If that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Perfectly.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I intended to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Ohio was anxious to have his time now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MOODY. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MOODY. I yield fifteen minutes, or so much thereof as he may need, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

[Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman, I have an arrangement by which the gentleman from Georgia is to come next.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield forty minutes, the remainder of my time, to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, we are working in the twilight hour of a fast dying Congress. Before we return again to our constituents it may be well to consider what of good or ill has this Congress accomplished for the people of the United States. Two years ago, when the Republican party was returned to power, it came reeking with pledges and promises as to what it would accomplish for the people of our country.

I ask the gentlemen who control legislation, who occupy the other side of this Chamber, and who hold allegiance to the standard of the Republican party, whether or not they have fulfilled their pledges and kept their promises? In the brief time that is allowed me for this discussion I can not review all the issues that were prominent in the campaign of 1896 for which you gave your pledges of relief, but let me call your attention to one or two of the most important of these.

On account of the Supreme Court of the United States having declared the income tax unconstitutional our Wilson-Gorman tariff bill did not raise sufficient revenue to meet the expenditures of our Government. The cry raised by your party in the Fifty-fourth Congress and on the stump in the campaign that followed was that it was necessary for you to be returned to power in order that you might pass a high-tariff bill to wipe out the deficiency in the Treasury and to put the Government on a business basis.

What was the result? Immediately after the inauguration of President McKinley he called this Congress together in extraordinary session. We were in session over four months solely for the purpose of passing a tariff bill. After long and harassing delays the Dingley bill was enacted into law. It was promised by its friends that within six months after its passage it would raise far more revenue than was necessary to meet the current expenses of the Government. What has been the result? Nearly two years have gone by, and not for one single hour since the Dingley bill became a law has it raised sufficient revenue to meet the current expenses of the Government.

I do not include in this the extraordinary expenses growing out of the war, but I mean those ordinary expenses that we had to meet before the declaration of war with Spain. Instead of the Dingley bill improving the condition of the Treasury, it has gone from bad to worse, until now it is not raising as much revenue as the Wilson-Gorman bill during the last month it was on the statute books, and to-day, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, there is a deficiency of $112,000,000.

According to the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], there will be a deficiency at the end of this fiscal year of $159,000,000. What has become of the promise you made to the country to pass a tariff bill that would meet the current expenses of the Government and put the Treasury on a business basis? You will return to your constituents endeavoring to hide your broken promise in the clamor for Asiatic expansion and the smoke and turmoil of battles in the Orient, where the men you have been chosen to represent are dying far away from home in an effort to conquer uncivilized and heathen tribes.

Again, one of the great issues in the campaign of 1896 was the question of establishing a monetary system for this country. The Democratic party promised that if it was returned to power it would reenact on the statute books an act for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver. We were defeated. You promised that if you were returned to power you would bend your energies toward a reformation of the currency of this country. Have you kept the promise? Nearly two years have gone by and nothing has been done.

The Committee on Banking and Currency has not even reported a bill of any kind for the consideration of the House. You have pleaded guilty to the charge of your incapacity to legislate on this great and momentous question by calling your party together in caucus and resolving that you could do nothing and appointing a committee to advise some future Congress what it ought to do.

In other words, you have violated every pledge that you have made to the people of the United States in reference to granting relief by a reformation of the currency laws of our country; but there is one promise that you made before you were returned to power, and one that the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has repeatedly made on the floor of this House, and that was that you would so amend the navigation laws of this country as to increase the merchant marine of the United States and furnish the farmers and manufacturers of this country ships with which to carry their surplus products to foreign markets.

The surplus crops of those who have been engaged in producing wheat and cotton have always found their markets in foreign countries, and in recent years our great manufacturers who produce the steel and iron, the boots and shoes, the farming implements, the manufactured cotton and woolen goods, and other manufactured articles have been compelled to seek foreign markets for a portion of their output or close down their works and shut their doors against their employees for a portion of the year.

I am informed by those engaged in the business that there has not been a single day within the preceding year when a ship arriving in Mobile, Pensacola, or Savannah could not secure a cargo of pig iron from the Birmingham district for foreign markets. One of the greatest obstacles that have been in the way of our securing this foreign trade has been our inability to secure ships to carry our freight to foreign markets, and I therefore, representing as I do a district that is largely interested in the export trade, awaited with impatience the promise that you made to increase the American merchant marine.

Finally, a few weeks ago, you did report a bill that comes before the House with the pretense that it was intended to build up the merchant marine to the position it occupied before the civil war when the American flag proudly carried our commerce to the four quarters of the globe.

What is this bill that is known to the public at large as the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill, and bears the title on the Calendar of H. R. 11312? It is a pretense and a fraud. Instead of its provisions being for the interest of the merchant marine of the country, its sole effective provision is to give an increased bounty to one single corporation.

Your glittering promises to aid the manufacturing and shipping interests of the country have resolved themselves into a raid on the Treasury in the interest of a corporation whose capacity for plundering the public Treasury knows no bounds. I make this assertion with the bill before me, and I intend to prove it by facts and figures that can not be disputed.

Let us consider the details of this bill, known as H. R. 11312. It proposes on its face to pay a subsidy to the owner or owners of any vessel registered by an American citizen or citizens, including corporations, that is sailing between ports in this country and ports of foreign nations, and it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to contract with said owners of said vessels for the payment for twenty years, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following subsidies:

On each entry of a sail or steam vessel, not exceeding 16 entries in any twelve consecutive months, 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles not exceeding 1,500 nautical miles sailed outward bound, and 1¼ cents per gross ton for each 100 miles not exceeding 1,500 miles sailed homeward bound, and 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles over 1,500 nautical miles sailed either outward or homeward bound.

This is the first (a) clause in this subsidy bill. The second (b) is:

Steam vessels which may be suitable for carrying the mails of the United States or as auxiliaries to the forces of the United States in time of war or other need, if of the following tonnage and capable of maintaining the following rates of speed under the conditions hereinafter provided, shall, in addition to the compensation provided in paragraph (a) of this section, receive compensation per gross ton, for each 100 nautical miles sailed both outward and homeward bound, at the following rates, namely:

Vessels over 1,500 gross tons:

First. Fourteen knots and less than 15 knots, 1 cent per gross ton.

Second. Fifteen knots and less than 16 knots, 1.1 cents per gross ton.

Third. Sixteen knots or over, 1.2 cents per gross ton.

Vessels over 3,000 gross tons:

Fourth. Seventeen knots and less than eighteen knots, 1.4 cents per gross ton.

Fifth. Eighteen knots and less than 19 knots, 1.6 cents per gross ton.

Sixth. Nineteen knots or over, 1.8 cents per gross ton.

Vessels over 8,000 gross tons:

Seventh. Twenty knots and less than 21 knots, 2 cents per gross ton.

Eighth. Twenty-one knots or over, 2.3 cents per gross ton.

The bill provides that vessels receiving this subsidy shall carry the United States mails free, and also that any vessel now having a contract with the Government to carry the mails may, on application to the Postmaster-General, be released from such contract.

The following table shows the subsidies that will be received under the terms of the bill; for which I am indebted to the American Economist:

On its face the above looks like it would increase and benefit American shipping; but we have tried an experiment along that line. Let us make a comparison of the experiment tried in the past with the results to be obtained under the present bill.

On March 3, 1891, the Congress of the United States passed a bill entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce." Under the terms of this bill the Postmaster-General was authorized to make contracts with steamships having an American register, for the term of ten years, to carry the United States mail to foreign ports. Under the provisions of this act the ships to carry the mail were divided into four classes:

The first class to be capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots an hour and to have a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons, to receive $4 a mile for each outward voyage.

The second class to be capable of maintaining a speed of 16 knots an hour and to have a gross registered tonnage of not less than 5,000 tons, to receive $2 a mile for each outward voyage.

The third class to be capable of maintaining a speed of 14 knots an hour and to have a gross registered tonnage of not less than 5,000 tons, to receive $1 a mile for each outward voyage.

The fourth class to be capable of maintaining a speed of 12 knots an hour and to have a gross registered tonnage of not less than 1,500 tons, to receive 66⅔ cents a mile for each outward voyage.

The Postmaster-General was authorized to advertise for contracts for the carrying of the mail under this act, and, as shown hereinafter, endeavored to make contracts for the carrying of the mail to many ports in Europe, South America, and Asia; but at the present time there are only five of these contracts in existence, which will be referred to hereafter.

Before going into a comparison between the present law and the proposed law let me state that the miles paid for under the act of 1891 are statute miles, and the miles to be paid for under the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill are knots or nautical miles. This should be borne in mind in making the calculation.

One of the contracts in force under the act of 1891 is known as Route No. 36, "O. M. S.," between New York and La Guaira, Venezuela. The contractor is the Red "D" Line, with the Caracas, a vessel of 14 knots and 2,584 tons gross, and the Philadelphia, a vessel of 14 knots and 2,520 tons gross. It makes 36 trips a year of 2,258 statute miles outward bound, equal to a total of 81,288 statute miles, and as these vessels come under the third class, it receives a dollar a mile, or $81,288.

The average tonnage of these two steamers is 2,552 gross tons, and under the Hanna-Payne bill for the same service they will receive the following amounts. The distance of 2,258 statute miles is equal to 1,963.4 knots, or nautical miles.

Under clause (a) these vessels will receive 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 miles up to 1,500, or 22½ cents per gross ton, and 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 miles over 1,500, or 4.63 cents, a total of 27.13 cents under clause (a), but as the vessel is over 14 knots and 1,500 tons, it receives in addition 1 cent for each 100 miles per gross ton under clause (b), making 19.63 cents, or a total of 46.76 cents per gross ton, which, multiplied by the average tonnage of 2,552 tons, makes a total of $1,159.32 for each single trip.

As there are 36 round trips or 72 single trips made by the line, it will receive, during the course of a year, $83,471, from which subtract the $81,288 now received under the present mail contract, and it shows that the increase compensation under the Hanna-Payne bill will be $2,183 each year, or an average of $60.60 for each round trip.

Therefore for a vessel of this class it will practically receive the same amount under either of these bills.

The Government also has a contract with the American Navigation Company for carrying the mail on route No. 74, "O. M. S.," from Boston to Port Antonio and from Philadelphia to Port Antonio. The contractor runs in this service four vessels—the Dewey, Sampson, Schley, and Farragut—each of 2,100 gross tons, the Sampson having a speed of 14 knots and the other three vessels having a speed of 15 knots an hour.

The distance from Boston to Port Antonio is 1,588 statute miles, and from Philadelphia to Port Antonio is 1,642 statute miles. These vessels come under the fourth class of the mail contract, and receive 66⅔ cents a mile for each outward-bound trip. They make 78 trips a year between Boston and Port Antonio and 26 trips a year between Philadelphia and Port Antonio. The compensation received under the present contract is $123,569 a year.

Under the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill they will receive $153,062, or an increase over the present law of $29,000, or $141.80 for each single trip, which makes the compensation paid under this, the fourth class of the present law, amount to practically the same that is paid under the Hanna-Payne bill.

The Government has no contracts made under the second class of the act of 1891, which is $2 a mile for each outward-bound trip; but under the first class it has a contract with the International Navigation Company, carrying the mail between New York and Southampton, England, known as route No. 57. Under this contract it makes 52 trips a year of 3,641 statute miles outward bound, or a total of 189,332 statute miles at $4 a mile, and receives a total compensation of $757,328.

The vessels employed in this service are the New York, 21 knots, 10,802 tons gross; the Paris, 21 knots, 10,794 tons gross; the St. Louis, 23 knots, 11,629 tons gross; the St. Paul, 20 knots, 11,629 tons gross. This makes an average of 21 knots and 11,213½ tons gross for each vessel. Under the Hanna-Payne bill the compensation received will be as follows:

The distance in knots or nautical miles is 3,166. Under clause (a) of the bill they will receive 1½ cents for each 100 miles up to 1,500, or 22½ cents, and 1 cent for each 100 miles above 1,500 miles, or 16.66 cents, making a total of 39.16 cents received under clause (a), but under clause (b) a vessel of this kind receives in addition 2.3 cents per gross ton for each 100 miles, which amounts to 72.81 cents, or a total compensation per gross ton of 1.11\frac{97}{100}$ for each single trip.

This amount multiplied by the 11,213 tons amounts to a compensation of $12,555 for each single trip, or for the 52 round trips, or 104 single trips, amounts to $1,305,740 for each year, or an increase compensation over the present contract of $548,312 each year, amounting to $10,544 for each round trip.

It will be seen from the above that vessels of the third and fourth class receive practically the same subsidy under the present law as they will receive under the proposed law, but that vessels of the first class will receive nearly double the compensation under the proposed law that they do under the present law. As the two laws are based on a different system, you can not make a fair comparison without examining the exact tonnage, as provided in the present law, and compare it with the same tonnage in the proposed law.

I have made an estimate of what would be received under the law of 1891 and under the Hanna-Payne bill by a vessel of each class making a single trip between New York and Liverpool—a distance of 3,010 nautical miles or 3,450 statute miles. The comparison is as folows:

First class, 20 knots, 8,000 tons, at $4 each statute mile, 3,450 miles×by $4—outward-bound trip—equal to	$13,800
1.5×15 =22.50=37.6 } 1 ×15.1=15.1 =60.2 } =97.8 cents×8,000 tons=$7,824—round trip	15,648
Difference per round trip	1,848
Second class, 16 knots, 5,000 tons, at $2 each statute mile, 3,450 miles×by $2—outward-bound trip	$6,900
1.5×15 =22.50=37.6 } 1 ×15.1=15.10=36.12 } =73.72 cents×5,000 tons=$3,686—round trip	7,372
Difference per round trip	472
Third class, 14 knots, 2,500 tons, at $1 each statute mile, 3,450 miles×$1—outward-bound trip	3,450
1.5×15 =22.50=37.60 } 1 ×15.1=15.10=30.1 } =67.7 cents×2,500 tons=$1,692—round trip	3,384
Difference per round trip (in favor of contract)	76
Fourth class, 12 knots 1,500 tons, at 66⅔ cents per statute mile, 3,450 miles×by 66⅔ cents outward-bound trip	$2,297
1.5 ×15 =22.50 } 1.15×15.1=15.10 } =37.6 cents ×1,500=$564—round trip	1,128
Difference per round trip (in favor of contract)	1,069

From the above figures it is shown that although the compensation is largely increased under the first class, slightly increased under the second class, that vessels of the third and fourth class will not receive as much compensation for each trip under the proposed law as they do under the present law.

Again, to carry out the analysis, let me call your attention to the fact that during the time Mr. Wanamaker was Postmaster-General of the United States he advertised to make a contract for carrying the mail of the United States from San Francisco to Hongkong, a distance of 6,080 nautical miles, or 6,992 statute miles. The vessels were of the third class and received $1 a mile for each outward-bound trip, or $6,992.

I have not been able to ascertain what was the tonnage and speed of these vessels, but as they came under the third class they were required to have a speed of 14 knots and 2,500 gross tons. Such a vessel for this distance would receive 68.38 cents under clause (a) and 60.81 cents under clause (b) of the proposed bill, or a total of 1.29\frac{19}{100}$ per gross ton each 100 miles, a compensation of $6,455 per round trip, or $537 less than they receive under the present law.

Another contract made by Mr. Wanamaker was from New York to Rio Janeiro, in South America, a distance of 4,778 nautical miles or 5,495 statute miles. The vessel receiving the contract was of the fourth class, and under the present law a vessel of this class would receive $3,656.66; under the Hanna-Payne bill it would receive $1,873.50, or a difference in favor of the present law for each round trip of $1,783.16.

After these contracts between San Francisco and Hongkong and New York and Rio Janeiro had been in operation for some years the companies holding the contracts were unable to carry them out on account of losing money, and the contracts were canceled. To-day we have no mail route in operation under the act of March 3, 1891, to any Asiatic port or South American port.

What conclusion are we to reach from the comparisons above made? In my judgment there can be but one, and that is for vessels of the third and fourth class there will be no increased compensation under the Hanna-Payne bill above that of the present law, but for vessels of the first class there will be a very large increase.

Now, how does this affect commerce? We know that the great commerce of the world, the heavy freights, such as iron and steel, manufactured cotton and woolen goods, cotton, wheat, and lumber, are not carried by the "greyhounds of the ocean" that are intended for passenger traffic, but by steam or sailing vessels that have a speed of from 10 to 14 knots an hour and a tonnage of from 1,000 to 3,000 tons. This class of vessels occupies the same position in reference to ocean freight that the freight train does in reference to freight on land.

On the other hand, the great "ocean greyhounds," such as the New York and St. Louis, occupy the same position in reference to transportation that the modern express train does to land freight. Although they may carry some heavy freight, they are primarily intended for passengers, light express packages, and mail.

My contention is that a subsidy whose benefits will only be received by this class of vessels will not materially increase the American shipping or freight facilities. On the other hand, the Hanna-Payne bill gives no more compensation, nor as much, to the class of vessels that really carry the freight as does the present law, and the present law has proven a failure in that respect.

In 1892 Postmaster-General Wanamaker advertised for contracts to carry the mail from New York to Liverpool, from New York to Southampton, New York to Antwerp, New York to Buenos Ayres, New York to Rio, Newport News to Rio, New York to Tuxpan, New York to Havana, New York to Santiago de Cuba, San Francisco to Hongkong, Mobile to Colon, and many other foreign ports, until in the aggregate they have advertised for over seventy routes to carry the mail to European, South American, and Asiatic ports, with the result that we have only five of these routes in existence at present—No. 36, New York to La Guaira; No. 57, New York to Southampton; No. 69, New York to Tuxpan, and No. 74, Boston and Philadelphia to Port Antonio.

Can it be for a moment contended that, when we have strenuously endeavored for eight years to increase our commerce under a law on the statute book that provides that every vessel of from 12 to 14 knots and from 1,500 to 2,500 tons shall receive a greater compensation than that provided for under the Hanna-Payne bill and have utterly and disastrously failed in the undertaking, the Hanna-Payne bill will be successful as to this class of vessels?

Now, as to the first class of vessels, under clause b of the bill, there is no question that the compensation will be greatly increased, but this class of vessels are not serviceable and could not be operated profitably or successfully between Asiatic and South American ports and this country. I have no doubt that the Postmaster-General honestly endeavored to carry out the present law, but there was no chance to secure vessels of the first class to carry the mail to South American and Asiatic ports.

After eight years of experiment we find that they have made but one contract with vessels of this class for European ports, and the presumption is that on any other route vessels of that class did not find the contract profitable.

It may be contended that the present law is not intended to pay a subsidy to steamships, but merely to compensate them for carrying the mail. This is not true. I find in the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails that during the last year the International Navigation Company, under its contract with the Government, carried 68,000,000 grams of letters and 610,000,000 grams in prints, and received as compensation therefor $580,800; that the Cunard line received compensation for carrying United States mail, but not under a subsidy contract, because it is an English line, and carried 110,000,000 grams in letters and 680,000,000 grams of prints, and received therefor $172,000. In other words, the Cunard line carried more mail than the International Navigation Company, and yet the International Navigation Company received $408,000 more for the same service than did the Cunard line.

Again, on page 17 of the report referred to above, I find that the Superintendent of Foreign Mails says: "The mails for Great Britain and the Continent of Europe are dispatched by every fast steamer; and when two fast steamers sail on the same day or succeeding days, the mails are, as a rule, assigned to the one whose previous speed record gives reason to believe that it will deliver the mails sooner on the other side of the Atlantic.

Other things being equal, preference is given to steamers sailing under the flag of the United States, and especially to those under contract with this Department, at a compensation of $4 a mile traveled from New York to Southampton. Steamers flying the flag of the United States, but not under contract, are allowed for their service all the postage collected on the mails they carry from this country; that is to say, 5 cents a half ounce, $1.60 a pound (or $3,200 a short ton), for letters and post cards, and 1 cent for 2 ounces, 8 cents a pound (or $160 a short ton), for other articles.

"In the case of a steamer conveying the mails under a foreign flag compensation is allowed at the rate of 44 cents a pound (or $880 a short ton) for letters and post cards, and 4½ cents a pound (or $90 a short ton) for other articles, calculated on the actual net weight of the mails conveyed."

In the light of the facts stated before, there can be no question that the bill now before the House known as the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill is brought here for one purpose, and for one purpose only, and that is to increase the compensation now paid to the International Navigation Company.

I have carefully read the hearings before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, that reported the bill to the House, and found that the witnesses examined were almost all of them interested in this company; that the attorney for this company, a man of distinguished ability, has prepared the bill, and that nearly every amendment that was offered in the committee and accepted by it was proposed by him.

There are other reasons that incline me to this belief. There is a claim made in the report of the committee that this bill is in the interest not only of American shipbuilders and shipping, but also in the interest of the American sailor. A comparison of the bill with the present law refutes that proposition.

Under the act of March 3, 1891, vessels carrying the mail are required for the first two years of their contract to have one-fourth of their crew Americans. For the next three years one-third must be Americans, and after that one-half must be American sailors. The contract with the International Navigation Company is over five years old, and therefore, under the law, they are required to have one-half of their crew American seamen; but as they are obliged to pay the American more than the French, Spanish, or Italian sailor, this provision of the law has become burdensome to them, and they provide in the new bill, the Hanna-Payne bill, that only one-fourth of the seamen must be Americans, which, of course, is a great reduction from the number they were required to have under the act of 1891. Yet, with unblushing effrontery, they claim in their report that the bill is intended to increase the number of American sailors.

Again, under the act of March 3, 1891, each vessel was required to carry one boy under the age of 21 for each 1,000 gross tons and one for each majority fraction, to be educated in seamanship and rank as petty officers. This provision of the law has also become burdensome to them, because in their bill, prepared by the officers and agents of the International Navigation Company and known as H. R. 11312, it provides that a vessel shall carry one boy for each 1,000 tons gross, to be trained in seamanship, engineering, or other maritime knowledge.

As each of the vessels of the International Navigation Company, as shown in the figures above, has a majority fraction over the division of 1,000 gross tons, they will be enabled to dispense with the training and education of four of these boys.

In other words, under the present law they are required to carry and educate 46 boys in seamanship and to give them the rank of petty officers, but under the new law they will be required to carry only 42 boys, give them no rank, and train them in engineering and other maritime knowledge. I suppose the "other maritime knowledge" includes washing the decks, waiting on the tables, or some other employment less expensive to the company than that given young men who rank as petty officers.

We might infer from the report made by the Republican members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries accompanying the Hanna-Payne bill that our Government has never tried the experiment of aiding the merchant marine with grants of money, when, on the contrary, it has done a great deal of this. From 1850 to 1858 it paid the Collins Line $5,212,001, and the four steamers probably cost the company less than $3,000,000, so that the Government in the course of eight years presented the company with its entire fleet and two and a quarter millions to operate it with, but yet the line collapsed.

From 1867 to 1877 the Pacific Mail received for its China and Japan service $4,583,333. From 1850 to 1860 there was paid for the service between San Francisco and Panama $3,467,763. Between New York and Aspinwall, from 1848 to 1860, there was paid $2,889,510. From New York to Havre, Southampton, and Bremen there was paid between 1848 and 1858 $2,893,960, and in the next ten years an additional sum of $906,724.

From 1866 to 1876 John Roach's Brazil Line received $150,000 a year, and the renewal of the subsidy was defeated in the Congress of the United States by the Republicans and Protectionists, with no prejudices against subsidies, on the ground that the line did not materially increase our exports, while our imports by it had immensely increased. In all, the Roach Line received a million and a half dollars in ten years, and down to 1899 the subsidies paid by the Government amounted to more than $35,000,000.

It therefore can not be contended that the proposition to pay mail subsidies is a new experiment in this country. It has been repeatedly tried, and has repeatedly failed, but at this time the shipping interests, recognizing that the manufacturing interests of the country are demanding that the walls which prevent them from reaching out for foreign trade shall be battered down, are rushing to the front with the present bill, and are supporting it merely as a pretense and a disguise to attract the attention of the country in that direction and to prevent them from passing legislation that is really intended in the interest of our fast expanding foreign trade.

There is but one law that will answer the purpose, and that is the law that England has tried and which has proven a success. We must have free ships. Until we repeal the navigation laws of our country and adopt the same liberal policy that England and Germany have adopted we need not expect an improvement in our merchant marine.

Even our high tariff laws are detrimental to the increase of our foreign trade. To illustrate: I find that the iron and steel manufacturers of this country are competing successfully in the markets of England and Germany with the manufacturers of those countries at their own doors, and yet we are not able to compete with them in the markets of France. The French nation are large importers of pig iron, steel rails, and other iron and steel articles, but we are deprived of this market.

You ask why? It is because France has a maximum and minimum tariff rate, and the difference in the duty on pig iron amounts to about $1.50 a ton and on steel rails about $11 a ton. England, Germany, and Belgium, our great competitors, are charged the minimum rate, whereas the American manufacturers are charged the maximum rate. On account of this discrimination we are not able to compete with them in the French market.

You ask why France has thus discriminated against us? France has answered the question herself. They say that we do not give them the "favored-nation" clause in our commercial treaties with them, because we discriminate against them as to the importation of French laces and wines and other exports from that country. In other words, the great iron and steel manufacturers of America must be barred out of the French market in order that a few lace and wine merchants in this country may be protected.

Another reason why our merchant marine does not expand is on account of the discriminating port regulations charged at the ports in this country. Foreign ships are excluded from our coastwise trade, something that England has never done. A tramp steamer will not come to the United States, where it can only get a foreign cargo, if it can go to a South American or European port, where it has the chance of getting either a foreign cargo or a cargo for some other port in the same country.

The proposed bill is not intended to expand American shipping in the interest of American manufacturers. It is intended to give an immense subsidy to the International Navigation Company, and probably pay a subsidy to a few tramp steamers that are now owned by American citizens.

The vicious feature of the bill is that it will not increase American shipping, but that if it becomes a law we will not be able to get rid of it for the next twenty years, for according to its provisions Congress may only amend or repeal the act subject to the obligation of the contracts existing at the time of such amendment or repeal.

Therefore a contract made to-day, no matter of what little service it may be to the people of the United States, no matter how onerous it may be in its burdens, can not be repealed, and will have to be borne for the next twenty years.

I opened this speech by calling your attention to some of the pledges that you made to your constituents which are yet unfilled, but before concluding allow me to call your attention to a few things for which this Congress will live in history.

It will go down in history as the Congress that has increased the taxes on the people to a greater extent than any Congress since the civil war, as the Congress that has made greater appropriations and drafts on the public Treasury than any Congress since the civil war, and as the Congress that has authorized the only issue of bonds since the resumption of specie payments, the issue during Cleveland's Administration not having been issued with the consent of Congress, but under the old law.

With its numerous raids on the Treasury in the way of appropriations, and the burdens it has laid on the people by increased taxes, we may well ask what are the principles that hold the Republican party together, what are the principles for which your followers contend? In the light of recent events we may well conclude that the only cord that binds your party together is the cohesive strength of public plunder. [Applause.]

Mr. McRAE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if he desires to go on now?

Mr. PUGH. I desire to yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

[Mr. KIRKPATRICK addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McRAE. I yield the ten minutes remaining to this side to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] suggested an enormous deficit in the immediate future, and it occurred to me that it might be advisable to call attention to the fact that the Administration could within the past forty-eight hours have saved this Government $78,375.

A short time since we saw the statement throughout the press of the United States that a brigadier-general in the regular establishment of our Army had said of the Commanding General of the Army the following. I read from the Washington Times of Wednesday last:

> He lies in his throat, he lies in his heart, he lies in every hair of his head and every pore of his body; he lies willfully, deliberately, intentionally, and maliciously.

The man who uttered these words pleaded guilty to the offense, and upon that the President of the United States made this significant declaration:

> The accused, after a trial by court-martial composed of officers of high rank and distinguished services, has been found guilty of conduct unworthy of an officer holding a commission of the United States and obnoxious to the highest degree to the discipline and good order of the military establishment.

Now, gentlemen, if General Sherman or General Grant or General Sheridan, after their distinguished services to the country, had asked for a leave of absence exceeding thirty days in a single year, to make a trip around the world or to investigate the military institutions of Europe, what would have been the law that would have been applied to them? I read from the military laws, section 621, these words:

> Officers when absent on account of sickness or wounds, or lawfully absent from duty and on waiting orders, shall receive full pay; when absent with leave, for other causes, full pay during such absence not exceeding in the aggregate thirty days in one year, and half pay during such absence exceeding thirty days in one year.

The most distinguished officer in the Army of the United States can not receive a leave of absence exceeding thirty days without suffering a reduction of one-half of his pay.

Now, by way of punishment—aye, by way of reward for this obnoxious conduct on the part of the brigadier-general—the President of the United States says to him what the President could not have said to General Sherman or General Grant, "I give you six years' leave of absence; go act as a traveling man for the beef trust, if you choose; go tender your services to the plutocracy and money power for the next six years, and this Government will pay you $5,500 a year." Thirty-three thousand dollars in the next six years will be taken out of the public Treasury for a man who has been guilty of the grossest insult that has ever been perpetrated in the American Army in the history of it from the days of Washington down to this hour. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is not all. It is stated by the Adjutant-General that the brigadier-general will have reached the retiring age within a few days after the six years are up. In other words, if he had reached the age of 64 in five years, then the suspension would have been five years; if he had reached it in four years, then the suspension would have been four years. But it is so arranged in this suspension that the brigadier-general comes back to the full glory of the American epaulets of a brigadier a few days before he is 64 years of age, and then he is to be retired under the law—section 620—which will pay him three-fourths annually of $5,500, which will amount to $4,125 a year.

As his expectancy from the age of 64 is eleven years, in that eleven years he will receive $45,375 additional out of the Treasury of the public; in all, $33,000 and $45,375, making $78,375 for a man who says to the Commanding General of the Army that "he lies in every pore, lies in every hair, lies in his throat, and in his heart," when the Commanding General had simply told the truth; and there are 50,000 privates that will testify that they were fed rotten meat that they could not stomach. [Applause.] That meat caused diseases and death, and we had it certified here in the enormous, outrageous death roll in the camps in our own home States. Seventy-eight thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars to a man who will never render another day's service to the United States!

This suspension is so arranged that this man will draw $78,000 out of your Treasury without being on duty a single day. Have you ever heard of any such thing? Is there an American officer to-day in the service who could not afford to accept that punishment? There is not a lieutenant, not a captain, not a brigadier-general that would fail to accept a leave of absence until a few days before being 64 years of age and then retire and get to draw three-fourths pay for the rest of his life. My friends, there is not a Congressman on the floor of this House that could not afford to accept this punishment of $5,500 a year for the next six years, without doing anything, and $4,125 a year for the next eleven. [Applause.] There is not a Senator over at the other end of the Capitol that could not afford this punishment. There is not a man on the Supreme Bench of the United States that could not afford to be punished by such an enormous punishment as this! [Laughter.]

Let us all be punished to-morrow morning! [Laughter.] Seventy-eight thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars for calling the Commander of the Army a "liar in every pore." Why, sir, if he had called the President of the United States a liar "in his throat and in his heart and in every pore," I suppose he would have got a million dollars! [Laughter.] What lieutenant in the Army will not read this report and think that the best way to promote himself will be to call his commanding officer a liar and take the discipline, take the punishment? Aye, my friends, it is apparent here that a reward has been given the man who attacks General Miles in such language as this. I am not a defender of General Miles, but I want to say that he took Porto Rico with a loss of three men in a campaign of nineteen days, when he was directed to meet 17,000 Spaniards, armed with Mausers, and directed to meet them on the military road; and instead of doing that he came in at the other end of the island and took Porto Rico almost without loss of blood on our side.

If we are to award military heroes for distinguished service and for saving the lives and health of our boys, then General Miles stands preeminent in this war, equaled only by Dewey and Schley. If we are proud of the history of America, and if we are proud of Andrew Jackson and his brilliant victory at New Orleans, we must couple with Andrew Jackson in military and naval services the names of Dewey and Schley and General Miles. The slaughter at Santiago was four times as large as they dared to report it. In the first report, the first day we were told we lost 500 killed and wounded; the next day we were told it was 1,100; the next day we were told it was 1,600, and finally we were told that the entire list of killed and wounded at Santiago was 2,000, to say nothing of the thousands that have been forever demoralized and diseased by the rotten beef that they had given them in the camps.

Truth forever on the scaffold;
Wrong forever on the throne.

Hence it is in order to hang General Miles. Let the inquisition begin. Let none but cuckoos speak about the President, and meanwhile do everything possible to discredit the Commanding General of the Army. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CABLE COMMUNICATION BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND PACIFIC ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As a consequence of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain and its expected ratification by the Spanish Government, the United States will come into possession of the Philippine Islands on the farther shores of the Pacific. The Hawaiian Islands and Guam becoming United States territory and forming convenient stopping places on the way across the sea, the necessity for speedy cable communication between the United States and all these Pacific islands has become imperative. Such communication should be established in such a way as to be wholly under the control of the United States whether in time of peace or of war. At present the Philippines can be reached only by cables which pass through many foreign countries, and the Hawaiian Islands and Guam can only be communicated with by steamers, involving delays in each instance of at least a week. The present condition should not be allowed to continue for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.

So long ago as 1885 reference was made in an Executive message to Congress to the necessity for cable communication between the United States and Hawaii. This necessity has greatly increased since then. The question has been discussed in the Fifty-second, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses, in each of which some effort has been made looking toward laying a cable at least as far as the Hawaiian Islands.

The time has now arrived when a cable in the Pacific must extend at least as far as Manila, touching at the Hawaiian Islands and Guam on the way. Two methods of establishing this cable communication at once suggest themselves: First, construction and maintenance of such a cable by and at the expense of the United States Government; and second, construction and maintenance of such a cable by a private United States corporation under such safeguards as Congress shall impose.

I do not make any recommendations to Congress as to which of these methods would be the more desirable. A cable of the length of that proposed requires so much time for construction and laying that it is estimated that at least two years must elapse after giving the order for the cable before the entire system could be successfully laid and put in operation. Further, deep-sea soundings must be taken west of the Hawaiian Islands before the final route for the cable can be selected. Under these circumstances it becomes a paramount necessity that measures should be taken before the close of the present Congress to provide such means as may seem most suitable for the establishment of a cable system.

I commend the whole subject to the careful consideration of the Congress and to such prompt action as may seem advisable.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 10, 1899.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GIBSON. Give us a night session; we need it.

The question was taken; and the Speaker being in doubt, the House divided.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the vote, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. Under the order adopted to-day for the extending of general debate on this bill to the whole of the legislative day, my inquiry is whether, under the rules, if we do not adjourn, but take a recess, it would not be in order in the evening session to enter upon general debate on this bill?

Mr. MCRAE. I will say that there is no disposition on this side to use the night session for general debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. We do not want to interfere with pension legislation.

Mr. SIMPSON. No; we are the friends of the soldier. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. "I am an Englishman." [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no knowing what we may want to do by the time the night comes on. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry, the Chair thinks that under the vote of the House general debate would be in order.

Mr. MCRAE. By unanimous consent could not that be modified?

The SPEAKER. It could.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no intention to use the night session for general debate.

The SPEAKER. That may be, but the Chair thinks the expression used was "the legislative day."

Mr. MCRAE. I am sure the language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], when he said that he would be willing to extend the time beyond 5 o'clock, clearly indicated that general debate was to close at 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. I did not think of this being Friday.

The SPEAKER. I do not think any member of the House thought about it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in making the motion to adjourn, I supposed I was conforming to the desire of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I had no other desire or intention.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 22 and the noes are 52, and the House determines not to adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5019. An act for a light vessel off Tail of Horse Shoe, Chesapeake Bay.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5088. An act to amend section 27 of the Revised Statutes, relative to the apportionment and election of Representatives;

S. 3684. An act for the relief of Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzin; and

S. 2673. An act for the relief of William A. Cowles.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5355. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex."—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5086. An act for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5076. An act authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5006. An act to restore to their original status as to promotion officers of the Navy and Marine Corps losing numbers by reason of the advancement of other officers for exceptional and meritorious service during the war with Spain—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

APPOINTMENTS UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of the engrossed bill of the Senate (S. 3256) in reference to the civil service and appointments thereunder, the same having been lost or misplaced.

The resolution was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 22d day of February, 1899, be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BISHOP, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. GRIFFITH, for four days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. OTEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the rules the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will act as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session, Mr. LACEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rule under which this session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

MRS. LUCRETIA TYLER SEMPLE.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Having had a conference with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], who is interested in Senate bill 1576, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which that bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and by which a motion to reconsider was laid on the table, be vacated; that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 7, and inserting "thirty," and that thus amended the bill be put on its passage.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1776) to increase the pension of Mrs. Lucretia Tyler Semple.

There being no objection, the proceedings by which the bill was previously ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and by which a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage was laid on the table, were vacated; and the bill, amended by striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty," was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBERT. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole, I want to ask unanimous consent that during this evening all bills for the removal of charges of desertion or for the removal of political disabilities be passed over on the Calendar; also that all bills for the increase of pensions be passed over, and that we first take up bills asking for original pensions and afterwards take up bills for the increase of pensions and bills for the removal of charges of desertion——

Mr. RAY of New York. I trust my friend from South Carolina will not insist on the latter part of his proposition, that all bills granting original pensions be given a preference over those granting increase of pension. We can readily dispose of all these pension bills without undertaking to make any such discrimination. And the bills asking for increase of pensions are just as deserving as the others. In every case reported, those bills, if passed, will relieve actual suffering.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit to the chairman of the committee that if there are only a few——

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman does not understand me. The bills for removal of charges of desertion I care nothing about, but the gentleman from South Carolina has coupled with his request a proposition that first we take up cases of original pensions, passing over till afterwards bills for increase of pensions. Now, I say that such a provision would mix up our business. It would take more time to sort out the bills in the manner suggested by the gentleman than it would to pass those of both classes. I repeat that the bills reported for increase of pensions are deserving cases. Every such bill is one which, if passed, will relieve actual distress and misery.

Mr. TALBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I confine my request to bills for the removal of charges of desertion.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Why should such bills be passed over? There are only a few of them on the Calendar, and some of them very meritorious—cases which have been very carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PACKER] that I do not believe we should pass a single bill for the removal of charges of desertion or for the increase of any pension either until we have devised some means of putting a stop to the awful expenses of the Government, which are now being piled up mountain high. I am willing, however, when we come to a meritorious case, that it be passed without opposition.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit, however, that we ought not to stand here and consider bills for removing charges of desertion when we are now engaged in a war and pensions will be piled up mountain high.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that in the order of business for this evening private bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCKER. Reserving the right to object, I desire to say, in answer to a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. RAY of New York], that with reference to cases of removing charges of desertion he cared nothing——

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman misunderstood what I meant to say. I do not have desertion cases in charge. I look solely to pension business.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the request which the gentleman from South Carolina has just made has been submitted session after session, and been in a measure acceded to. I have a number of bills pending before the Committee on Military Affairs for the removal of charges of desertion. I have examined those cases. They are in the interest of old soldiers who live in my district. They are meritorious cases.

I have pressed their cases time after time before the Military Committee. I have been met by the statement by different members of that committee that there was no use in considering the cases in the committee, no matter how meritorious; that there was no use in reporting them to the House, because if they were reported, they would be passed over without consideration by that body. I was met by the statement that they could not be considered in the House, and hence my bills have been ignored.

Now, to me, and to many an old soldier who fought gallantly during the civil war, and now living in my district, their cases are of just as much importance to them and to me as some of the favored petty pension cases which are reported here to-night.

Why, Mr. Speaker, we have passed over six Friday night pension sessions during this session of Congress. I have looked over the Calendar and find——

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, is this question of unanimous consent debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, except by consent.

Mr. RAY of New York. I raise the point of order that it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then I object to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BELKNAP. I trust the gentleman from Michigan will except this member from the Committee on Military Affairs, for that statement at least.

Mr. BRUCKER. If I am in order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I did not intend to include every member of the committee, and will except the gentleman from Illinois.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. RAY of New York. If this matter is settled, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 22, noes 1.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will proceed to count the House.

Before the count was completed,

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I move, pending the question of no quorum——

Mr. BRUCKER. Regular order!

Mr. TALBERT (continuing). That we pass over the bills for the removal of charges of desertion, if that motion is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order, the Chair would state.

Mr. BRUCKER. I object, and demand the regular order.

Mr. TALBERT. I raise the point of order that the motion is in order.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he would not agree to let members call up their own bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing on the other question, and the point of no quorum is still pending.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like consent to ask the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. BRUCKER. Regular order!

Mr. TALBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Now I renew the motion that we pass over all of these bills for the removal of charges of desertion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the result of the question which has just been submitted to the House.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I join with the gentleman from New York in asking that we proceed now with the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the result of the motion just submitted.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House, to consider bills on the Calendar under the rule, is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. CONNOLLY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole to consider bills under the rule which has been read.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, before going into Committee of the Whole I would like to ask a question, whether the gentleman from South Carolina would not consent that only those cases be taken up where the member who introduced the bill is present to look after it?

The CHAIRMAN. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to ask unanimous consent, and I appeal particularly to the gentleman from South Carolina, if he will not consent to allow those bills to be taken up for consideration for removal of charges of desertion where the member interested in the bill is present to take charge of it upon the floor of the House?

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, even if the gentleman from South Carolina consents. I would not like to sit here silently and see such an agreement entered into. I am not interested personally in any of the bills, and have reported one or two from the committee that I think are absolutely meritorious, and I would like to see some action taken on them if any action is to be taken upon any such bills to-night.

Mr. RAY of New York. Would it not satisfy the gentleman, then, to call up the bills for his friends who are specially interested in them?

Mr. JETT. Yes; that would satisfy me, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to sit here or stand here at this day and time, when our soldiers are being slaughtered, when we are engaged in a war, when men are being promoted for gallantry upon the battlefield—I am unwilling to be a party to pensioning those who have proved themselves to be cowards and who have turned their backs to the flag; and if gentlemen will consider the matter I do not believe they will insist to-night upon bringing up any measures here for the removal of charges of desertion.

We already have a tremendous pension roll, amounting to over $150,000,000. We have passed a bill here for the increase of the Army which will call for possibly another $150,000,000, making in the neighborhood of $300,000,000 for the military establishment of this country, more than is paid by any nation upon the face of the earth for its military establishment. Yet we continue to go on here recklessly sitting as a court of appeals for those who do not deserve pensions, who can not get them at the Pension Bureau, who come here and ask alms at the hands of this House.

I am opposed to it, and I think it is nothing but right and proper that we should first consider those who are asking for original pensions, who have never had any increase, and who ought to have pensions. Then we can take up those cases in which the charge of desertion was illegally made and consider them and remove the charge, if they deserve to have it removed, and let them also have pensions.

Only a few days ago, Mr. Chairman, I believe, a resolution was passed in the Senate relieving those soldiers who had gone into the Spanish-American war and letting them come back again onto the pension roll. If they were drawing pensions on account of being unable to earn a livelihood, I should like to know how it was that they were enabled to get into the Spanish-American war and yet at the end of that war come out and be restored to the pension roll. It is these fraudulent pensions and these outrageous claims that I have resisted here night after night, and I believe I am right.

A few days ago we had a combine here which passed a river and harbor bill, when men on both sides of this House joined together to rob the people and plunder the Treasury. Only a day or two ago we had what was termed the "hog combine" on public buildings, a still more flagrant robbery than the other combine.

We go on piling up these debts mountain high. I think the time has come when we should halt, when we should at least consider the advisability of acting as a court of appeals, to give pensions to those who do not deserve them and who can not get them under the general laws, which I think are sufficiently liberal to enable any man who ought to have a pension to go and get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think he will not object. I ask unanimous consent, and I trust I can have attention while I make the request. The gentleman from South Carolina is to be commended always for opposing any legislation which is improper.

Now, I ask unanimous consent that only those cases to remove charges of desertion be taken up to-night where the member interested is present, and such cases as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT] indicated that he had in charge for one or two of his colleagues.

I trust the gentleman will not object to that, because he can fight any bill if it appears to him to be unmeritorious.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not wish to appear in a rôle of contrariness, or obstinacy, or anything of that sort, and therefore I accept that as an amendment.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] for unanimous consent?

Mr. BRUCKER. Pending the unanimous consent, I desire to say that in the interest of many old soldiers who live in my district, whose claims are pending and have been pending for two years before the Committee on Military Affairs, and never have been reported out of that committee simply because the House would not consider them, because these objections to their consideration were raised, I object myself. I want these claims all to go together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, Mr. Chairman, he is the most contrary man that I have ever struck. [Laughter.] I do not know what to do with him. I do not believe he wants to consider any pensions himself. That is what is the matter with Hannah. [Laughter.] I myself want every old soldier who deserves a pension to have one, even if he has to come here to the court of appeals, as I call it. If he can prove to our satisfaction that he ought to have it, I am willing that this court here should give it to him.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly, my friend, my good-natured friend. I will answer a question.

Mr. BRUCKER. Has the gentleman from South Carolina during my two years' service ever noticed that I was absent on a Friday evening session?

Mr. TALBERT. I have never. I meant this as a piece of pleasantry. You are always present.

Mr. BRUCKER. Did the gentleman from South Carolina ever see me obstructing pension legislation?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I make the point of order——

Mr. TALBERT. I have been always able to understand the gentleman heretofore, but I must admit that I do not understand him to-night. Why, Mr. Chairman, we can not hear anything. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JOHN P. HENDERSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8306) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John P. Henderson and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against John P. Henderson, who enlisted as a private in Company H, One hundred and twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to grant to said John P. Henderson an honorable discharge.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read in this case.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 836) for the relief of John P. Henderson, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report as follows:

John P. Henderson was enrolled March 5, 1864, and mustered into service March 15, 1864, as a private in Company H, One hundred and twenty-fourth Indiana Infantry, to serve three years. He was captured by the enemy August 25, 1864, in front of Atlanta; was confined at Florence, S. C., whence he escaped November 26, 1864; was sent from Fort Columbus, New York Harbor, to Annapolis, Md., January 25, 1865; reported at Camp Parole, Maryland, January 27, 1865, and was transferred to College Green Barracks February 1, 1865. He appears to have been furloughed some time during the month of February, 1865, but failed to return from that furlough.

The committee further report that the testimony shows that at the time he was furloughed he went to Detroit, Mich., and from there to Lapeer, Mich.; then back to Detroit. From there he went to Chicago, to which place his aunt had removed while he was a soldier, and remained there until July, 1865. Before he enlisted his parents were both dead, and he was not 16 years of age, and the aunt he went to Chicago to find had brought him up since the death of his parents. At the time he was granted the furlough, and for some years afterwards, he was sick with the scurvy and with rheumatism and general debility, and at different times since, and by 1870 he had lost nearly all of his upper teeth by reason of the scurvy.

In July, 1865, the war was over, and his uncle, James Platt, was going to California, and took said John P. Henderson with him, thinking the climate would restore him to health. In 1886 or 1887 he applied to and received from the adjutant-general of Indiana a certificate of service, which he filed with his pension application.

The committee further report that the testimony shows that when he returned on a furlough and succeeded in finding his aunt, who had brought him up, he was not aware and did not know (the war being about over when his furlough expired, which was by the latter part of July, 1865) that it was necessary for him to return; that his aunt and uncle and friends all told him that nothing was necessary to be done, and that the Government had no further use for him and did not want him, and, being a boy and not knowing anything about military rules or order under such circumstances, he listened to and took the advice of his uncle and aunt and friends and went to California, where he remained for some years.

Your committee submit, in view of the testimony, that John P. Henderson is entitled to the relief prayed for, and the bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Add after the word "discharge," in line 8, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the gentleman who introduced this bill is present?

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I take especial delight in informing my friend that I introduced it. Not being successful in the combine he referred to a few moments ago, I hope my genial friend will allow this bill to pass.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman stopped the mill too soon is the reason why he was not successful. I would ask the gentleman to make a statement, as I gather from the reading of the report there is just a statement from the supposed deserter, and no evidence accompanying it, but just simply his own statement.

Mr. MERCER. Oh, no.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me in a case of this kind the committee ought to be supplied with better evidence than the mere statement of the party interested.

Mr. MERCER. There are plenty affidavits on file which make out this case. It is on this evidence and testimony that the report is made. This man to-day is in very bad health. I saw him in Omaha last fall just before I left, and he is very badly debilitated now. He entered the Army in 1864, when 16 years of age, a mere boy.

He has lost all his upper teeth, as the testimony shows, walks with a cane, and is not long for this world. It is only a short time ago that he found out that this charge was against him at all; and the Grand Army people in Omaha have written me and the post to which he belongs has passed resolutions in his favor, and it seems a very worthy case, so far as I know. I hope the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MERCER. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCKER. I notice that this case was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs on April 11 last year.

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUCKER. And the case was reported to the House at that time, was it not?

Mr. MERCER. Undoubtedly. It says, "Committed to the Committee of the Whole House April 11, 1898."

Mr. BRUCKER. And that case has been on this Calendar ever since?

Mr. MERCER. It has been passed by right along, the House refusing to consider charges of desertion.

Mr. BRUCKER. And for that reason the Committee on Military Affairs have not reported these cases removing the charge of desertion?

Mr. MERCER. I did not know that until I heard the gentleman state it to-night.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if the object of the claimant in this bill is to get a pension or does he just want this stigma removed?

Mr. MERCER. I understand it is to have the stigma removed.

Mr. TALBERT. Nothing else?

Mr. MERCER. That is all I know of. He does not like the stigma. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask if the gentleman would offer the usual amendment—that no pay or emolument shall accrue?

Mr. MERCER. The committee have reported that amendment with the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. He did not join any other command after he left his regiment?

Mr. MERCER. No, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. You do not know that he ever received any bounty?

Mr. MERCER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the fact that this bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs on April 11, 1898, simply confirms the statement I made a moment ago in support of my position that I did not desire to give my consent to passing over all these cases on the Calendar for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Now, I did not do that captiously nor for the purpose of hindering or delaying the consideration of cases. I did that, and do it for the purpose of protecting myself and for the purpose of protecting the old soldiers—my constituents. It has come to this pass, that the members of this House who have a particular pull upon some certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Invalid Pensions can get bills reported from those two committees that those who have not can not.

I notice from this Calendar that there has been a few bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs since January 1, even since I was informed the committee would not consider and report these bills. Why they should make this statement to me and then turn around and report a bill for some other member is beyond my comprehension. Let me say this, that the gentleman who introduced this bill, for whom this committee reported the bill, happened to be the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings——

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. BRUCKER (continuing). I do not know why that should be any reason why the Committee on Military Affairs should consider a bill introduced by him sooner than a bill introduced by myself. I represent a constituency made up as largely of the old-soldier element as any constituency in the United States, and I think I have their confidence; and I am here, and have been here, looking after their interests, and that is what I am doing to-night. I propose, if this Committee on Military Affairs report bills removing the charge of desertion, they shall even up and report as many of my bills, proportionately to the number in there, as they report bills that have been introduced by any other member of this House, and the same is true with reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Does the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BRUCKER. Not at present.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman had better not, because he knows he is not telling the truth.

Mr. BRUCKER. I did not yield for a question from the gentleman from New York, nor did I yield for an insult.

Mr. RAY of New York. You got that.

Mr. BRUCKER. Certainly, and nothing else could have been expected, nothing else from that source. No, I did not intend to go into any detailed statement with reference to the conduct of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. But the House is aware of the fact—at least those who have taken any interest in pension legislation—that the honored chairman of that committee, during the dying hours of the second session of this Congress, took advantage of the opportunity to herald to the country that the Democratic side of this House had been opposing pension legislation. He took advantage of the situation to criticise a member on this side of the Chamber who was absent. And yet the fact is patent and stands out, admitted by all, that during this session of Congress the honored chairman who is such a "great friend" of the Union soldier, so anxious to pass these private pension bills, has allowed to slip by six different pension nights.

I say to the chairman of that committee, who undertakes to hurl the lie in my teeth, I simply say to him that a statement like that coming from him is simply beneath my contempt. I say to him that if he had been interested in securing pension legislation for the old soldiers of this country he would not have allowed six pension nights to go by without a session and have reported but 60 pension bills during this session out of 6,000 now pending before that committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not any interest aside from the one common to us all in the particular case pending before the committee at the present time. I have not a doubt but what it is a meritorious claim for the removal of the charge of desertion, and that the bill ought to pass. God knows it slept long enough in the Committee on Military Affairs, and God knows it has slept long enough here. It would have slept beyond the period of this session had I not interposed an objection to unanimous consent that it go over again to-night, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in order that we may get out of this trouble, that each member be permitted to call up one bill and let that be passed upon.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the bills are on the Calendar and they must be considered in their regular order, and I object.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not let this opportunity go by to reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER]. In the first place, he started out with a tirade against the Committee on Military Affairs. As to what has been done or not done by that committee I will say nothing, for I know nothing. I have not been a member of that committee, but it consists of eminent and honorable gentlemen. They have reported much valuable and important legislation.

Now, in regard to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, he turns his venomous tongue against that committee and insinuates that there has been favoritism in the reporting of bills from that committee, and that some man must have a pull to get a report from that committee. That I resent, and I resent it now and here. I say to the country and to the members of this House that among the bills introduced by the gentlemen of this House, first considered and first reported, were more than one presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER] who made that insinuation against the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

He was treated better than some members of that committee in the reporting of bills, and his bills were put through the House early. Now, in his zeal and in his anger, and perchance in his ignorance, he has reiterated a charge that since the meeting of this session of Congress the Committee on Invalid Pensions has "reported out" some 60 bills only. We have passed already more than 60 bills reported during this session, and they now lie in the Senate unacted upon.

We have now upon the Calendar something like fifty more bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Since the meeting of this session of Congress I have drawn with my own hand more than 125 reports from that committee upon pension bills. And it is fortunate for the gentleman and for the House and for the country that before he came here to-night to make the speech he has made against pensions and pensioners his constituents passed upon his case.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to reply to any of the mean, contemptible, underhand flings indulged in by the gentleman from New York. It seems that he desires, enjoys, and relishes the rolling of these invectives as sweet morsels under his tongue. I simply want to say this in reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York: He is well aware of the fact that of the bills reported from his committee a large number are bills that have come over from the Senate after passing muster through the Committee on Pensions of that body; and the large number of bills to which he calls our attention are not the work of this committee.

In conclusion let me say that the gentleman does not refute the statement I made that he deliberately allowed six Friday nights to pass by without any meeting of the House for pension business—no session held at all. He could have insisted upon the consideration of pension business upon every one of those six Friday nights. He does not dispute the fact that slumbering in his committee room to-day are something like five or six thousand of these bills. No; he prefers to make a personal attack, going outside of the record to indulge in street-gutter slang, and that, too, from a man occupying the "high and exalted" position of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives. And, with that, Mr. Chairman, I leave this matter.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is just what I attempted in the beginning of the session to-night to avoid—this everlasting talk and talk and talk about the removal of charges of desertion. I knew it would come to that, and hence I wanted to keep these cases out of the way and let the deserving old soldiers come in. And now it may be that a half dozen of them have died while we are here trying to remove the stigma of the charges of desertion from this man. This is what I tried to prevent. And now I feel like saying:

> Thou canst not say I did it; never shake
> Thy gory locks at me.

[Laughter.]

And I want to say there is danger of talking too much. I am reminded of the story of a man who died in a far-off city. His brothers were telegraphed to come and get his remains. They telegraphed to an undertaker to embalm the body, to put it in a nice casket with a nice suit of clothing upon it, and they would come after it. The undertaker did as directed. The brothers of the dead man came on. They went to the undertaker's shop; they looked through the glass of the casket, and lo and behold! the dead man's mouth was wide open, and he had no teeth. Then one said to the other, "Well, brother Tom, that is not our brother; our brother had teeth."

So they told the undertaker they would not take the body. Then the undertaker carried the casket into a back room, took out the body, took off the nice suit of clothes, and put the corpse into a pine box; and that undertaker was heard to say: "You damned fool! If you had kept your mouth shut, you might have had a decent burial."

Now, then, here you are with your mouth open, trying to remove charges of desertion from men who do not deserve it; men who were cowards, who turned their back on their country, while there may be some old soldier dying, in want and penury, while waiting for his pension.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of order that it is out of order on the floor to introduce in the debates here a story that is so old as to be unsavory. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I did not expect anything else from my venerable friend from Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman.

I have read somewhere in the Book of Proverbs about "a whip for a horse, a bridle for an ass, and a rod for the back of a fool." I do not want to put my friend from Massachusetts in either category, so I will leave him alone, because I do not know whether he is a horse, a jackass, or a fool, or a combination of all. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I hope I will have the attention of the committee for a few moments to make a proposition. I have taken up no time whatever in any Friday night meeting during the present Congress, although I think I have attended every meeting held. I have not had any lavish amount of bills reported of the many introduced by myself during the entire two years of my service here. But I have made no complaint of it and make none now. I have thought that the committee was doing the best it could under existing circumstances.

But I rise to a question, if it be in order, or to make a request. I feel sure that there are a number of very meritorious claims on the Calendar where soldiers ask pensions. I ask unanimous consent that we may first consider those cases.

Would it not be better—do we not all believe that it would be better, when we stop to think of it—to pass the pension cases first, and pass over the cases of desertion as they are reached and take them up another night, or to-night after we get through with the pension cases, if there is time? Or if anybody is to get a pension, is it not better that these old soldiers should be considered who are in want and whose demand has been pending before us for so long a time? If anybody is to wait, let it be these men who are desirous of having these charges against them removed, rather than the men who are absolutely suffering for the pension that is due them by the Government. I know of some instances where there are meritorious and deserving men absolutely helpless because of the delay in granting the pensions to which they are entitled. Now, I would like very much to see some relief given to these people.

Mr. BRUCKER. Is not that just what I have been trying to do for a year past?

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I ask that the bill under consideration be now disposed of and that we pass over the cases of desertion and take up the pension bills.

I will ask my colleague from Nebraska, in order to get the pension claims through, if he will not consent to withdraw the case now before the committee, for the removal of a charge of desertion, and let the cases of deserving pensioners be first disposed of?

Mr. MERCER. In response to my colleague, I will say I know this case personally. He is a man of family, with children, a good soldier, and we can pass this bill while we are talking about it. It is an entirely deserving case.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. But if we pass this there will be others behind it unless we make this order.

Mr. MERCER. Besides that, this bill is in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. It will not put a dollar in the pocket of this man nor a loaf of bread in his larder to pass it; while there are numerous meritorious cases of soldiers and their widows actually suffering for the necessaries of life, because they can not get the relief to which they are entitled.

Mr. MERCER. It will not take a minute to pass this bill through the committee.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. But there are thirty-five others, as I understand, to follow it in a row. And I wanted to ask unanimous consent, if the gentleman does not withdraw this case, in justice to these men, as I believe, that we then take up the claims of pensioners first, and then, of course, after the pension claims are disposed of, if there is any further time, to take up these cases and act upon them.

Now I do not want to take up any time of the committee, but I ask unanimous consent that that course be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. BRUCKER. I object.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me quite evident from what has transpired here to-night that we will not be allowed to transact any business at all except by unanimous consent.

Now I want to ask unanimous consent for a proposition that I do not think any man in the House will object to. I want to ask unanimous consent that we take up first on the Calendar all of those pension claims; and if there are any deserving claimants for the removal of charges of desertion growing out of the Mexican war—I think there are perhaps a few of the latter class of claims—it seems to me that if they are ever to be attended to at all it must be to-night.

I ask unanimous consent, then, that these bills, relating to the Mexican war pensions, and for the removal of the charge of desertion, if there be any on account of that war, be taken up for consideration.

Mr. RIDGELY. After this one is disposed of.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say to the gentleman that the pension bills on the Calendar, first in order, are those making provision for Mexican war pensions and Indian wars. They are ahead of all the others.

Mr. VANDIVER. But not ahead of the bills for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is probably so, but they are ahead of all of the other pension cases.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will not the gentleman consent to take up those cases growing out of the Mexican war before these cases of desertion?

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman seems to be under the impression that I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not. Other gentlemen——

Mr. VANDIVER. I did not hear any member of that committee objecting.

Mr. RAY of New York. Other gentlemen have charge of those bills. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER] a few moments ago referred to the fact that I said I cared nothing for the bills relating to charges of desertion. What I meant was, that as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I had no charge or control over those bills and no knowledge of them. Those gentlemen who are interested in the desertion cases must take care of them and take charge of them.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for any further explanation. If the gentleman wishes to make an objection to the request I have made, he can do so.

Mr. RAY of New York. No, I do not.

Mr. VANDIVER. Let some other man object then, or let the request be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his request again?

Mr. VANDIVER. I request simply that we first take up those pension claims growing out of the Mexican war. There are a few of them to be considered, and I do not think the gentleman will object to that.

Mr. BRUCKER. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has already stated that most of the cases that follow are claims arising out of the Mexican and Indian wars.

Mr. SIMS. They are the first.

Mr. McRAE. I ask that the cases arising out of the Indian wars be included.

Mr. VANDIVER. They come next. Then let the others come on. We will make provision for them as we get to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state distinctly what his request is?

Mr. VANDIVER. My request is that those claims growing out of the Mexican war be taken up first.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. There are seventeen of them first on the Calendar and I hope the gentleman will not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of being consistent, I object. Let us clean up the Calendar as we go along.

Mr. SIMS. I want to make a request that I think the House will not object to; that is, that we take up such cases for the removal of charges of desertion as are represented by members here to-night who want them considered. That certainly is fair, and if there is objection to that we might as well move to adjourn.

Mr. TALBERT. That is already the order, as I understand it.

Mr. SIMS. No; that was objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, pending that request—the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] is correct in one portion of his statement and incorrect in the other. That request——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Never mind.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, if the gentleman from New York wants the floor, I yield.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from New York has said nothing, sir.

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, some one on that side did.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is, Will the House give unanimous consent to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]?

Mr. BRUCKER. Pending that, let me make this statement, that unanimous consent was asked that cases of desertion be passed over where the parties introducing the bill were not present, and I objected. Now, for the purpose of being consistent, I again object.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GIBSON. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The question is on the amendments to the bill read by the Clerk.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES GEISSINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5758) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James Geissinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now borne on the records of the War Department against the name of James Geissinger, formerly a member of Company A, Seventy-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred for consideration House bill 5758, respectfully report as follows:

This bill is for the purpose of removing the charge of desertion now borne on the records of the War Department against the name of James Geissinger, enrolled as private in Company A, Seventy-second Ohio Infantry. We have made careful examination of the records and sworn testimony submitted, and find that the said Geissinger enlisted October 18, 1861, at the age of 16 years, and served under such enrollment until January 1, 1864, when he reenlisted as a veteran volunteer in the same company and regiment.

It is established that he was a brave, faithful, enthusiastic soldier, performing with cheerful fidelity every duty until October 19, 1864, when he is reported as "deserted" on the military records.

The evidence shows that Private Geissinger at that time was with his company in the State of Missouri, with other troops, in pursuit of the Confederate general (Price) and his forces.

For some time previous to this Geissinger had been suffering from diarrhea and consequent debility, but with indomitable spirit had kept up and remained in line with his comrades in their constant and continued marches through Arkansas and Missouri until on a forced march after night near Sedalia, Mo., his strength gave out. He reported to the officer in command of his company, Lieut. J. F. Herrington, who sent him to the major of the regiment. The major told him that every ambulance was full, that there were no other means of transportation, and advised him to do the best he could for himself.

For a while Geissinger struggled along with the troops until about midnight, when he sank from exhaustion and was left by the roadside in a semi-conscious condition. He fell asleep and did not awaken until the next day, alone and with no knowledge of the location of his comrades. He started to find them, but, weak with debility and hunger, could not go far. Applying at a house for food and information, he was told it would be impossible to reach his command on account of the guerrillas and bushwhackers infesting the region.

He, however, started out to make the attempt, wandering through woods and byways for several days, when his strength failed and he was compelled to give up the attempt, and found a stopping place with a kindly farmer, where he remained until January, 1865, when he started out again in search of his company, but the difficulties were so great—the country infested with scattered guerrilla bands; having no means, weak in body, and ignorant of the country and the location of the forces of either army—that he became discouraged from attempting to face the dangerous risk of trying to reach his regiment, and decided to wait until an opportunity should arise to either bring the Army near him or carry him in safety to the Union lines.

This he did until, within a few months, Lee surrendered and the war closed. In his youth and inexperience Geissinger was ignorant of the necessity of his being regularly mustered out of the service; hence did not after that seek to return to his regiment. While in one way it has no direct bearing on this case, we deem it well to say that Geissinger's father and three of his brothers served in the Union Army, and were honorably discharged, except two of his brothers, who were killed in battle.

Finally, your committee finds that James Geissinger was a patriotic youth, a diligent, faithful, conscientious soldier; that his separation from his company was beyond his control; that he imperiled his life in his attempt to rejoin his command, and made every reasonable effort to complete his full term of enlistment, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

Add after the word "Infantry," in line 7, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask if the gentleman who introduced the bill is present? If not, I ask that it be passed over and put at the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. SIMS. Pending that question, I ask unanimous consent that all bills removing the charge of desertion be passed over for to-night and that we take up pension bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee requests that all other bills removing the charge of desertion be passed over.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

Mr. SIMS. We may as well adjourn, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the bill be laid aside with an unfavorable report. I ask unanimous consent to pass it over and put it at the foot of the Calendar, as there is nobody here to represent the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Let us agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCKER. I object to that.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the bill be laid upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 20.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Regular order!

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a meritorious case from the reading of the report. I think it would be a better plan that the request of the gentleman from South Carolina should be agreed to, and let the bill lie over by unanimous consent.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8179.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not a quorum present. The point has been made by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, pending the count for a quorum I wish to appeal to the gentleman who raised the question of no quorum to withdraw the point.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum on the solicitation of gentlemen; but I would like the chairman of the committee to explain and state whether or not there are certificates bearing out the statements made by the claimant in this case, or if we are to pass it on the ipse dixit of this man himself, provided it suits the gentleman from Massachusetts; but if it does not, I withdraw the remark.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What was the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not want to do anything that is not pleasant to my distinguished friend. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question pending before the committee. The question is whether or not the bill shall be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the regular clincher upon that, too?

Mr. BELKNAP. The amendment is on the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. That no pay or emolument shall become due by reason of the passage of the bill. He only wants the stigma removed.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. We are only looking after the stigmas.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LEVI M. TRUITT.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee for its consideration of the bill H. R. 8179. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state to this committee——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The Calendar number is 1132, a bill for the relief of Levi M. Truitt.

Mr. Chairman, I want to state to this committee that I have been a member of Congress six years. I never have had a pension bill passed, nor have I ever objected to the consideration of a bill. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to consider this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill called up by him.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, pending the request for unanimous consent I want to say that the gentleman from Texas who makes this request for unanimous consent is a member of my own political party, has a seat on this side of the Chamber, and there is no gentleman in the House to whom I would sooner grant a courtesy of that kind than the gentleman from Texas; but I am here for the purpose of cleaning up this Calendar and getting rid of bills that have been here for months and months; and for that reason I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan objects. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

JAMES M'KENZIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3804) for the relief of James McKenzie.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to remove the charge of desertion standing against James McKenzie, of Company D, First Battalion Eleventh United States Infantry, and issue to him an honorable discharge to date from August 26, 1865.

With the following committee amendment:

Add the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will not a statement from the chairman of the committee answer the gentleman's purpose as well?

Mr. BELKNAP. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that this was so long ago that I can not remember the details. I do not remember whose bill it is, and I would ask the Chairman to state whose bill it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HULL.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BELKNAP] when this bill was reported?

Mr. BELKNAP. Not at this session, but I can not give the date.

Mr. BRUCKER. Does not the Calendar, which the gentleman has before him, state when it was?

Mr. BELKNAP. It does; April 18, 1898.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if the motion is in order, the gentleman who introduced the bill is not here pressing it, and I move it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BELKNAP. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member. I went home with him in the street car to-night, and he is suffering from a very bad throat. Members all know that he is not strong now.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, well, if the gentleman from Iowa made the request of the gentleman from Illinois to look after his bill for him, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his motion?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. BELKNAP), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3804) for the relief of James McKenzie, would respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass, with the following amendment:

Add after the word "sixty-five," in line 7 of the bill, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The committee find the facts in this case to be as follows:

The soldier enlisted on November 8, 1864, in Company A, Third Battalion, Eleventh United States Infantry; he was subsequently transferred to Company B, First Battalion of the same regiment: the records show him to have deserted on August 26, 1865, and that he never returned to his command. On March 6, 1866, he again enlisted in Company F, Third Battalion, Twelfth United States Infantry, serving honorably until March 6, 1869, when he was discharged by reason of expiration of term of enlistment. On September 11, 1883, the War Department furnished the soldier a discharge to date from August 26, 1865. While this discharge was not in terms a dishonorable discharge, the Commissioner of Pensions in his ruling has decided that it is a discharge without honor.

The soldier states in his behalf that in August, 1865, he received a letter from his father stating that he (his father) was at the point of death and wanted to see the soldier before he died. The soldier states that his captain gave him a leave to go home for fifteen days. During this leave he was taken sick and unable to leave home for six months. He wrote to his captain to this effect, but received no answer.

In the spring of 1866, when he again became able for military duty, he went to New York City and reported to the recruiting officer that he was a member of the Eleventh Infantry, and asked the recruiting officer to notify the captain of his company in the Eleventh that it was his intention to enlist in the Twelfth United States Infantry, and he did so enlist, supposing the record would be properly made and it would be satisfactory.

Your committee, after a careful consideration of this case, are of the opinion that the soldier left his command with no intention of deserting, and that he voluntarily returned with the intention of going back into the Army without knowing that he was doing wrong by enlisting in another regiment instead of going back to his proper regiment.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems from the reading of the report, if I heard it correctly—there was so much talking I could not hear very well—that this soldier deserted and reenlisted. The presumption is that he did that to receive a bounty. Possibly he may have enlisted two or three times and received a bounty each time. I submit that it is not a meritorious claim.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the report says that he had three years' service, which is a good, long, valuable service; and if the committee passed it, I would be willing to rely on the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. Lucifer was once an angel of light, but he turned to darkness. [Laughter.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not quite see the application.

Mr. TALBERT. Benedict Arnold was once a good soldier, but he turned traitor.

Mr. CASTLE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the United States Government never paid any bounty, and the report shows that this man enlisted in the Regular Army.

Mr. BELKNAP. He did, in the Regular Army.

Mr. CASTLE. Bounties were only paid by counties and States.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move that that bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—aye 1, noes 18.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make the point of no quorum, but I want to suggest to members that this is quite a thin House for legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOTKIN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we are not legislating very much to-night.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to know what dictionary the gentleman gets his definition from.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES ROCHE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2412) to amend the military record of James Roche.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of James Roche so as to show him honorably discharged from Company K, One hundred and fifty-fifth New York Volunteers, and to grant him such honorable discharge.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommend the following amendment:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I have seldom ever obtruded myself or my views upon this House. I am going to make a motion, but before doing it, let me in all frankness and in candor say to each member here present that we have been here one hour and a quarter and there have been three bills removing the charge of desertion passed the House. There are, so I am told, 37 other bills, and it must be perfectly apparent to every member present that we can accomplish very little here to-night.

Every member who is present to-night is here for some object. Business has brought him here. I am here, my friend is here, we are all here for a certain object; and my motion is this, and I do trust that my friend from Michigan and the distinguished gentleman from New York will not object, in view of the surroundings. I move that every member present be permitted to call up one bill by unanimous consent, and after we shall have finished that we shall return to the Calendar where we have left it and proceed with removing charges of desertion. Gentlemen, that is fair; there is nothing wrong in that. If I thought there were, I would not submit it.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Does that include all bills?

Mr. BURKE. One member shall call up any bill he wishes to on the Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; that can not be done to-night.

Mr. BURKE. While I am here I want to say this, Mr. Chairman: I agree thoroughly with the suggestions made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. I have a contempt for a deserter, and I believe the House of Representatives and the American people ought to give relief first to the old soldiers and to the wives and children of the old soldiers before they are called upon to give relief to men who deserted the flag in the hour of danger.

I have a contempt for such a class of men as that. If it were left to me individually, I would never vote to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of any man in the United States, I care not who he may be. I believe we ought to pass this bill in justice to the soldier, in justice to his widow, and in justice to his children. I ask the gentleman not to object.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been here every Friday night, when we have had a meeting of the House, to take care of this legislation. I have noticed this—and I call attention to it emphatically—that when a gentleman gets a bill on the Calendar he attends these Friday night sessions; and he never attends them unless he has a bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BURKE. If that remark is intended to apply to me, I wish to say to the gentleman that I attended the meeting of this House last Friday night, and I had no bill on the Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then the gentleman has been here twice.

Mr. BURKE. Yes; twice. There have been only two or three meetings of the committee—I am not sure how many.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that it is very evident he is incorrect in his statement, because bills are now pending on the Calendar that have no one here to represent them.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. The gentleman from New York will allow me to say for one that I have been here, I think, every Friday night.

Mr. RAY of New York. And you have a bill on the Calendar to-night.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. But I have been here every Friday night when there has been a meeting of the House during the present session of Congress. That is my recollection. And certainly I have not had a bill on the Calendar every Friday night.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman from New York allow me——

Mr. RAY of New York. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. Let me say that last Friday night we had a meeting here, and we cleared up every bill on the Calendar. When we came here there was no time spent in talking except when the gentleman from South Carolina asked for some explanation of a bill; when the explanation was given, we went on. We passed last Friday night over fifty bills; and one night when we proceeded in the same way we passed over sixty. Now we came here to-night at 8 o'clock, and the very first thing that was started was talk, talk, talk, and quarrelings, and reflections, first upon the Committee on Military Affairs and then upon other committees, then reflections upon individual members.

There are on this Calendar about 20 bills for soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars, nearly all of them from the South. I want to say to my Democratic friends on the other side of the House that they have nearly the same number of bills on the Calendar that the Republicans have. I know whom those bill represent. They come from Texas and Mississippi and almost every State of the South.

We have to-night spent an hour and twenty minutes in talk, each member trying to get his bill ahead of the others. Now, if we had spent this time in considering the bills in their regular order, the desertion bills would have been out of the way, the Mexican war pension bills would have been out of the way, and by 10 o'clock every bill upon the Calendar that could be considered here to-night would have been through the Committtee of the Whole, and by half past 10 o'clock they would have been through the House and ready to go to the Senate.

Now, I appeal to gentlemen, as each case is taken up, to listen either to the report or to a statement of the case, and to pass the bill and then go on, thus doing all we can to-night; and next Friday night let us come here with a determination to pursue the same course, and by half past 10 o'clock you will have the Calendar cleared. That is the way to do business. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER] for a question.

Mr. VANDIVER. My purpose was not so much to ask a question as to make this statement: That I think the gentleman from New York has done quite as much talking to-night as anybody else, and has consumed quite as much time. I am sure that for my part I have done very little, and what little I have done was for the purpose of expediting business rather than retarding it.

The gentleman started out by saying that he had been here every Friday night when we had had a meeting. Now, without intending to reflect upon anybody or irritate anybody, I should like to know why it is that with five or six thousand pension bills before the Committee on Invalid Pensions we have had no other meeting during these past weeks. I believe this is only the second or the third meeting during this session of Congress.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me answer the gentleman. The House of Representatives has had nearly one hundred of its bills constantly before the Senate not acted upon. We have now something like eighty pension bills before the Senate awaiting its action.

Mr. VANDIVER. Well, let the Senate be responsible for the delay.

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). And before the Senate disposes of them we will have eighty more ready for them. We will have, at all events, from eighty to one hundred bills unacted upon by the Senate all the time.

Mr. VANDIVER. I would like to ask if the gentleman from New York would consider it a reasonable answer to an objection as to any other bill that might be pending that we should not pass it or give it attention now because we have reason to suspect that the Senate would not consider it? Is that a reason to stop legislation here? I want some better reason why there has not been an opportunity to get rid of all of these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question of the gentleman from Texas, that each member present be allowed to call up one bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have already objected to that, Mr. Chairman, and renew the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. But the question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, which is not subject to objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRUCKER. I raise the point of order that it is not in order to entain the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. BURKE. It is too late now, as the motion has once been submitted to the House, and the Chair announced that it had been carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the motion, as there was some confusion before.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BURKE; and it was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then I suppose the order proposed would be the alphabetical order of the members present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state first that the bill (H. R. 2412) to amend the military record of James Roche was being considered by the committee, and the first question will be on the amendments proposed by the committee to that bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I now call up the bill H. R. 8179——

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we have some order, or the call of the roll, in this business.

Mr. RAY of New York. I make the point of order that the committee can not change the order of the bills on the Calendar or the calling of the bills, except by unanimous consent. The rule of the House requires that when we go into Committee of the Whole the bills shall be taken up in their order on the Calendar.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken. We have repeatedly laid aside bills and taken up others.

Mr. RAY of New York. Only by unanimous consent. The rule requires the bills to be taken up in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The rule provides:

In the Committee of the Whole House business on their Calendars may be taken up in the regular order, or in such order as the Committee may determine.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then I am in order in my request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bills be called in their order on the Calendar, and where the member is present that the bill be considered.

The motion was agreed to.

EMILY M'LAINE.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11420) to pension Emily McLaine.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Emily McLaine, widow of M. T. McLaine, late a private in Capt. Samuel Moore's Company, D, First Arkansas Volunteers, Mounted Gun Men, 1836 (called out for the protection of the Sabine frontier), and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The committee recommended the adoption of the following amendments:

Change the spelling of the claimant's and soldier's surname to "McLain."
In line 9 strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Emily McLain."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEVI M. TRUIT.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8179) for the relief of Levi M. Truitt.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Levi M. Truitt, a soldier in the Mexican war, and is authorized and directed to pay to the said Levi M. Truitt the sum of $12 per month as pension.

The committee recommended the adoption of the following amendments:

Change the spelling of the claimant's surname to "Truit."
Strike out all after the word "war" in line 5 and substitute therefor the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Levi M. Truit."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JUDITH DOHERTY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 11899) granting a pension to Judith Doherty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Judith Doherty, widow of William F. Doherty, late a corporal in Captain Russell's company, First Regiment Volunteer Mounted Gunmen, West Tennessee, Indian war of 1818, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALBERT PUTNAM.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the next bill on the Calendar is that to pension Albert Putnam. My colleague [Mr. HULL] had charge of that bill. He has been ill a good deal of the time lately and unable to be here at the day sessions of the House. He asked that in case such an order was made as has been made this evening he might be excused from the effect of it. Of course members all know the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asks unanimous consent that the succeeding bill may be taken up, notwithstanding the absence of the gentleman who introduced it in consequence of his sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 9702) granting a pension to Albert Putnam, Company E, Twenty-first United States Infantry, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States at $12 per month, under the limitations and regulations of the Pension Bureau, Albert Putnam, late a member of Company E, Twenty-first United States Infantry.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amendments:

Strike out of the title all after the word "Putnam."
Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute therefor the following:
"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Albert Putnam, late of Company E, Twenty-first United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FLORA STANTON KALK.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, the bill (S. 4775) granting a pension to Flora Stanton Kalk has been passed over. I represent that bill. I introduced a similar bill in the House, but the House committee adopted the Senate bill. Am I not entitled under the order made this evening to call up the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that under the order made by the House the gentleman, being present, can call up the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Flora Stanton Kalk, and infant children, widow of First Lieut. Frank Green Kalk, late of the Fifth United States Infantry.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 6 strike out "and infant children," and after the word "Infantry," in line 8, add the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT FLOWER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7632) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Robert Flower.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records of the War Department the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Robert Flower, late a private in Company E of the Seventy-ninth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and to issue to said Robert Flower a certificate of honorable discharge from said organization.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:
"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE BROWN.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 10385 has been passed over. I introduced that bill and have been present here this evening. I was called out into the lobby for a few moments and the bill was passed over during that time. I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to have his bill called up.

The bill (H. R. 10385) for the relief of George Brown was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of George Brown, late of Company G, Tenth United States Cavalry, and Company M, Ninth United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended that the title of the bill be amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to George Brown."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM MOORE.

Mr. JETT. I ask to take up the bill (H. R. 11615) removing the charge of desertion from the record of William Moore, Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, No. 1061 on the Calendar. It appears to have been passed over. The gentleman who introduced the bill is not present, but wished me to look after it.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. You can not take it up under the order which has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that would not come within the order of the House.

HARRIETTE F. HOVEY.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill S. 2616, No. 1157 on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2616) granting a pension to Harriette F. Hovey was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriette F. Hovey, widow of Charles E. Hovey, late colonel of the Thirty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers and brevet major-general of volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN M. PALMER.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the bill S. 5342, Calendar No. 1156. The House bill was introduced by the gentleman who now occupies the chair [Mr. CONNOLLY], and I think it is right that that should be considered.

The bill (S. 5342) granting a pension to John M. Palmer was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John M. Palmer, late major-general, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let us have the report on that bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire the report read?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I desire the report read on that.

The report (by Mr. RAY of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5342) granting a pension to John M. Palmer, late a major-general in the volunteer service of the United States during the war of the rebellion, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto and most respectfully report:

The Senate act proposes to pension at $100 per month John M. Palmer, of Springfield, Ill.

The act as amended and reported to the House proposes to pension him at $50 per month.

The beneficiary of this bill, John M. Palmer, was elected colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry on the 9th day of May, 1861; was made brigadier-general of volunteers, and later was made major-general of volunteers. He resigned in September, 1866, having held many important commands, including that of the Fourteenth Army Corps in the Atlanta campaign and the military department of Kentucky, and having participated in many important battles. His military service was valuable and most honorable. Prior to the war he held civil offices, including that of probate judge, and after the war held many civil offices, including that of United States Senator from the State of Illinois.

Nearly always an officeholder and always strictly honest, he finds himself now, in his eighty-second year, retired to private life without means or income, broken in health, blind in one eye and rapidly losing the sight of the other. It is not claimed, however, that his present physical or financial condition in any way results from his army service.

Under the general law applicable to all soldiers of the Republic in like condition (the disability not being of service origin), he is entitled to a pension of $12 per month and no more.

Were his present disabilities of service origin, he would be entitled to a pension of $50 per month; and should his disabilities (were they of service origin) so increase as to require the frequent and periodical attendance of a third person, that pension could be increased to $50 per month.

We are not to pension General Palmer because he has been a distinguished man in civil life, but because he was a most capable, brave, and efficient officer during the civil war. When a United States Senator General Palmer was for many years chairman of the Committee on Pensions in that body, and while he was always just and liberal in his treatment of the old soldiers, his comrades in arms, he was consistent and believed that equality is equity, and was always opposed to large and sentimental pensions, based on social standing and political pull, for a few favored ones, while the great mass of the brave and needy only draw $12 per month when totally disabled from earning a living by reason of disease not contracted in the service.

Fifty dollars per month is all that General Palmer himself will approve, for he wants no different treatment accorded him than the Government accords others of equal rank in the service and equal need now. That sum will afford him a reasonable support and lift him above want. The thousands of his old comrades in arms, equally brave and equally in necessitous circumstances, must be remembered and a reasonable provision made for them by special legislation when exceptional cases of great merit are presented.

The Senate act is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desired the reading of this report in order to emphasize to the House the situation here presented. Here is an applicant for a pension who, under the law, is not entitled to it. It is urged in his favor that he is old, decrepit, and unable to make a living. The same grounds might be urged in favor of every soldier of the late war who receives no pension to-day.

General Palmer was in public life a man of eminence; and while the old soldiers who have four or five thousand bills before the Invalid Pensions Committee of this House are waiting they could urge the same reasons for the consideration of their bills as are presented here. They did not have the advantage of large salaries in public office to support those dependent upon them in affluence and to enable them to save something for a rainy day.

So we find a situation here based largely on sentimentality, because it can not be claimed under any construction of the law that General Palmer is entitled to a pension. Why is he entitled to a pension any more than thousands of soldiers who are knocking now at the door of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and knocking at the door of the Committee on Pensions? Can it be said by reason of his age that he is entitled to it?

I have here also a bill—it was presented in the Senate anterior to the one before the House—for a worthy soldier, Gen. Albert P. Godding, who is insane, deaf, debilitated, and incapacitated both in mind and body by reason of heavy cannonading in battles through which he passed; and his bill was passed in the Senate long before this bill. It passed that body long, long ago. He is left to die insane, a charge practically upon the public, and will be buried by the public maybe without any consideration of his claim by the Invalid Pension Committee.

Now, if there is any case under the sun where the line should be drawn, where care should be used in voting the public money, it is a case such as is presented here. Private soldiers who may have been of less age than General Palmer have fought their battles; many were wounded; and they do not seek nor receive the consideration that is sought by the applicant. Not only that, but here we have the spectacle presented of having a wedge entering in our Government policy. One precedent will create another. They soon accumulate and constitute law. What yesterday was fact, to-day is custom. So that if you pension one who is not entitled to a pension, how can you avoid the irresistible conclusion that you must pension all?

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman would not desire, I know, to lead himself, the House, or the country into error.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I did not catch the gentleman's statement.

Mr. RAY of New York. You would not desire to lead the House, the country, or yourself into error.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If there is any fact you have, I would be glad for you to state it.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have stated once or twice, inadvertently, I know, that General Palmer under no circumstances would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Under the law.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, certainly. Under the law he is entitled to a pension of $12 a month.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood from the reading of the report he was not entitled to a pension of $12 only.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is given above $12 is an increase on account of rank and pecuniary necessity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And now it is sought to pension him at the rate of $50 a month?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right. By way of an increase, on account of rank and his blindness.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What would he be entitled to?

Mr. RAY of New York. Twelve dollars per month. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, you have referred to Mr. Godding. He is insane; he is in an institution for the insane. We have here a Government Hospital for the Insane. He is in St. Elizabeth's and is taken care of by the United States, and having the very best care that can be given to any human being. He has no one on earth dependent upon him and no family, and the public is taking care of him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I appeal to the gentleman, who was a soldier himself, whether a man who went through the civil war, as did hundreds of thousands of soldiers, ought to-day to be a public charge, or when he is laid away ought he to be buried at the expense of the public?

Mr. RAY of New York. Will you permit me right there?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly; an interruption does not embarrass me.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman and I will not quarrel over this. Now, then, the gentleman that you refer to, Mr. Godding, is insane. He can not be taken care of in a private family; he must be kept in a place designed for the care of the insane, and that is where he is now. If he had a pension of a thousand dollars a month he could not have any better attention; if he had a pension of a thousand dollars a day he could not be taken out of that asylum; he would have to remain where he is. The United States Government is taking care of him now.

Remember that General Palmer is blind and poor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, I have never criticised——

Mr. LACEY. I would also like to make an additional suggestion. St. Elizabeth's is a national place, and Mr. Godding is being taken care of by the National Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In response to the suggestion that we need to hurry along, I have only this to say, that we have been denied evenings for pension consideration, and gentlemen should use their efforts to secure them hereafter.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that if he talks too long and takes up too much time in answering gentlemen we will not reach this case that I have, to pension a very worthy dependent widow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There will not be any unnecessary waste of time——

Mr. SIMPSON. So that we can get to this widow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suggest that the remedy might be sought at a future Friday night meeting.

Mr. SIMPSON. No; this has got to go through to-night or it will not go through at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have not complained of the Committee on Invalid Pensions having presented to the House bills unworthy, nor have I complained because they have presented too many bills. Outside of this special bill, which I do not believe has merit, I believe the Invalid Pensions Committee has done good work in the small number of bills they have presented, and they never have presented enough. I want to call the attention of the House to the simple fact that we have not had a chance to consider, as the House of Representatives ought, the Godding bill, which is not here present; and I do not believe the statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] excuses a failure to present that bill. I also call to the attention of the House another case presented to me by a Grand Army post of Indiana:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

We, the members of Judson Kilpatrick Post, No. 45, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, through the officers of said post, send greeting and would show:

That a member of this post, Comrade Charles Allen, who was a private in Company B, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, was granted a pension over twenty years ago, at the rate of $4 per month, to date from the 1st day of July, 1864, and continued to receive such pension until the 15th day of July, 1892, at which date he was granted $8 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, to date from the 17th day of November, 1890, and was paid at the rate of $8 per month to the 4th day of May, 1896.

That on the 27th day of May, 1896, a new certificate, under the act of June 27, 1890, was issued, "in lieu of certificate dated July 15, 1892, to recover erroneous payments under general law," on the margin of which certificate was the following entry:

"Deduct all payments under act of June 27, 1890, and recover at the rate of $4 per month from July 1, 1864, to date of last payment under general law."

Which is construed by the pension agent at Indianapolis to mean that all pension paid him from July 1, 1864, to the 17th day of November, 1890, to wit, $1,336.40, is to be recovered back, and that he is to receive no further pay until his present rate at $8 per month shall have amounted to the said $1,336.40, which, as said pension agent has figured it, will be the August payment in 1909, at which time there will be due him $5.87. (?)

Comrade Allen is now past 60 years old, is poor, has no income of any kind, except what he earns by days' work, has a family to support, and will in all probability be dead before the year 1909.

He served three years in said Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, participating in all the campaigns and battles during that time that the regiment was in, and now in his old age, when he actually needs the help, to have the small pension of $8 per month stopped on him, and worse, that he be compelled to pay back all he had received at $4 per month, is, in the opinion of his comrades, not only unjust, but cruelly wrong.

And we appeal to the Congress of the great Government he gave the best years of his life to preserve, to right this great wrong by at once placing his name on the pension roll for at least $8 per month, from the 4th day of May, 1896.

We notice a move is about to be made to place the name of Gen. John M. Palmer on the pension roll at $100 per month. We don't object to this, but simply ask that at the same time, the name of poor old comrade Charles Allen be also placed on the roll—not at $100 per month, but at $8, as above prayed for. We ask this in justice, and we ask it because it is right. And for this we will ever pray.

By command of the post:

LEWIS KIRKWOOD,
Post Commander.

Official:
W. H. LEMMON, Post Adjutant.
FREMONT, IND., January 21, 1899.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the condition of General Palmer?

Mr. RAY of New York. General Palmer, if my recollection serves me, is 82 years old, or 84, and he is nearly blind.

Mr. TALBERT. Has he no taxable property?

Mr. RAY of New York. He has not—not a cent in the world.

Mr. TALBERT. No plantation?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not a cent; no property whatever, unless we have been outrageously lied to.

Mr. TALBERT. Have you nothing more than the simple statements?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, yes; we have affidavits and letters and statements from those who know him.

Mr. TALBERT. And he has no taxable property in the world?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is what they say; and he is absolutely blind in one eye and nearly blind in the other.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to annex to my remarks a statement by the Grand Army post, not against this bill, but in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that this bill to pension General Palmer, who was the candidate of the so-called Sound-Money Democracy for President in 1896, was introduced within the last thirty days, and has already reached this stage of its passage.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amount fixed in the bill by making it $90 instead of $50.

The question was taken; and the amendment offered by Mr. TALBERT was rejected.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the $50 be paid in silver. [Laughter.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM MOORE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 11615) removing the charge of desertion from William Moore, Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Moore, late a member of Company I, Twenty-third Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and grant to him an honorable discharge.

SEC. 2. That no pay or allowance shall become due by reason of the passage of this act.

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting a pension to Belle Shumard."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ISOM GIBSON.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to consider the bill (S. 4854) granting a pension to Isom Gibson.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isom Gibson, of Company B, commanded by Captain Bateman, Arkansas Volunteers, Sabine disturbances, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

Mr. DINSMORE. I move that the bill be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

JERE SMITH.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6681) to increase the pension of Jere Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Jere Smith, a sergeant of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry, on the pension roll at the rate of $35 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

CHAUNCEY A. BRADLEY.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a short time is yet remaining before the close of the evening session, I would like to ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the Senate bill Calendar No. 1171 for present consideration. I refer to the bill S. 4630.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to call up the bill Calendar No. 1171, S. 4630. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 4630) granting an increase of pension to Chauncey A. Bradley was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Chauncey A. Bradley, late private in Company A, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment; which was read, and agreed to:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate."

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS MULLEN.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill here in a very meritorious case, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill (H. R. 1417) for the relief of Thomas Mullen was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Thomas Mullen, of Wallaceburg, Ark., late member of Company G, First New York Mounted Rifles Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge as of the 29th day of November, 1865.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read, and agreed to:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAY of New York. As to each of the bills passed to-night I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a motion to reconsider the vote by which each of the bills was passed this evening be laid on the table. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 o'clock having arrived, the House, under the rule, stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. PERKINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11247) to extend the anti-contract labor laws of the United States to Hawaii, to report it back. I introduced a similar bill some weeks since, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration. That committee has that bill under consideration and is prepared to make a report on Monday morning next. I therefore report this bill back, and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask that that committee may have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate—a mere formal request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce a bill relating to the election of Senators. I do not expect that the bill can get attention during the present Congress, but I desire to have it introduced; and I should like to have the first part, which shows the purpose of the measure, read and then the whole bill published in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 5489) relating to the election of Senators was read the first time by its title, the second time as requested, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1, section 15, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the election of Senators, is hereby amended by adding at the end of section 15 the following words: "If no person shall have received such majority after seven separate ballots in such joint assembly, one of such ballots at least having been taken on each of seven separate days, the person who receives a plurality of all the votes cast on the next ballot, or, if there be no plurality, on the first subsequent ballot where any person shall have a plurality, a majority of all the members of both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected;" so said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from such State, and the name of the person so voted for, who receives a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house, shall be entered on the journal of that house by the clerk or secretary thereof; or if either house fails to give such majority to any person on that day the fact shall be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house he shall be declared duly elected Senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, and the person who receives a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected. If no person receives such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature and shall take at least one vote until a Senator is elected. If no person shall have received such majority after seven separate ballots in such joint assembly, one of such ballots at least having been taken on each of seven separate days, the person who receives a plurality of all the votes cast on the next ballot, or if there be no plurality, on the first subsequent ballot where any person shall have a plurality, a majority of all the members of both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected."

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5490) to regulate licenses for theaters and other entertainments in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to be furnished a duplicate copy of the engrossed bill of the Senate (S. 3256) in reference to the civil service and appointments thereunder, the same having been lost or misplaced; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. The joint resolution (S. R. 243) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people I should like to have lie over until Monday, when I shall ask to address the Senate in support of it. I should like to have the Senate resolution laid before the Senate this morning as unfinished business.

DOCTRINE OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and which was laid over until this morning. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unhesitatingly approves and reaffirms the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal," and "that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and "that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness;" and be it further

Resolved, That said doctrine is not, in its application, to be confined to the people of the United States, but is universal and extends to all peoples, wherever found, having a distinct and well-organized society and territory of their own.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the request of the Senator from Nebraska in reference to this resolution, the consideration of which I objected to yesterday?

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution comes over this morning for consideration as unfinished business, and it is now properly before the Senate for disposition, I suppose.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are many resolutions of this kind before the Senate. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] made a request that the resolution offered by him should be acted upon on Monday next, and I now renew that request in this form: That on Monday, at 3 o'clock, the Senate take up for consideration the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], the resolution offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], the resolution which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] offered and on which there has been so much debate; that all these resolutions be acted upon seriatim, and that the Senate remain in session until they are disposed of, beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the resolution referred to?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] and all the resolutions of a similar character be taken up on Monday next at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and acted upon seriatim and disposed of before adjournment.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will put the date off a little further, so that we can get rid of at least two or three of the appropriation bills, that they may go to the other House for consideration and we may make some progress in getting rid of them. We shall have time after that, perhaps, to consider these outside questions. That can be done between times, I might say, and not interfere with the appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was opposed to acting upon any resolutions of this kind before the treaty was ratified. I thought it extremely proper that as soon as the treaty was ratified the Senate should make a declaration if a majority of its members desired to do so. I so said always; I so say now; and in furtherance of this purpose, which I know many Senators have at heart, I make this request. The resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I ought not to have forgotten. There are, however, so many of these resolutions laying down principles for the guidance of the United States in the future that I may be excused for not remembering them all. But I include them all in my request. I ask that at 3 o'clock on Monday all be taken up and acted upon before the adjournment of the Senate; and I will say——

Mr. BACON. What does the Senator mean by "acted upon?"

Mr. CHANDLER. That they be debated and——

Mr. BACON. That they be voted upon?

Mr. CHANDLER. And voted upon before adjournment.

Mr. HALE. Without debate, I suggest.

Mr. CHANDLER. With such debate as may be consistent with final action before adjournment. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. CULLOM. Can not the Senator postpone the date one or two days?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think we shall expedite the business of the Senate by postponing the disposition of those resolutions any further.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not expressing any opposition to the resolutions, but I do think, in the interest of carrying on the business of the Senate, that which has to be done to a successful conclusion before the 4th of March, it would facilitate the transaction of business if we should put off the consideration of the resolutions for another day or two.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Illinois will see that if we begin at 3 o'clock on these resolutions we shall dispose of them before midnight, and then the Senator can go on with the appropriation bill, if, indeed, we do not pass it to-day. I see no reason why we should not pass the pending appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. I fully expect the Senate to pass the bill now under consideration to-day, but there is another one that ought to be considered after the pending bill is taken care of.

Mr. ALLEN. If I can——

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not put off my request for any appropriation bill. I ask that at 3 o'clock on Monday we may go on with these resolutions.

Mr. ALLEN. If I can be permitted to wedge in a word between the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Illinois, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what has become of the agreement that is said to have been made with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] that his resolution should be taken up and voted on immediately after the treaty was ratified.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not know that there had been any agreement, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. I observe the continued absence of one of the chieftains of that evening who was leading the Republican forces, and I did not know but that possibly our friends on the other side were waiting for his return.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator speak a little louder? I do not hear him very distinctly.

Mr. ALLEN. I am doing the best I possibly can.

Mr. HOAR. I rise, then, to a question of order, and I ask for order in the Senate Chamber. The Senator from Nebraska certainly has a voice that ought to be heard. Yet I can not hear him.

Mr. ALLEN. I have a severe cold.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the difficulty is with the Senator's voice, but it is on account of the noise in the Chamber.

Mr. BACON. We can not hear the Senator from Massachusetts. We do not know on this side what he said.

Mr. ALLEN. It ought not to take long in the Senate of the United States to reenact the Declaration of Independence, especially when it is quoted literally in the pending resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the Senator would be willing to have an immediate vote, I take it?

Mr. ALLEN. I would be willing to have an immediate vote. I do not want to debate the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Then why ask for a prolongation of time?

Mr. ALLEN. The Declaration of Independence has been debated so often that it strikes me it does not need much elucidation at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that my request is in the interest of the other resolutions as well. I do not think that we should distribute the votes upon these resolutions along from time to time through the rest of the session, but that we should dispose of them all at once. That is the reason why I made the request I did.

Mr. ALLISON. Then let us have a vote on them all at once.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us have a vote on them all at once, beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday. That is what I ask the Senate to agree to.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for a present vote on the pending resolution, without debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask first that the Vice-President submit to the Senate my request, that all the resolutions be disposed of, beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. Will not the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his request for the time being and let us take a vote on the pending resolution?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, if there is to be a vote on the Declaration of Independence, I should like to hear some reason stated why there is a necessity for such a vote. If it is asked to be preserved by being voted for, I want to know the reason for that. Has the Declaration of Independence been abolished?

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that possibly the Senator from Nebraska thinks the vote we took the other day was in conflict with the Declaration of Independence, and consequently it is necessary to renew our allegiance.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART. The Declaration of Independence, it is said, must be renewed. If we are going to renew that and repromulgate it, there ought to be some reason given for it, or the people will think we are fooling away the time that should be devoted to their interests.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I wish to interrupt the Senator, with his permission.

Mr. ALLEN. How did I get off the floor, Mr. President?

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a moment? I should like to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I shall not yield for an answer to my suggestion. To give a good reason for reenacting the Declaration of Independence the Senator from Illinois would have to take several days before the country would be satisfied that there is a necessity for such action. I can not yield that much time.

Mr. MASON. No; I will give it all in half a minute. It is merely for the purpose of convincing the Filipinos that when we kill them we are simply giving them the blessings of liberty and that we are still for the Declaration of Independence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which I fully appreciate, that I was not moved to present this resolution because of the vote on the treaty had in this Chamber the other day. I see no conflict whatever between that vote and the Declaration of Independence. I gave my vote to ratify the treaty; and I am a believer in every principle of the Declaration of Independence.

But, Mr. President, so much has been said in this branch of Congress and in the other, so much agitation has been indulged in by the press of the country, that I thought it not an unwise course to present the substance of the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence by quoting the language of that great charter literally, and asking the Senate of the United States, by a quiet vote, to declare the allegiance not only of the Senate, but of the people to the doctrines therein contained. I did not have the faintest conception when I presented this resolution that the Senate would hesitate for a moment to discuss the contents of the resolution or to reexamine the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence, but I thought that it would adopt the resolution without any controversy.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Nebraska said that he noted the absence of one of the chieftains who led the Republicans the other day. I presume that he referred to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska what was the particular contest to which he alluded in which he said the Senator from Rhode Island led the Republicans?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator to whom I referred and whose name I have not called—nor shall I call it or refer to the State he has the honor to represent in this Chamber—was very active upon the floor, so far as I could observe, in rallying the forces in support of the ratification of the treaty. In his efforts I fully concurred, and with him I heartily sympathized.

Mr. HOAR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. It is that the Senator from Rhode Island now absent moved one of the resolutions—the one known as the McEnery resolution. I think it was moved by that Senator immediately upon the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. I have made no reference whatever to the Senator from Rhode Island. I had supposed, or did suppose at the time, and my belief in that fact was strengthened by what the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] said a few days ago, that there was a distinct understanding among our Republican friends that the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana should be taken up and voted upon without any hesitancy and without delay. I was not a party to that understanding. I do not know, in fact, that it exists except as I infer that it exists, and I conclude from what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] said that there was such an agreement.

Mr. President, if there was any understanding, express or implied, with the Senator from Louisiana that his resolution should be voted upon and he was induced to vote for the ratification of the treaty with a distinct understanding that his resolution, expressive of certain doctrines, should be passed almost concurrently with it, then it occurs to me that good faith requires the taking up of that resolution without delay and submitting it to the Senate for a vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senater from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have heard a great deal said in this Chamber about some agreement made with the Senator from Louisiana by some one. I desire to say that, so far as I am concerned, I knew of no such agreement and I know of no such agreement. If anything of that sort happened I was not consulted, and I know that numerous other Republican Senators were not consulted any more than myself. I do not know anything about the fact charged. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am not a party to any agreement, I am not bound by any agreement.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not making any charge against the Senator from Connecticut. Knowing him as I do, I would be bound to acquit him in my own mind without any protest on his part. I have every reason to believe that if he had been a party to the agreement he would insist upon its being lived up to in good faith. But it was charged in this Chamber a few days ago, and it has not been contradicted or denied, that there was an understanding upon the Republican side of this Chamber that the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana should be taken up and considered. Mr. President, all the evidence is to that effect. There is nothing to contradict it.

Now, I was not a party to that agreement. If there was such an agreement, I knew nothing about it. I am not bound by it. I am not a Republican, thank God, and I am not bound by its caucuses or decrees. But if such an agreement exists, good faith among men requires its observance.

I am not specially interested in the passage of the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana, although I heartily concur in its declarations and in its doctrines. Mr. President, in the light of the agitation that has been going on, and in the light of the circumstances under which the treaty of Paris was ratified here a few days ago, I am concerned only in having the Senate of the United States once more, without any lengthy debate, declare that the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence are still in force in this country.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska, if he knows. This agreement is new to me. I know nothing about it. What was the date of it with reference to the war now raging in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. ALLEN. The date of what?

Mr. STEWART. Of the agreement, if there was an agreement.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose it was made here the day we voted on the treaty.

Mr. STEWART. Was it made before or after hostilities broke out in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. STEWART. War might abrogate an agreement of that kind. War abrogates laws and changes conditions.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. STEWART. If there was an agreement, I should want to know the date.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, there is no war in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. STEWART. Is there no war when 4,000 people were killed in one battle?

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; it is not a war within the legal definition of war. It is a rebellion, if it is anything, at this time.

Mr. STEWART. It is a state of hostilities.

Mr. ALLEN. I know nothing about this agreement, as I said to the Senate a moment ago, and which I suppose the Senator from Nevada heard, except such evidences as I found existing on this floor the day we voted upon the treaty and such revelations as were made by the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] a day or two after that. I understood that Senator to say that there was such an agreement. I have yet to hear a Senator on the other side of the Chamber or on this side deny it, and when a reputable witness testifies to a fact and it is uncontradicted by any other evidence, I take it for granted that the statement must be taken as true. But I am not concerned, as I said, in that matter at all, further than to observe that there seems to be a disposition to get away from the McEnery resolution as rapidly and as quietly as possible.

I have presented this resolution. It quotes the substance of the Declaration of Independence literally. There is no change in its language. There is an absolute embodiment by quotation of the great doctrines of the Declaration of Independence in the resolution.

Now, if the Senate of the United States, under those circumstances, wants to vote it down, or wants to send it into the caverns of this great Capitol to remain throughout the ages with millions of other valuable documents that have gone there, I am perfectly willing it shall do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, we do not wish to send into the tomb of the Capulets, to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] so frequently alludes in this Chamber, either the resolution of the Senator from Missouri or the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, or that presented by the Senator from Louisiana, or the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia. We wish a vote upon them.

Mr. MASON. Or even my little resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Or even the mild and moderate, tender and affectionate resolution of the Senator from Illinois, which I came so near forgetting. Mr. President, we want them all disposed of. It is appropriate that the Senate should dispose of them.

The Senator from Nebraska speaks of an agreement. I made no agreement with anybody. The remark needs qualification. I made no agreement with anyone except that I did state I had been endeavoring for ten days to secure a vote upon the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia. I thought, as the Senator from Georgia well knows, that after unanimous consent had been given to vote upon the treaty on Monday it would be courteous and wise to agree to preliminary votes upon these resolutions, and I so stated.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska wants confessions, I will say that I had informed Senators that I myself was willing to vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. There is another series of resolutions that I had forgotten. I had expressed a willingness to vote for the resolution as finally offered by the Senator from Kentucky. I had expressed a willingness to vote for the resolution offered by the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] and for the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I thought the best way to dispose of the whole question, instead of passing upon all of the resolutions separately, would be to take up some one of them and, by means of motions to amend, dispose of the whole series of propositions.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. And I said to the Senator from Louisiana, and I said to other Senators, that immediately after the ratification of the treaty, as I had been willing to vote to do before the ratification of the treaty, I would vote to go on to dispose of these declaratory resolutions. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if his request for unanimous consent goes to the point of having all of these resolutions voted upon at one and the same time, in order that all our bargains may be fulfilled by one vote?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what bargain the Senator made, I am sure. I would not advise him to make bargains in reference to matters pending in the Senate, and I hope he has not made any.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have not made any.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless he should tell me what one he refers to, I could not answer.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not know; but reference has been made to the fact that somebody has made bargains in relation to some of these resolutions; as to which one or how many of them, I do not know.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I made no bargains. I have stated a purpose, and I propose to carry out the purpose which I stated to the best of my ability. If the Senator has made any bargain, I hope—although he ought not to have made it—that he will carry it out and make no other.

Mr. RAWLINS. To whom does the Senator refer as having made any bargain?

Mr. CHANDLER. I only referred to the bargain to which the Senator alluded.

Mr. RAWLINS. I did not allude to any bargain except that to which other Senators have alluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg pardon of the Senator. When he spoke of "all the bargains which we had made" or "all our bargains," I supposed he meant that he himself had been connected with some bargain, and I wish to disclaim any connection with it myself.

Mr. RAWLINS. The point of my inquiry is this: Is it the proposition of the Senator to take a vote upon all these resolutions at one and the same time?

Mr. CHANDLER. All at one and the same time seriatim, and to dispose of them all, beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. As a bargain must have a consideration to bind it, will the Senator from New Hampshire be kind enough to state what the consideration was?

Mr. CHANDLER. Therein there was not a bargain, because there was no consideration for it.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought there was.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that is the distinction. I stated a purpose, Mr. President; other Senators stated the same purpose; and for one I am willing to do now as I was willing to do a week before the treaty was ratified in the Senate of the United States, to give an opportunity to vote upon all these questions. I think it is fair to do that, and I hope my request will be acceded to by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that a week ago the Foreign Relations Committee endeavored to get unanimous consent for voting on all the then pending resolutions, and they endeavored several times afterwards to get votes upon those resolutions. The reasons of our failure were perfectly obvious, and there is no need of going into it. I should now be very glad personally, as a week ago I should have been very glad, to vote on and dispose of all these resolutions. But I do not think it is quite fair to take what is certainly one of the latest resolutions offered and dispose of that first. Some of these resolutions have been long before the Senate. I think the only fair way is to agree upon a time, as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, when the Senate will take up all the resolutions and give a vote on each one of them. I think every Senator who offered a resolution on that important subject is entitled to have a vote upon it, and I think the only fair way to give unanimous consent is so that all the resolutions may be taken up, and not one apart from the others.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Foreign Relations Committee in the Senate made a request for unanimous consent, or that there is anything in the RECORD to show anything of that kind?

Mr. LODGE. I think the request was made in open Senate more than once by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BERRY. On last Friday?

Mr. LODGE. Before last Friday.

Mr. BERRY. I will state that in my opinion the RECORD will show nothing of the kind. It will not show that any such request was ever made in open Senate, either on last Friday or before last Friday.

Mr. LODGE. The Foreign Relations Committee met upon Wednesday. That is why I gave that date.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know what the Foreign Relations Committee did while in committee, but I am speaking about the record of the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. My recollection was that on that very day, before we went into executive session, the first attempt was made to get a vote on the resolution of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BERRY. My recollection is that an effort was made continuously, at least for several days, by the Senator from Georgia to get unanimous consent, and objection was made. The last objection, I think, was made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts can find anything in the RECORD to show that the Foreign Relations Committee or any one who was in favor of the treaty at any time, either on last Friday or before, ever made any request for unanimous consent to get a vote on the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I understand, are—well, I will not say "the managers of this matter," but they have the subject under control, and possibly represent the gentleman who made the pledges, the absent Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who, I understand, has gone to Europe—whether or not, in their knowledge, promises were made before the vote was taken on the treaty that if certain Senators would vote a certain way they would pass the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]?

Mr. CHANDLER. In the first place, I will say as to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that he is not in good health, and had arranged some time ago to go to Europe by the advice of his physician. He is not now here, and I can not answer for him. But, Mr. President, I know of no agreement whatever that Senators should vote in any particular way on any resolution.

I have stated before that I had reached the conclusion that I would vote in favor of three different resolutions, if any of them came up for a vote; and I have always said that I would endeavor to get a vote upon all those resolutions, beginning with the resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]; but I know of no agreement made by any Senator as to how he would vote upon any particular resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to know exactly what the question now before the Senate is?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A request for unanimous consent for a vote upon the resolutions referred to on Monday next at 3 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, since the statement just made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] I feel called upon to ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to tell us to what pledges or promises or agreements he alluded to the day before yesterday that had been—well—not carried out; and that if they were not carried out, he would feel that he had been buncoed?

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, it is with some degree of reluctancy that I take the witness stand; but I desire, before testifying in this case, to be granted immunity. I desire, however, an opportunity to see whether the Senate of the United States will give the unanimous consent asked for.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Illinois whether he means that he is going to turn State's evidence? [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. That would answer the question which I have declined to answer.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asked unanimous consent that we be permitted to vote upon these resolutions. I had a resolution that I spoke to more than a month ago—a month ago yesterday—and I have asked continually for unanimous consent that a vote might be had on it. I had no agreement that the Senate would give it. The friends of the treaty objected at first, and when the friends of the treaty got ready to vote, the enemies of the treaty objected; and so, between the upper and nether millstone, my resolution has gone in the usual way to the Senatorial graveyard and I have kissed it goodbye; but I have been led to believe by the friends of the treaty that we should have an opportunity to vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana.

I can not say that the bunco is continued until I find who objects and ascertain whether agreements that were made will be kept or not. The gentleman with whom I had the talk is not present in the Chamber, and I shall not testify in his absence. I will state that an agreement was had, so far as I understood it; and I am charging no gentleman upon this floor at that time with any breach of faith. I say now, however, if the request of the Senator from New Hampshire is granted, there can be no occasion for further discussion and no further occasion for the exchange of courtesies on either side.

I understand the position to be a simple position. Why thrash old straw? Why not pass upon all these questions now by agreeing to the request now made by the Senator from New Hampshire? If we can have unanimous consent, there will be no need of discussing this matter. In the presence of this great calamity, with our country at war with natives who have never injured us, at war with natives who have been our allies within the last six months, following the example set by the illustrious Weyler in the destruction of villages, I hope there will be no occasion to seek party advantage on either side. Let us be given at least an opportunity to express ourselves, and then let Senators vote on either side as they please. I ask that in fair play; and, so far as I am concerned, I believe there is a disposition in the Senate now to give us that opportunity, as requested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts if he desires to speak.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say that I spoke of Wednesday last in referring to the Committee on Foreign Relations, the day that committee met. I was mistaken in supposing that the request for unanimous consent came from the chairman of the committee. I now find that the request for unanimous consent came from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee then said:

> Mr. DAVIS. So far as I am authorized to speak, there is no objection to a vote upon the joint resolution now—

That is, the joint resolution of the Senator from Georgia—

> There has been no dilatory intention in anything which has been done.

That was the attitude of the Foreign Relations Committee last Wednesday, and has been their attitude ever since. They have interposed no objection to a vote on any of the resolutions. They were ready to vote then, and they are ready to vote now. As I said before, all I desire is that the resolutions shall have an equal and fair chance.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I wish to say that I stated a while ago that the Senator from Georgia had pressed consideration of his resolution during all of last week—not every day, but at different times—and that no proposition to allow a vote upon the resolution came from the friends of the treaty prior to a week ago yesterday; and the RECORD bears me out in what I say.

Mr. LODGE. I withdrew the statement as to where the proposition came from. The proposition came from the Senator from Georgia, and was consented to by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to go into the question which was raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. It is sufficient to say in reply to it that while that was stated by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the vote was prevented on that day and on the succeeding day by Senators on the other side of the Chamber who favored the treaty and were not willing that there should be a vote upon the resolutions.

With reference to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that we should have unanimous consent to vote upon these resolutions, I desire to say a word. In the first place, I desire to suggest to the Senate that whatever resolutions are passed now should be considered with very great care, because they will be the enunciation by the Senate of the permanent policy which it is understood and intended that this Government shall pursue relative to the Philippine Islands.

With reference to the various resolutions, if they are proposed to be taken up seriatim, there are some of them to which I would consent that there should be a vote without discussion, and there are others that I would not make such a consent about.

In reference to the resolutions which I had the honor to introduce, I am perfectly content now, as I have been for weeks past, that the Senate shall at any time vote upon them without discussion.

In the same way, with reference to the resolutions offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], I would be willing to take a vote without discussion, although I may be pardoned for suggesting that I think the resolutions which he has introduced would more correctly speak the truth if he would amend them by saying that "the principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence ought to be now binding upon the people of the United States;" for I very much question, in view of recent events, whether a declaration that they are binding would be strictly correct.

Mr. President, in reference to the resolutions offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], I desire to say that, while I am ready to take them up for consideration at any time, I would not consent to a vote upon them without discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. And amendment.

Mr. BACON. And amendment. My reason for that is that I think an analysis of those resolutions will show that they are the most vicious resolutions, the most objectionable resolutions which have been introduced here, and that they are not entitled to the support of anyone who does not believe in a permanent colonial policy with reference to the Philippine Islands. In other words, a discussion of those resolutions and an analysis of those resolutions will show that if strictly pursued, whether they require it or not, they will authorize and justify a permanent colonial policy in the Philippine Islands. Resolutions embodying such a proposition, of course, Mr. President, can not be allowed to pass the Senate without a discussion as to whether or not it is true that such is the effect of the resolutions.

Therefore, while I am ready to vote without discussion upon the resolutions introduced by myself, while I am ready to vote without discussion upon the resolutions offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], while I am ready to vote without discussion upon the resolutions offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], while I am ready to vote, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] suggests, also on the resolutions offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], I am not ready to vote for them without discussion and without proposals of amendment, because I do not think they exactly express——

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I do not understand that the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from New Hampshire involves the voting on any of these resolutions without amendment. They are all open to amendment by reason of the unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. But not to discussion.

Mr. FAULKNER. But not to discussion.

Mr. BACON. I am not willing to vote upon the resolutions offered by the Senator from Kentucky without discussion, nor am I willing to vote on the resolutions offered by the Senator from Louisiana without discussion, and I do not see why there should be an effort made to embody so many of these resolutions in the unanimous-consent agreement. If the Senator desires to ask unanimous consent for each one of these resolutions, then we will give a response as to each of them. I have indicated the ones I am ready to vote upon without discussion and without amendment, if you please, but as to the others I shall claim the right both of discussion and of amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this résumé of the history of the few days just passed is but calculated to lead to the same mischievous results that have followed this discussion, or this feature of it, from the inception of the debate on the treaty with Spain. It has seemed to me at every hour of the debate unwise and impolitic to discuss in this forum the terms of a surrender for our Army assailed by the rebels at Manila. Those people, in arms against the authority of the United States, voluntarily appealed from the civil forum to the arbitrament of war. Let that appeal be first determined in the forum selected by the men who are firing on our flag to-day.

Mr. President, the people of the United States will, after due consideration and in due time, determine upon a policy humane in itself and in perfect harmony with the spirit of our institutions and Constitution for the final disposition of the Philippine Islands and the people who reside upon them. At this moment certain Senators desire to force the issue and compel our flag to be lowered on those islands in the presence of a vicious and apparently unrelenting foe. The people of this country will not submit to that course of procedure. It is not in harmony with the past action of the American people upon any question. They have never been driven and they never will be driven one inch upon any public question relating to either foreign or domestic policy.

The purposes, apparently, of presenting these resolutions at the present time may be considered as twofold—first, to pledge the people of the United States for all time in the future to be true to themselves, their traditions, their laws, and the Constitution of the country. That pledge is unnecessary. It is an insinuation in and of itself upon the integrity of purpose and the patriotism of the people of the United States.

The second purpose of the resolutions—they are all about the same—must of necessity be the holding out of a flag of truce and the begging of terms from the men who fired upon the line of American troops surrounding the city of Manila.

The way to impress the Oriental people is not to beg for terms. Our kindness has been construed to mean weakness. Our discussion has been construed to indicate a temporizing policy. Let these questions be settled in the forum selected by the insurgents on the island of Luzon. When settled there, they can trust, without doubt as to the ultimate result, the conscience, the intelligence, and the love of justice and liberty prevailing throughout these United States.

I would not pass any resolution offering terms or seeking consideration at the hands of any body of men who voluntarily flew in the face of the proclamation of the President and fired upon the flag of this country. Wheresoever that flag may have been floating, or may float in the future, it must be treated with respect, and can not be fired upon with impunity.

Mr. President, this discussion about bargains, deals, and dickers does not comport with the dignity of this body, according to my conception of its true dignity. It does seem to me if any Senator desires the resolutions voted upon he has a perfect right to ask for the vote to be taken; and it is the right of any Senator here, in the exercise of the ordinary prerogatives of his office, to insist upon further discussion or upon reasonable delay. I am not prepared to-day to vote on any resolution. I am not prepared to object to the consideration of all of them.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, since the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana has been objected to, there can not be unanimous consent for the taking of a vote upon it without discussion; and I believe that is the only resolution with reference to which it is claimed that there is any kind of agreement. I know nothing of any agreement to vote upon any of the resolutions by unanimous consent.

I wish to say that, under the circumstances, before any resolution is voted upon I desire to make a few remarks. I want my position understood with regard to this matter. A vote on any one of the resolutions might greatly misrepresent me if I voted for it in its present shape, and if I voted against it my vote might be misunderstood. So, being at liberty, since objection has been made, to be heard upon the subject, I will now give notice that when the resolutions come up, I shall submit some remarks upon the whole subject of the expansion of our territory.

I do not think expansion has been fully discussed. There seems to be a cowardice in treating the subject. There does not appear to be perfect freedom in the discussion. Senators appear to be under restraint. I think it is premature to discuss the question now. It will be time enough in the next year or two to do that. I do not think we need any discussion upon the subject; but whenever there is an occasion for it, whenever we are to be committed upon any of these propositions, I think we ought to consider all sides of the question.

It may be possible that the people of the United States will be unwilling to give up what they have acquired by war; it may be that there will be what they consider some commercial advantages which they will want to retain. It may be that they will not deal entirely with the sentimental side of the question. They may want to take some practical view of it.

Let them have time to think the matter over. I do not think we should forestall them as to what we will do with these islands; I think it is entirely premature to do that now. Six months or a year or two or three years hence will develop the facts, and the American Government will be better able to deal with it when they have a full knowledge of the facts than they are now, with the limited knowledge they have.

I think the passage of these resolutions would forestall the action of the Government in the future, and it is entirely premature to do that. It is not certain that the fact that we secure sugar lands in those islands enough to supply ourselves and the world with sugar would be detrimental——

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. STEWART. No; not now.

It is not certain that having tobacco lands enough to have the monopoly of the tobacco and cigars of the world would be detrimental to this country; it is not certain that having coffee lands enough to supply our country with coffee would be detrimental to us; and it is not certain that if those islands were annexed they would disturb our political institutions, because certainly nobody would allow the people there to vote or to take part in the government of this country until they were qualified; and that would take considerable time. New Mexico has been a Territory for fifty years, and she is still kept out. She is still in a condition of pupilage, and not yet ripe for statehood. They have not understood the English language or our institutions sufficiently to justify us in admitting them, because we know that republican principles can not be expressed in any language but the English language; and we know that freedom is expressed in the English language, and in no other language.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I decline to be interrupted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada declines to be interrupted.

Mr. TILLMAN. But if the Senator will allow me, he has been here thirty years and he is no youngster here, so that he certainly can submit to an interruption.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly I can submit to an interruption greatly to my advantage, but probably to the disadvantage of the Senator from South Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senator does not object to having some of his propositions elucidated a little more fully than he is elucidating them?

Mr. STEWART. I do object to it in my speech—you can have your time later—because, in the first place, I do not think the Senator from South Carolina has got information enough to elucidate the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me prove that.

Mr. STEWART. No; I want to proceed. I am not going to be interrupted.

Mr. TILLMAN. You object to a man showing that he knows a little something about a proposition.

Mr. STEWART. It can not be allowed under the rules that two Senators shall have the floor at the same time.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought I might enlighten the Senator, in view of the fact that he has been absent for some time and did not have anything to do with this matter.

Mr. STEWART. I have been reading the Senator's speeches, and I am certain he can not give me any light on the subject [laughter], and I do not expect a great deal of information from those who have spoken most frequently on this subject, because, though I have been absent, I have been reading their speeches.

I do not think all the reasons for retaining what we have acquired by the war have been given, and the assumption that our institutions would be interfered with by people who can not participate in them for a century or two under any circumstances, however diligently we may go to work to educate them, I do not believe is well founded. Besides, whenever there is any danger of our system being disturbed by them it will be within the power of this Government to deliver itself from any such danger. The people of the United States are not going to have their institutions endangered by incorporating into the body politic sections of country inhabited by people who are incapable of maintaining republican institutions. That question can be met, and will be met, when it comes.

I have heard it suggested here that the Filipinos would interfere with our labor system. It seems to me that impression is founded in profound ignorance or want of investigation. There never has been in the history of the world emigration of laborers from the tropical to the temperate zone. I have heard the Chinese alluded to as if they had done it. That is not true. The Chinese who have come to this country come from a climate entirely similar to ours. You never see any of the Formosans or southern Chinese, who live in a tropical climate, coming here.

Such a thing never happened, and it never will. They do not go from India to England, nor from the tropical portions of Africa to England, although they are under the English Government. A case can not be cited where the inhabitants of the Tropics have gone to a temperate zone to labor, and they are not coming here to labor. The difficulty is they do not labor enough at home. It has frequently happened that men have gone from temperate to tropical zones to labor, but not with great success; they do not stay there long. So the labor question is eliminated by nature.

Then, again, if we have these islands with their tropical productions, which are our main imports, we shall have the balance of trade in our favor. Heretofore it has been against us, owing to the importations of tropical products, such as sugar, coffee, and tobacco. The balance of trade against us of two or three hundred million dollars a year, perhaps, has come from these tropical productions. I do not propose at this time to go into details. These products come from that source where we can be supplied, and if we are supplied by a part of our own country, we should not have to pay the money out to foreigners.

Besides that so far from being against American labor, it would be greatly in favor of American labor, for we would manufacture everything that those people require. Manufacturing is always done in the temperate zone, always has been, and always will be; and it will not be done elsewhere. We would have the exclusive trade, and we should have an enormous trade in supplying them with our productions and our manufactures. The American people, in view of these facts, may come to the conclusion that we want to keep all the islands when that question is open to consideration. It seems premature to preclude ourselves as to the question by any resolution when no action is required. Let us wait until action is required; and then act in view of the condition of things that may then be developed and understood.

I hope when these resolutions come up we shall have a fair and free discussion of them, not jump in the dark and pass vague resolutions committing the Government to propositions which we may want to repudiate hereafter.

I am glad that the resolutions are not going to come up by unanimous consent, although I should not have objected myself, because I was not here and did not know what arrangement had been made.

Mr. MASON. I desire to interrupt the Senator for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. Not now. I do not want to break any arrangement which anybody has made, and since the Senator from Georgia has objected to the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana, the whole thing is opened, and I give notice that the resolutions will be debated when they are called up.

Mr. MASON. I rose to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I did not understand that anybody objected to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. Yes. The Senator from Georgia objected to the request for unanimous consent for a vote on the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request has not yet been put to the Senate.

Mr. MASON. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, referring to the criticisms of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] on the resolutions I introduced relative to the future policy of this Government toward the Philippines, I desire only to say a few words. They are in effect identical with the policy declared in reference to the island of Cuba. The moment the Spanish troops left the island of Cuba, just at that moment the entire sovereignty of the United States passed over every inch of the soil of that island. Notwithstanding that there was a mere relinquishment of sovereignty by Spain, the actual sovereignty passed to the Government of the United States. There is not a community that does not owe allegiance to some government, and every Cuban owes allegiance to the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States has authority, has power, it has all the manifestations of sovereignty, internal and external, with reference to that island. If those people to-day commit an offense against any foreign power, who is responsible—the people of Cuba directly, or the Government of the United States? We control the courts, the revenues of the island, and we have in our hand the destiny of that people.

So it is with the Philippine Islands. The word "cede" has practically no significance so far as practical effects are concerned. In the Philippine Islands the Government of the United States would to-day exercise the same authority over all those islands were it not for the resistance now inaugurated against the authority of the Government of the United States. In reference to Cuba the resolution was that this Government pledged to the Cuban people a stable government. It went no further than that, promising to remit that island to them when a stable government should be established. Who is to judge of the stability of that government? The people of the United States. There is no limit given within which that discretion shall be exercised. It may be, as said by the Senator from Georgia with reference to the Philippine Islands, permanent and forever unless this Government, in its discretion, says that they have a stable government and that it is willing to turn the islands over to them.

These resolutions are not so strong as the resolutions in reference to the island of Cuba. They simply declare that the Government of this country intended by the ratification of this treaty of peace not to permanently annex those islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States. What objections can gentlemen on this side of the Chamber have to that declaration? Every utterance they have made has been against annexation. Now, here is a declaration committing this Government, at least for the present, against incorporating those people into the citizenship of the United States and of annexing their territory as an integral part of the territory of the United States. That is what they have been clamoring for. There will go probably into the next Democratic platform a declaration against annexation. What inconsistency! To proclaim against it here and put it in a platform and to go before their people and demand a policy of nonannexation!

Now, as to the latter part of the resolution, it gives this Government discretion just as it does in the case of the island of Cuba—a discretion to determine when those people have learned the principles of self-government and when they shall be able to take care of themselves. The resolution was left purposely open to give the Government of this country a wide discretion in the disposition of those islands. We can not tell what the future may bring forth. It may be a few years, it may be a quarter of a century, it may be a century before those people can learn the principles of self-government. If within that period or within the near future they develop that capacity, then we can turn those islands over to them. But, on the contrary, if they desire to become annexed to the Government of the United States, as in the case of Hawaii, then the discretion is left open for this Government to accept their proposition.

I see nothing in the resolutions that would authorize this Government to deal differently with these people than it is now dealing with the people of Cuba.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, so long as it is the intention to discuss this resolution, that it be considered next Tuesday at 2 o'clock, and that a vote be taken before adjournment on that day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has asked for a unanimous-consent agreement, which the Chair will put first.

Mr. BACON. I understand the request of the Senator from Louisiana to be that the resolution be taken up at 2 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. MCENERY. On Tuesday.

Mr. BACON. And that it be voted on before adjournment. I have no objection to that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire made the first request of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana, I will change the day, putting my request in the same form, but substituting Tuesday instead of Monday.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that the request of the Senator from Louisiana is in substance the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is one day's difference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator changes the hour, also.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have my request stated.

Mr. ALLISON. The request of the Senator from Louisiana embodies only his own resolution, while the request of the Senator from New Hampshire includes all resolutions.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Chair will kindly state my request as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent is asked that on Tuesday next, at 2 o'clock p. m., the joint resolution, No. 240, introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], and all other resolutions on the same subject, whether joint resolutions or Senate declarations, be taken up for consideration and be disposed of before adjournment on that day. That is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. Which is the one we are to act upon now; that request or the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire made the first request, then the Senator from Nebraska made another, and the Senator from Louisiana a third request.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should like, with the permission of the Senate, to say a few words in regard to this request. I shall make no objection to the request, and have been too ready at any time to vote upon any or all of the resolutions, including the one submitted by myself. I am bound to say, however, that action upon any of these resolutions now seems to me very much like sending for an eminent physician after the patient is dead. I have been told that just after the last war a large convention was held in a certain State of the Union at which a prominent gentleman offered resolutions, some thirty days after the surrender at Appomattox, declaring that the colored people were entitled to their freedom. He supplemented the offering of the resolutions with the remark that thirty years before in another convention at another place he had offered the same resolutions. A ragged Confederate interrupted him by saying, "Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the first resolution was thirty years too soon, and I will swear the last resolution is thirty days too late." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what can be a broader farce than our passing a resolution in regard to the policy of the United States when we have already declared that policy at the mouth of cannon, in the rattling of musketry, and are shooting our doctrine into the people of the Philippine Islands as fast as possible? Why shall we now, after we have put into practical operation our intention in this matter, declare by resolutions what we intend to do when we are already doing what we intend to do? When the peace treaty, as it is termed, the treaty of Paris, was ratified by the Senate, it followed logically and absolutely that if the people of the Philippine Islands resisted the terms of that treaty, which was a cession of their country to the United States, they must be coerced into submission. There was not an intelligent man who did not know that every one of us who dared to make any protest against the coercion of the Filipinos would be denounced, if not as a traitor, then, in the language of the Senator from Montana, as engaging in what was dangerously near to treason. There was not a single man in the United States of average intelligence who did not know that the logical result of the treaty would be that it should be carried out by such means as were necessary to the last extremity of the military power of this country.

All of us, possibly, have heard of that Irish nobleman, a very brilliant man, but who had the unfortunate faculty of becoming the debtor of every tradesman within reach. He was approached by one of his creditors with the request that he settle his bill. He said he did not have the money to settle it. "Well," said the creditor, "give me your note, and make it payable whenever you please." "With the greatest pleasure," said his lordship; and he immediately wrote a note for the full amount, payable one day after judgment. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] proposes that we adopt a resolution declaring that whenever we think that the people of the Philippine Islands are fit for self-government we will give it to them. Is that the meaning of the Declaration of Independence, that all governments derive their just powers from whom and from what? From the consent of the governor, from the consent of the victor? As I have read it, it is from the consent of the governed; and I assert here to-day that the meaning of that Declaration is that there is not a people upon the face of the earth so poor, so ignorant, so degraded that they are not entitled to choose their own government, be it good or bad, republican or monarchical.

I put this question now to every Senator on this floor: If we are to determine when these people are to have the right of self-government, then what becomes of the declaration that the consent of the governed confers just power upon the government? Oh, it is said, but we did the same thing as to Cuba. We did nothing of the sort. We pledged ourselves to restore order in Cuba, so the people could determine upon their form of government. Have we done that as to the Philippines? On the contrary, we have changed the declaration and forced Spain to cede to us the absolute ownership of the islands, and we are to pay $20,000,000 ex gracia for that cession. We do not say that we will restore order, enforce law, or let those people choose their own government, but they are our property. They belong to us and we can do with them as we please.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall make no objection to voting upon these resolutions, because they are simply brutum fulmen. They amount to nothing. We have already declared what we intend to do by what we are doing; and in my judgment it is a travesty upon legislation to ask to take the time of the Senate to attempt to cajole the American people by pretending that we intend to do anything else than what we are doing now.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri, if he will be kind enough to answer before he sits down, if it is not apparent that the pressing of these resolutions to a vote now is merely to carry out a pledge made before the vote on the treaty came about?

Mr. VEST. I know nothing about any pledge. I have simply heard the statement of the Senator from Illinois, and I believe what that Senator says to be true. I have nothing to say in regard to any pledge, as I was not a party to it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this discussion is drifting away somewhat from the resolution before the Senate, but I shall not protract it to any extent, because I desire a disposition of the resolution before the morning hour expires. I can not resist the temptation to respectfully differ with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as respects our attitude toward those islands. I voted for the ratification of the treaty, and I have no apology to make here or elsewhere for doing so. It was my honest conviction that to open up negotiations by a rejection of the treaty or an amendment of its terms might lead to dangerous complications and dangerous consequences; and I preferred to have the whole question within our jurisdiction, so that we might, in accordance with the Declaration of Independence, enable the Filipinos to set up a home government of their own.

Mr. President, our attitude in the Philippine Islands is a military attitude altogether. There is no civil power there. We have held those islands and will hold them by virtue of the military power of this Government until Congress, carrying out a duty imposed upon it by the Constitution, shall formulate and see that there is adopted a system of civil government for those people. I think that position can not be successfully contradicted.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] finds some fault with the adoption of any resolution upon the subject of our attitude toward the Philippine Islands. The Senator from Montana manifests considerable hostility to the Filipinos, and with much of that I sympathize. He wants to use the Army and the Navy first to destroy them before any form of government is set up there. I draw the line at that. I thought, while listening to the honorable Senator from Montana in his ferocious assault upon the Filipinos here a few moments ago, that this Government ought to employ his services as a warrior and send him over to that country, that his plume, like that of Henry of Navarre, might wave in front of the battle. There is not the slightest cause to make sport or game of these resolutions. They embrace vital principles of government that must be settled; and no attempt to raise the flag of discontent in this Chamber, let me say to the honorable Senator from Montana, will ever obscure the money question as an issue in Montana or any of the intermountain States.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the remarkable attitude of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], whom I have been led to believe in the years gone by was a Populist. To my utter surprise I find this morning that he has joined what an associate of ours in the House of Representatives called "plutogols." I do not know how it is spelled.

Mr. MASON. It is not spelled.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the way it is pronounced. The Senator from Illinois can spell it.

Mr. MASON. It is not spelled at all.

Mr. ALLEN. It is just spoken.

Mr. MASON. It is just spoken.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Nevada, if he will permit me the expression, is inclined to be bloodthirsty this morning. He wants to array the Army and Navy against somebody. The Senator from Nevada says that possibly we will give these people a government in two or three years from now; possibly we may not; and I was wondering at the time whether it would be possible for the great gang of agents sent to the Philippine Islands, into Cuba, and into Porto Rico, by what my friend and I know as the money power, to search for gold mines and silver mines and copper mines and locate them within two or three years, so that we can change the form of government at the expiration of that time, would succeed. I am informed that these islands swarm to-day with the agents of this power, and that while certain gentlemen talk about holding the flag over those islands, in fact the purpose of holding the flag there is that they can get control of the valuable property on those islands before it comes down and another flag goes up. I do not say that is true; I do not know whether it is or not; but I am told that it is true.

Mr. President, a duty is imposed upon us by our occupancy of the Philippine Islands that we can not escape. I would not incorporate those people into the body of our population or make citizens of them at this time. I fully concur in what I understand to be the policy of the President of the United States, to hold them for such reasonable time that the influences and education of this Government may prepare them in some slight degree for the duties of an independent republican form of government. That furnishes no excuse for their assault upon the duly constituted authorities in those islands. That comes from their lack of knowledge. It comes possibly from those who have given them bad advice. I think it does largely. But whether they be responsible or irresponsible, the first great lesson they must learn is obedience to the duly constituted authorities of the islands until the sovereignty changes from that authority to them.

It is to be regretted, it is to be deeply regretted, that there has been any necessity for the use of the Army or the Navy there; but out of it all, out of the struggle and out of the bloodshed that has taken place in the Philippine Islands, let us hope and pray that a new and better civilization may come and the blessings of civil liberty be in time extended to those people.

I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, when the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] had the floor I attempted to ask him a question, which he very brusquely brushed aside. It was whether in his view the sugar from the Philippine Islands would come into the United States free of duty, as he stated that in his opinion it might not be unwise for the United States to take in islands which raise so much of that article. But the discussion took a broader range after other Senators took the floor.

I want to draw the attention of the Senate to the marked difference between the resolution adopted in regard to Cuba and the resolutions pending in regard to the Philippine Islands. In our declaration of war we acknowledged the people of Cuba as a free and independent people. We proceeded further to say that we would help those people organize a stable form of government. In the negotiations of the treaty with Spain we required the relinquishment of Spanish sovereignty over the island of Cuba. In my opinion, that sovereignty lodged in the people whom the United States declared to be free. We acknowledged the germ of government in Cuba by acknowledging the people of the island to be free and independent. We therefore sanctioned the principle that they were capable of government by an acknowledgment through a vote in this Chamber recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans in their war with Spain.

Mr. President, the whole fabric of our Government is based upon the idea that sovereignty lodges in the people and nowhere else. We acknowledged that principle in regard to Cuba. We have not, and, in my opinion, will not acknowledge it in regard to the Philippine Islands. We bought those people as so much merchandise. We have bought them and the territory that they inhabit for $20,000,000. We have not done that with the island of Cuba. There is the most marked distinction between the two cases. We do not acknowledge that there is a germ of national life in the Philippine Islands. We have acknowledged that that germ exists in Cuba and we are assisting the Cubans to form a stable government.

Now, a government is nothing more than the organ of the sovereign will of any people. We have entirely disregarded any claim whatever of the Philippine people to any government whatever other than the government that we choose to impose upon them. There is a difference between the two cases. The statement of the Senator from Nevada raises, in my opinion, a very important question as to whether or not we will pursue in regard to the Philippine Islands what is termed the open-door policy or whether we must pursue the policy that obtains of free trade between each and every portion of the United States, including the Philippines, and closing the door to other nations, so far as our tariff laws can do so.

I believe the position is taken by some of the friends of the treaty that we can hold these islands perpetually as an appanage of the United States, without subjecting them or without their being subjected to the operation of our tariff laws; in other words, that we can impose a tariff upon the products coming from the Philippines to the United States, just as we do in regard to the products coming from foreign countries. It is a question, I think, of very great moment to the people of the United States whether we can alter the Constitution itself, which prescribes that all duties, taxes, and imposts shall be uniform throughout the United States; whether we can hold these islands perpetually, and place upon the products coming from them just such taxes as we please. I understand that to be the doctrine held by some of the members of the Senate and a great many on the outside of the Senate.

If that is the doctrine, it ought to be debated in these resolutions. We ought to know where we stand. We ought to know whether or not the sugar, the rice, the hemp, and other products coming from the islands can come in with a duty or without a duty. That is a very material consideration for the people of my State. Some of them down there seem to be under the impression that the products of the islands can be taxed by the Congress of the United States as if they did not belong to the domain of the United States. I believe that is a wrong impression. I believe that taxation must be uniform. I know there are judicial precedents holding that view, and I believe that the precedents are in exact conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

I do not believe that there is any parallel whatever in the case of Cuba and the case of the Philippine Islands. The concluding clause of the resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. McENERY] gives the United States ample power to dispose of these islands whenever the United States sees proper to do it. We are under no guarantee whatever to them. We have taken them. We do not propose to give them self-government. We only propose in the resolution offered by my colleague to prepare them for local government, and in due time to dispose of them according to the best interests of the people of the United States. That may be to sell them; it may be to alienate them. The term "dispose" would imply that we are to get rid of them. That is not a proper term to use if we are going to incorporate them. To "dispose" looks toward getting rid of them, selling them, alienating them, and not to incorporating them. But, Mr. President, interests will grow up and around the Philippines which will prevent us from letting them go.

The Senator from Nevada says that there is no danger of competition from these islands; that the labor of the Tropics does not come to the temperate zone, and vice versa. That may be true, but if there is a condition of free trade existing between the United States and the Philippine Islands, what is to prevent American capital from exploiting the resources of that country through Malay labor and bringing the product here to compete with American labor?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. CAFFERY. I decline to be interrupted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. CAFFERY. Now, Mr. President, there is the danger point for our labor. If a condition of free trade exists, and in my opinion it must exist, between the Philippine Islands and the United States, why could not that country be developed in its material resources through low-priced Malay labor, and the product of that labor be brought into the United States to compete with the product of our high-priced labor? Why not? There is the danger; there is the trouble; and nobody can sneer it down and pooh-pooh it away.

Given the conditions of free trade, given the conditions of a stable government, given the conditions of American capital and American ability to organize, why not make the Tropics flourish? Why not develop the resources of the Tropics in the Philippines to their highest extent? They already export 250,000 tons of sugar. They export a vast quantity of manila hemp, the best in the world. Under the conditions that American enterprise and capital and skill could create in those islands, all these products and many more to be developed would come in competition with the products of American labor right here at home.

There is no opportunity there, as the Senator well remarks, for any hard-working, industrious white man to go to the Philippines. He can not stand the climate. If that were an uninhabited country in the temperate zone, notwithstanding it is 7,000 miles away from our coast, if it could afford a place where the American workman, the American yeoman could settle and better his fortunes, it would not be a great evil; but as it is 7,000 miles from our coast, inhabited by a people who perhaps will, at least to a small extent, come here while certain it is that our people can not go there except as capitalists and exploiters, I see, Mr. President, from an economical standpoint, from an industrial standpoint, great danger of the competition of the products of those islands with the products of American home labor.

That point ought to be settled. That point arises in these resolutions, for the resolutions of my colleague say that we must keep those islands until such time—indefinite, perhaps perpetual—as the United States may think proper to dispose of them. There is not in those resolutions a single guaranty of anything but American government; there is not a single statement of anything but the exercise of our authority with the reservation to alienate if we see proper; and pending our absolute control, no doubt such influences will be brought to bear as will perpetuate our dominion there. There is no doubt that the products of the islands, if allowed to come in free, will seriously affect our home industries; and there is no doubt in my mind that they must come in free or the Constitution and the law must be set aside.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALTOONA, PA.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1273) for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor. The matter went over yesterday at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. The bill has passed the Senate and the House and the question is on concurring in the amendments of the House. It will not take more than a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, strike out "cause to be erected thereon, a" and insert "to contract for the erection and completion of a;" on page 2, line 22, strike out all after the word "alleys" down to and including the word "therein," in line 29; and amend the title so as to read: "A bill for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the words struck out by the House of Representatives be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, after the word "alleys," the House of Representatives struck out:

And that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. COCKRELL. When the bill was laid before the Senate yesterday and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania moved that the Senate concur in the House amendments, I asked that it might be laid over. I had the House amendment read, which shows that the House has stricken out the provision of the bill which requires the Attorney-General to pass upon the title and requires a cession of the jurisdiction of the State to the United States. It has been the universal rule of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to have those provisions inserted in all the bills which have heretofore been passed for the erection of public buildings. I suppose the committee knew what they were doing, and that the provision was necessary. Therefore, when I saw that the House had stricken out the provision, I could not consent to the passage of the bill until that question was looked into. I made my objection at the time——

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator——

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not objecting to the bill now, if the Senator from Illinois will just wait a little while. I will be through in a minute or two, and the amendments will be concurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought the Senator was going to offer an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; there is no necessity for an amendment. I know exactly what I am doing.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I objected yesterday until the matter could be looked into. I have conversed with the members of another body which have this matter in charge. I asked for certain information. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], is not present. I find that the House committee acted upon what is stated in the following letter addressed to me:

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1899.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Representative Hicks, of Pennsylvania, who is interested in the Altoona public-building bill—

That is the bill here—

informs me that you desire some reasons given you for the amendments made to the bill referred to in the House of Representatives. I refer to S. 1273. The reason for the first amendment, in page 1, line 5, is because the committee thought under the amendment that the construction of the building after the site was purchased would be very much hastened with reference to time, and in that respect it would be an improvement over the conditions set out in the original bill.

That I do not object to.

The second amendment, on page 2, line 22, etc., was made at the suggestion of the Treasury Department, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. O. L. Spaulding, using these words in explanation of his recommendations to the committee: "This prohibition (referring, of course, to the lines in the original bill stricken out by the second amendment, just referred to) will prevent the payment, until after the acquisition of a site, of the customary preliminary expenses, such as advertising, the traveling and subsistence expenses of the agent of this Department who may be detailed to examine and report upon the suitability of such sites as may be offered, etc. Unless it is intended that such items should not be paid promptly, it is suggested that the provisions of section 355, Revised Statutes of the United States, are ample to prevent the purchase of a site until the State has ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the same, or the erection thereon of any building until the Attorney-General has passed favorably on the title thereto, and it is respectfully suggested, therefore, that the prohibitory clause referred to be stricken from the bill, or that the ordinary preliminary expenses be excepted from its operation."

With reference to the amendment offered to the title striking out the appropriation in the Senate bill, I beg leave to state that, under the rules of the House, bills reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the House of Representatives are not allowed to carry an appropriation.

Trusting this information will be satisfactory to you, I remain,

Yours, truly,

DAVID H. MERCER.

Mr. SPOONER. What section of the Revised Statutes does the letter refer to?

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 355. Now, Mr. President, if the statement made to me is true, that the Secretary of the Treasury decides that the existing law is ample and that under existing law, without any provision in these special bills, the title will be passed upon by the Attorney-General and the State will have to cede jurisdiction to the United States, there is no necessity for such a provision, and therefore I shall not object to this going out of the bill. I regret that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did not take the same view, because I should not have objected to it if it had not been the universal rule of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to have the provision inserted in the bill, and I thought it was very strange that the House would strike it out after having concurred in it for so long a time.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a moment. The position taken by the House of Representatives and by the Treasury Department is not a conceded one. There has long been a controversy in both branches of Congress, and especially in the Senate, as to the cession of jurisdiction by a State in regard to the site of a public building of the United States. A former Senator, a member of this body, now deceased, Senator Jones, of Florida, made several very able arguments upon that question. The question alluded to by my colleague has been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The chairman of that committee, now absent, and our deceased friend from Vermont, Mr. Morrill, the oldest member of the committee and its former chairman, always insisted upon this provision being put in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. May I read the section of the Revised Statutes referred to?

Mr. VEST. Yes; read the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will now read section 355, referred to in the letter I have read:

SEC. 355. No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy-yard, custom-house, light-house, or other public building of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site may be to such purchase has been given.

That is explicit, then.

The district attorneys of the United States, upon the application of the Attorney-General, shall furnish any assistance or information in their power in relation to the titles of the public property lying within their respective districts. And the Secretaries of the Departments, upon the application of the Attorney-General, shall procure any additional evidence of title which he may deem necessary, and which may not be in the possession of the officers of the Government, and the expense of procuring it shall be paid out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of the Departments, respectively.

It does contain it.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to add that this matter has always been disposed of in a perfunctory sort of way in the committee and in the Senate by the statement that it would do no harm to put such a provision in a public-building bill, and out of an abundance of caution it should be put there, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] said some days ago when he offered a resolution distributing different appropriation bills of the Senate, amongst the balance placing the river and harbor bill in the possession of the Committee on Commerce. I called his attention to the fact that that committee already had jurisdiction of that bill. Then he said no harm could come from reenacting that provision in his resolution. That is all there is in this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The questson is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Now I ask that that bill be temporarily laid aside, in order that the pending appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I rose before that request was made. I wish merely to get the view of the Senator from Illinois as to the time when it will be agreeable to him to have a motion made to consider executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. Any time after the appropriation bill is disposed of to-day.

Mr. HOAR. At what time does the Senator think the appropriation bill will be disposed of?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope before the ordinary time of adjournment. If not, I shall be glad if the Senate would allow me to finish it to-day, for the reasons which I intimated yesterday. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] does not expect an executive session to-day.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That course will be agreeable to me provided we may have an executive session on Monday immediately after the Senate convenes.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then I give notice that if the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill be not sooner disposed of, so as to have an executive session this afternoon, I shall move one after the close of the routine morning business on Monday.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the legislative appropriation bill be taken up.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will state his question of order.

Mr. MASON. I should like to know the parliamentary situation. I heard a request for unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was too late to entertain the request after 2 o'clock. At 2 o'clock it was the duty of the Chair to lay the unfinished business before the Senate, and he has done so.

Mr. MASON. What has been done, then, with the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business was laid before the Senate, which is the bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. MASON. What disposition does my colleague wish to have made of that bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of going on with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I object. I rose to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is in time.

Mr. CULLOM. Then if my colleague objects to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, I move that the bill be taken up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. MASON. I do not think it will be necessary to make any motion if I may be given one minute to inquire as to the parliamentary situation. I should like now to know the situation. I rose to object until I could make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. To do what?

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask unanimous consent or to renew the request made by the Senator from Louisiana that his resolution be voted on at 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. CULLOM. If my colleague will allow me to say a word on that subject, those resolutions or some one of the resolutions was before the Senate during the morning hour, and the discussion of it continued until the morning hour expired, when regularly, under the rule, the resolution went over, or went on the Calendar at least.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. At least the discussion ceased under the rule. So I think my colleague is mistaken as to there being any purpose on the part of anybody to refuse to give a hearing to a Senator on that resolution within the time in which it was before the Senate. I hope he will not insist upon any further action with reference to taking up the resolutions at this time.

Mr. MASON. I have no objection, but I wish to be heard for a moment. I desire to make a few remarks. I do not intend to resist the motion to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Then let the bill be taken up.

Mr. MASON. It can be done by unanimous consent; but I wish to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Illinois can speak as soon as the appropriation bill is taken up.

Mr. MASON. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the appropriation bill will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the consent of the Senator from Illinois to call up for consideration House bill 11098 reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a matter of considerable importance and will take only a very few minutes.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the appropriation bill first be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that on yesterday my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] stated that I told him if he would desist from attempting to call up the bill for which he asked consideration then, I would yield to-day. I do that because of my promise; but I hope that no other Senator will ask for a similar favor, as I am very anxious to get the appropriation bill out of the way.

Mr. HARRIS. I appreciate the consideration of the Senator from Illinois. The bill on which I desire action has passed the House of Representatives and will take only a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] desire to make any request for unanimous consent at this time?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir; if it is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That request for unanimous consent was made prior to the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. Will the Senator from Illinois please again state his request?

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] be taken up on Monday after the morning business and voted upon before adjournment on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the request made by the Senator from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I say something before that matter is disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I consider myself bound absolutely to request an executive session at that time, as is well known.

Mr. MASON. Then I will make the request for Tuesday, after the routine morning business.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Illinois will not press that request now, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] left the Chamber a few moments ago, and I ask him to defer his request for a few moments until the Senator from Georgia can be sent for.

Mr. MASON. I do not believe any one will object, after all that has been said, to giving us a vote upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the Chair to withhold the request or to put it now?

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw it for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will wait for a few moments until the Senate is fuller. The Senator from Georgia before objected to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MASON. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask for a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested by the Senator from Illinois, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Hanna,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Hansbrough,	Mantle,	Ross,
Bate,	Harris,	Martin,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Stewart,
Chilton,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Teller,
Clay,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Thurston,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Perkins,	Warren,
Deboe,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Wellington.
Fairbanks,	McLaurin.	Platt, Conn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the reading of the appropriation bill will be proceeded with, if there is no motion before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has made a request for unanimous consent that a vote be taken on Tuesday next, immediately after the routine morning business, on Senate joint resolution 240, introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. BACON. I shall not object to the unanimous-consent agreement to take up the joint resolution and vote on it before we leave the subject.

Mr. MASON. That is right. That is all I request.

Mr. CULLOM. To vote during the day?

Mr. BACON. That we shall not go on with any other matter until that is determined.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. BACON. Of course I do not mean that it shall be determined that day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I object to the entire performance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. MASON. I desire to be heard upon the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will be entitled to the floor when the bill is being read.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask a unanimous consent of the Senate, which I think in all fairness we are bound to give. During the discussion this morning, which lasted several hours, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] repeatedly sought the floor without success. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Illinois be given five minutes in which to address the Senate at this time, which is, I understand, the time he asked for just now.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague can deliver his address on the pending appropriation bill if he chooses.

Mr. HOAR. That is not a good practice, and I do not think any Senator ought, when another subject is distinctly up, to debate other questions. We can not stop a Senator, because he himself must judge of what he will say, but it is not a fair thing. I think a better way is to give the unanimous consent for five minutes, as that is all the Senator asked for just now.

Mr. MASON. I may take longer than that.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. MASON). Go on and make your speech on the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MASON. I do not understand that I am limited to five minutes.

Mr. TELLER. I object. The Senator has the right to go on and speak on the pending bill. I do not want to limit him to five minutes. Let him go on and make his speech.

Mr. HOAR. He has a physical, but not a moral, right to do so, in my judgment.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. MASON). I trust my colleague will proceed now.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I presume, at least I hope, that no one of my colleagues is more susceptible to kind treatment than I am. I suspect that I am as ambitious to be liked among my colleagues as any Senator on this floor, and I suppose that I interfere with the transaction of routine business with as much hesitancy as any Senator would indulge in when doing the same work that I feel my duty now compels me to do.

More than a month ago I gave notice upon a simple resolution which I offered merely saying that the just powers of government were derived from the consent of the governed and that we would not undertake to govern an alien people by force perpetually without their consent—I gave notice then that before the vote on the treaty was taken I should ask for a vote upon that resolution. If I had pursued the tactics which are common, disregarding that thing which you call Senatorial courtesy, and which you yield to Senators who can force you to do it and refuse to those who observe the amenities of life, I might have had a vote ere this. But I have tried to pursue a course dictated by the feeling that one Senator owes some consideration to his colleagues. I have asked day after day for a vote, doubting the propriety and the correctness of that treaty, waiting for information, anxious to do the best I could for my State and my country.

When you asked for a time to vote upon that treaty, I, with the rest of us, consented. I supposed it had been agreed that some resolution declaring the policy of this Government would be passed before the ratification of the treaty. Every suggestion that I have made has been met here by my elders upon this floor, first by one and then by another, with the quiet slings and flings such as came this morning from the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAWLEY]. When I asked simply for a statement of the health of the army in the Philippines, when I asked to know how many lives of American soldiers it would cost to take those islands by force, when I asked to know not only the money that went into this investment in the purchase of sovereignty, the same Senator sneeringly withdrew his objection and said he had no respect for it.

To-day he announces that he has no respect for and that he objects to the "whole performance," as though I, sir, were not his equal upon this floor, as though I, sir, had a little less due me as a Senator of the United States than if I had sat here for years at the head of some great committee conducting affairs. I claim to be the peer of the Senator. I represent as good a State as he, and I claim here and now the personal privilege that I have so long waited for.

Gentlemen say—and I have had no opportunity to reply—that we who speak for independence in the Philippine Islands are to blame for this war. I question the motives of no man, and I give you notice now collectively that I shall permit no gentleman to question mine.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I beg to interrupt the Senator a moment. I was called out awhile ago, and I understand the Senator has been paying his compliments to me during my absence. I would be glad to have him tell me to my face what he has said.

Mr. MASON. I did not observe you were absent from the Chamber. I directed a part of my observations to you.

Mr. HAWLEY. Repeat them, please.

Mr. MASON. I shall be delighted to do so. I said that when I asked for a vote on a simple resolution inquiring as to the state of the health of our troops in the Philippines the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, when he withdrew his objection, said he had no respect for it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not for you; for the resolutions, I said. I made that distinction.

Mr. MASON. The same distinguished Senator said this morning that he objected to the "whole performance," as though I, I said, a younger and less experienced Senator, had less rights upon this floor to ask unanimous consent than had he.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I was not thinking of the Senator in saying that I objected to the performance. It was to these other proceedings here that were likely to interrupt the consideration or bar out the consideration of an appropriation bill. I did not take into consideration for a moment that the Senator desired to speak.

Mr. MASON. It is all satisfactory to me if it is to the Senator. I was guilty of no "performance." I intend to be guilty of no "performance." I am endeavoring to discharge a solemn obligation as I understand it, and if I have to take the floor and stay here until the snow flies next winter, I am willing to do it.

I say to you now, Mr. President, that I consider that some declaration as to the policy of the Government of the United States is much more important than it is to take the money out of the Treasury.

Mr. President, we are in war. We have shifted the scene of action from war against Spain to war against the insurgents, who never did us any harm. We are fighting to-day men with bows and arrows in their hands, who six months ago were our allies. There is no lawyer upon this floor, from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but who has admitted that they became our allies. Now, let us see whether some one has made a mistake; and if it is a mistake, it is a mistake of this Senate and of this country, and we are all equally to blame. It is our country. The Dred Scott decision was just as much the decision of Illinois as it was of South Carolina. Whatever wrong a nation does rests upon us equally and alike.

At the close of this most holy war, when we gave notice to the world that we unlimbered our guns in the cause of humanity, before the treaty of peace was finally made, money considerations came in and indemnity was talked of as though we had played the part of a good Samaritan at a price, at a per diem; and the moment money came into the peace treaty, that moment we descended from the high plane of liberty, that moment the trouble began. The moment the jingle of gold and silver was heard at your peace-treaty meeting in Paris, that moment the American people began to wonder and to revolt.

Let us see where we are, Mr. President. At the close of this war we had two great islands in our hands that I am to speak of, the islands known as the Philippines and the island of Cuba. One of the great questions that disturbed the American people was: What treatment shall the Philippine Islanders have? One class of people said: "Let us pursue the course of the fathers; let us give to them the same thing we gave to Cuba." Another class of gentlemen said: "Oh, no; they are ours. We have bought them; we have bought them from the King." Do you know that you never can buy a better title than the grantor has? The title of a king, the right of a king to govern, sovereignty to be sold like chattels.

In one island, where we pursued the way of the fathers, there is peace; in the other island, where we have pursued the other way, there is war. Gentlemen say the Filipinos declared war. I say as a lawyer that the declaration and the casus belli came from us. I propose to discuss that about Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday. I say that we made the cause for war; that they had some rights; that they presented their petition at our door; that they had a right to be heard; that they were our allies; and when they presented the petition here we kicked them out of the door. They crossed the water and at Paris they said to the people there, "You are parting our raiment; and, for God's sake, let us be heard for our people." They were turned away there; and yesterday, when the rebel chief, as you call him, asked for the poor privilege of a conference, without knowing what request he had to make, you refused even to hear his voice, to hear his prayer, and you continue to burn his villages; and yet in this Chamber we condemn the action of Weyler along the same lines! You do not have to shoot the first gun to declare war. You do not have to strike me to make me strike you.

Now, Mr. President, some one has made a mistake. We promised to Cuba ultimate independence. Is not that the promise? Is it not so nominated in the bond? On the island of Cuba to-day the people are a little restless, a little weary, yet they are getting ready every day and every hour, and they say, "God bless the Americano," while in the same zone, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] says, the same class of people, having the same language, practically the same religion, practically the same sports, and of the same character, we have so conducted our business that their bows and arrows are aimed at us.

But I heard the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], when he gave a lecture the other day to the Senators who disagreed with him, declaim in loud voice against the Filipinos. You would have thought from his voice, his gesture, and from his language that the British lion had struck us a deadly blow. A few days ago gentlemen belittled the Filipinos and said they are mere children—they have not the mental or moral capacity to govern themselves; they are half man and half devil, half child and half brute—and yet those very distinguished gentlemen who so belittled them and put them on a lower plane are the gentlemen who boast the loudest of our bravery when we shoot them like dogs and burn their buildings a la Weyler!

More than a month ago, Mr. President, I asked for a simple vote—it is part of the public record—not in executive session. I am betraying none of the sacred secrets of this antiquated, old, nonsensical rule of ours known as the executive session; but in open session, Mr. President, at this seat where I am now standing, one month and one day ago to-day, on the 10th day of last month, I gave notice and it was received, and made an impression almost equal to that which the summer wind makes against the Capitol Dome. There was no more intention of considering my resolution than there is to-day of considering the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana.

Day after day I had asked for it; hour after hour I had hoped for it; aye, I have prayed for one chance to vote upon some kindred resolution. I appeal to every Senator on this floor whether I have taken one moment of the time of the Senate before this. Not one moment have I taken from the business of the Senate until now; and now I intend to take all the time I want. I begin to feel the glorious liberty of Senatorial courtesy. [Laughter.] I have learned there is no limit; and I intend to imitate a distinguished Senator, who is not now in the Chamber, who has the happy faculty of setting his mouth going and going off and leaving it for a week at a time without any intellectual exercise. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have been put off from time to time, first by reason of my consideration for one Senator, and then for another; and to-day, at this present moment, I feel that I have a duty to perform; I feel that I have had to crowd my own distinguished colleague [Mr. CULLOM] out of a few moment's consideration of the natural right to invade the Treasury Department and distribute the surplus. [Laughter.]

But if I shall yield the floor now, Mr. President, it will only be to give notice that on Monday or Tuesday, and probably on both days, I intend to be heard further upon this question. I am willing that this bill shall proceed; but I am also willing that no further business shall be done in this Senate that shall take me from my divine right to speak until you give me a chance to vote upon some resolution. Gentlemen say this is a threat. Oh, no. When I made a fight against your barnacles known as the Rules of the Senate I told you that when I had a filibuster to make I would serve you notice that it was a filibuster, and that I would take off the kid gloves.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to ask the Senator whether he expected to have a vote on the resolution?

Mr. MASON. I certainly did expect it; and I say now if the gentlemen in the Chamber——

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator be kind enough to give the reason why he thought he would get a vote?

Mr. MASON. I was not entirely familiar with Senatorial courtesy. [Laughter.] I hope to learn as I grow older in this body whom to trust, when to trust, and how to trust. I feel that my distinguished colleague from Illinois would not wish to proceed with his appropriation bill until he has heard one side of this question as given by Cæsar's ghost.

It has been charged by some and believed by many——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me, before he leaves the subject of the question just asked by the Senator from Mississippi? He may feel, possibly, that it would be a reflection on him to speak of an absent Senator. We do not know who he is; but would he mind telling us just what he was promised?

Mr. MASON. The Senator has been answered once or twice.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MASON. Yes. I told the Senator from South Carolina the Senator was absent. I would not use the name of a Senator in his absence.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want the Senator to give his name until he comes back; but just tell us what he said, will you not?

Mr. MASON. I think on reflection I will not. [Laughter.] I intend to be entirely respectful to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course.

Mr. MASON. As I was saying, it has been charged by many, and believed by many, that we were to discard the liberty cap; that we were to go into the business of buying sovereignty, and we became so heroic here in the Senate after Dewey's splendid victory that we were going to lay aside the American eagle as our mark of nationality and become the whelp of the lion. I have had transmitted to me through some newspaper a suggestion as to whether we are to be the whelp of a lion. It is signed "Cæsar's Ghost."

> The purring mother, stretched at ease within her island lair,
> Throws high her tawny head and sniffs the blood smell on the air.
> Slow lifting to her feet she roars across the angry sea,
> "I know thee now, my lion whelp, it can be none but thee!
>
> "I feel no more thy milk teeth haggling at my stingy breast;
> I joy to know thou 'st tasted meat, young lion of the West!
> Who said I bore an eagle that the jungle dark would shun,
> And soar to heaven with eyes that look unflinching at the sun?
> "A lie! I know my growling cub, I know that glorious roar;
> I've roared it oft on Indian fields, from Afric's golden shore.
> He smacks his lusty lips, his eyes with blood-red fire are light;
> His drooling jaws are sign of hunger and of prey in sight.
>
> "Beneath his paw I see a red man struggling to be free—
> That is our playful way, to tease with hope of liberty—
> What majesty! What lion likeness in that shaggy crest!
> E'en I could not so tear that black man's heart from out his breast.
> "We will hunt together, cub"—

Here is the alliance that you are coming to, gentlemen—

> "We'll hunt together, cub, on every land, by every sea,
> And when we find a man not shirk responsibility.
> O lion's whelp! I hear thy roar across the roaring main—> Thou art my cub, thou art the true (improved) imperial strain."
> —Cæsar's Ghost.

Mr. President, differing somewhat with the poet who signs his name as Cæsar's Ghost, I deny that we are to become the lion's whelp. I confess that we are acting a little bit like it; I confess that when these islands were within our hands we had not patience enough, statesmanship enough, generosity enough, to tender those people something that would bring peace. The roar did sound more like that of the whelp of a lion than the screech of the eagle that stands for true Americanism.

Mr. President, I desire to give notice that after to-day, during the morning hour, I shall ask to be heard upon some of the pending resolutions, and that I shall yield my time at any moment to any other Senator to speak upon the resolutions or at any time when we can have an opportunity to vote upon any one of the pending resolutions. Understand me, Mr. President; I desire to be understood. I have waited two hours to-day, I have waited two days, I have waited two weeks, nearly two months. I say that my request has been considered by my colleagues as of no weight, of no binding effect, and not to be entertained by them. First the friends of the treaty beat me. Then the enemies of the treaty beat me. Between the upper and the nether millstone I have been refused a chance to vote upon any one of these resolutions. I see no other course left. I will answer for myself. I shall criticise the conduct of no man. I shall impugn the motives of no man. I shall not permit any gentleman upon this floor to impugn mine. As I see the light, as I read the future, as I am a student of evolution and a believer in it, I believe there is one way to end this matter, and that is to end it here.

We have imitated England in all of her past cruelty to her colonists. England never was guilty of more cruelty. We are not defending our land now. Our declarations of war came when we sent our men there within the last few weeks, against the protest of the natives and without giving them a hearing. You are not waiting in Manila. You are extending your lines and burning towns. The villages you burned yesterday were not mentioned in the protocol, and the treaty is not signed. The treaty is not complete. We are taking revenge upon these poor weak children of the forest. England in her palmy days was never more cruel. Let us imitate Gladstone for one minute upon the subject of retrocession; let us imitate England, as attention was called to her conduct by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. The English flag was put over the Boers when they did not want it. I had hoped that the time would never come when the colors of our beloved country would go above an unwilling people. I had hoped that no living person would ever look into the sky and curse my flag; but you have put it to-day where 9,000,000 people are cursing your flag, your institutions, and they do not know the difference between Spain and America, either by your protestations or by your conduct.

My country, right or wrong, but let us right her. The power to right her is here. In the last days of Gladstone's life he spoke of "false shame." The English flag was over the Boer, and was taken down by the civilization and the Christian thought of England. Let the dudes imitate the English dudes, if they will. Let them imitate England as long as they will; but if you have to have a little English in your conduct, take the example of William E. Gladstone. Read his last speech where he said the question is not who shall haul down the flag, but what is just. That is what we are looking for. I am not afraid of "false shame." I have seen a real gentleman apologize to a bootblack for a thoughtless word, and I have seen a bully kick a bootblack half across the street. Let us get a little of the Gladstone idea—not who shall pull down the flag, but how long shall our flag remain above an unwilling people.

"Oh, but," they say, "we put it over your people down South, and it was an unwilling flag." Not so. The flag was there by contract. We simply fought to keep our flag where you had agreed it should be kept; and that difference is settled. We went into an agreement whereby the South was to stand by the North, the alliance being like a wedding that could not be divorced. We did not put the flag above an unwilling people. We kept it there after you had put it there yourselves. This is the first time in all the history of this beloved country of ours—this country which has attracted the admiration of the world—that the flag has ever floated over an alien who has cursed it. You love your flag and so do I. It is not an idle sentimentality. It means protection to my home; and the home of the Filipino is as sacred to him as yours is to you. The laws of nations, which I propose to discuss (and I shall read from the lecture of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]), is based upon justice, upon humanity, upon right. I have been pleading for their homes. I shall continue to do so until this session adjourns. I have learned something of the Republican-Democratic idea of home.

I remember to have talked with a man within a few weeks who said to a man who lived away up in the Northland, where they have night for six months, "If you had $500, what would you do?" "Oh, I would go back to my old home and build a house there." There is six months darkness; it is cold and barren; but it is his home. Some of you people on both sides of this Chamber remember when at Vicksburg our boys got so close to the Confederates that they talked back and forth. Every man kept his head below the breastworks. Our band played Yankee Doodle and theirs played Dixie. We played the Star-Spangled Banner and they played the Bonnie Blue Flag. I believe one Irishman put his finger up, and got a shot in his wrist. He said to his captain that he was seeking a furlough, but got a discharge. Every man, when Dixie and the Bonnie Blue Flag and the Star-Spangled Banner were being played, kept out of danger, until one of the bands finally struck up Home, Sweet Home. Then the guns went into the trenches. Then the men stood upon the breastworks. "Hurrah, Johnnie!" "Hurrah for home, Yank!" There was no danger with the music of home in the air.

Mr. President, I have learned that every home made by human hands is a sacred thing. My country has proceeded, choosing the lines which best fitted and suited, along the line of empire, to take land without the consent of the inhabitants. No one denies that. They say we have a legal right. Oh, yes. But we knew, when we took the legal title, of the claim of those poor people. You are sending our boys over there, and the ships will be coming back loaded with their corpses. How many Senators have sons there now? How many Senatorial appointees have retired from the Commissary Department? Are we any less thoughtful of an American boy because he is not ours? I am told that we will subdue the Filipinos, and that it will not cost us over three or four thousand lives. I tell you that the whole group, the whole archipelago, is not worth the life of one American boy, trade and barter and dicker as you will.

But distinguished and pious gentlemen say, "God put them in our hands; it is destiny." The Lord! There was never a tyrant who cut off heads who did not charge it to the Lord. All crimes are laid at that door. We profess to be a Christian nation and we have conducted our affairs with a weak, childish people in such a way that we are killing them hands down, and we say we must do it for their good. If you were honest about it, gentlemen, and could show me where you could steal something for your country, I could excuse it on the ground of high (?) statesmanship, but there is not a dollar in it for your country or for your States. It is murder. Then you pull the cloak around you and go into high places and say, "Thank God, we are not as other men. We are Anglo-Saxons. We have worshiped at the throne of the Nazarene ever since we were born." But, as Cæsar's ghost says, "We have tasted blood."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken upon the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] at half past 2 o'clock on next Tuesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Illinois that on next Tuesday at half past 2 o'clock, by unanimous consent, a vote be taken on the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], known as Senate joint resolution No. 240. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. HAWLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I rise to what I think is a question of privilege. I will be very brief about it. I give notice that when the Senate is fuller I shall ask to have the unanimous-consent agreement to have a vote taken on what is familiarly called the McEnery resolution set aside for this reason: Myself and several others made a peremptory objection to the agreement, but it so happened that three of us went out, I suppose, on public business. I was absent from the Chamber on important public business. I shall at the first opportunity ask to have that agreement set aside.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, let the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire whether the amendment in lines 3 and 4, at the top of page 76, was adopted. It was intended that the words "five hundred" should be stricken out and "one thousand" inserted.

Mr. TELLER. Can we not have order?

The SECRETARY. In lines 3 and 4, page 76, it is proposed to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to read:

For postage stamps for the War Department and its bureaus, as required under the Postal Union, to prepay postage on matters addressed to Postal Union countries, $1,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that for postage stamps?

Mr. CULLOM. For postage stamps under the Postal Union.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a new estimate?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir. The chairman of the committee, I think, has a communication stating that it ought to be done. I have not got it here. Mr. Cleaves has the letter. The Senator from Iowa may know about the matter. It was to go in, as I understood from the chairman.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount appropriated by the House is not enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 19, on page 76.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 18, page 76, after the word "charges," I desire to insert the words "temporary labor, not to exceed $1,000;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the War Department, * * * expenses of horses and wagons to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges, temporary labor, not to exceed $1,000, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $38,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 76, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert as a proviso the following:

Provided, That purchases of law books are authorized from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the War Department for the fiscal year 1899, made by the legislative act approved March 15, 1898.

Mr. CULLOM. I move, after the word "books," in line 20, to insert "books of reference and periodicals."

The SECRETARY. After the word "books," in line 20, it is proposed to insert "books of reference and periodicals."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause for "library of the Navy Department," on page 80, line 17, after the word "one," to insert "one clerk, $1,000," and in line 18, to increase the total appropriation for library of the Navy Department from $2,580 to $3,580.

Mr. MASON. I desire to call the attention of my colleague to the amendment. I understand that the clause in line 16, "one clerk, $1,000," is a mistake, and I move an amendment to the amendment which conforms to the request of the Secretary of the Navy. After the word "for," in line 16, I move to insert "one clerk of class 2," and then to strike out, in line 17, the words "one clerk, $1,000," proposed to be inserted by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the amendment offered by my colleague to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. That changes the total in the paragraph, and it ought to be $3,980 instead of $3,580.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total will be changed accordingly. The committee amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. It is disagreed to; that is right; and the total is changed so as to read, "in all, $3,980."

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause for "Bureau of Equipment, Navy Department," on page 82, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "one clerk of class 4," and in line 9 to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Equipment from $8,480 to $10,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Hydrographic Office," on page 84, line 13, to insert:

For the construction from Government surveys of a series of engraved nautical charts of the coasts and harbors of the Pacific Ocean, $12,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "Bureau of Steam Engineering," on page 86, line 15, after the word "laborers," to insert "draftsman, $2,000;" in line 16, before the word "draftsman," to insert "assistant;" and in line 20, to increase the total appropriation for Bureau of Steam Engineering from $11,340 to $13,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. With the consent of the Senator from Illinois, I ask consent to call up Order of Business 1710, being House bill No. 11093.

Mr. CULLOM. I agreed with the Senator from Kansas yesterday that I would allow his bill to be taken up to-day, so far as I was concerned, and I am inclined to allow it to be acted upon now if it leads to no debate.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill has passed the House and has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object. I only want to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] also has a bill in charge that I think ought to be passed at an early day. It will take very little time, and I had hoped that both bills could be postponed until the bill under consideration is completed. I think it will not take a great while to finish the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. We shall get through with it pretty soon, if the Senator from Kansas is willing to wait.

Mr. HARRIS. I am willing to wait until the appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill can be called up later to-day some time.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," on page 87, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "stenographer and typewriter, $1,000;" and in line 22, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery from $8,940 to $9,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 88, line 50, after the word "each," to insert "three additional members of said board of pension appeals to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be selected from the force of the Pension Office, at $2,000 each;" so as to read;

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; First Assistant Secretary, $4,500; Assistant Secretary, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,500, and $250 additional as superintendent of the Patent Office building; nine members of a board of pension appeals to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; three additional members of said Board of Pension Appeals to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be selected from the force of the Pension Office, at $2,000 each, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 5, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of the Secretary of the Interior from $232,980 to $238,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 10, to insert:

For the following additional employees, for the proper protection, heating, care, and preservation of the General Post-Office building, to be occupied by the Department of the Interior, to be available when said building shall be occupied by offices of the Interior Department, namely: One engineer, at the rate of $1,400 per annum; one assistant engineer, at the rate of $1,000; four firemen, at the rate of $720 each; three watchmen, acting as lieutenants, at the rate of $840 each; fourteen watchmen, at the rate of $720 each; fourteen laborers, at the rate of $600 each; ten laborers, at the rate of $480 each; in all, $23,940.

Mr. CULLOM. In lines 14 and 15, on page 90, I move that the words "occupied by offices of" before the words "the Interior Department" be stricken out, and the words "turned over to" be inserted, so as to read "to be available when said building shall be turned over to the Interior Department."

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator what is the object of that provision?

Mr. CULLOM. When the building is turned over to the Interior Department, that Department ought to become responsible for it, and those words are inserted for that purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator what the effect of that will be. There are various offices, some of the Interior Department, now in rented buildings, and they have quite a corps of officials looking after the preservation, the heating, and so on. Is it a duplication of that force?

Mr. CULLOM. These are additional employees for the purpose of taking charge of that building. The old employees of the Post-Office Department, I suppose, of course, will go with that Department, and it is necessary to make provision for the Interior Department.

Mr. GORMAN. I am aware of that, but the branches of the Interior Department that will go into this building and are already in rented buildings, have a corps already. Would it not be a duplication to keep those in who are now in the outside offices and then provide a full corps of new employees in the Post-Office building?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think that would be the case, but it might be well to look into it a little to see whether or not that would be so. I think we considered that matter pretty carefully in the committee, and we determined that we would have to provide this force in order to be sure that the Government building would be cared for immediately after it is turned over by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree with that, but then what becomes of the corps that is already employed by the various bureaus, for instance, in the Atlantic Building?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know how much of the force belonging to the Interior Department will come from outside buildings. I imagine that most of it will come from the Interior Department itself. It is mainly engineers, firemen, watchmen and that sort of employees who are needed.

Mr. GORMAN. I only call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the matter. I suppose he will not legislate out the men already employed, for instance, by the Indian Office, who are in a rented building, or is it necessary to duplicate the number?

Mr. CULLOM. This item was furnished in the regular estimates by the Department.

Mr. GORMAN. I simply call the attention of the Senator to it.

Mr. CULLOM. I will say to the Senator that when the bill gets into conference and is under discussion with the House conferees I will look into the matter a little further.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "General Land Office," on page 92, line 10, to increase the number of clerks of class 1 from 61 to 63; in line 11, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each from 49 to 51; in line 12, to increase the number of copyists from 55 to 57; in line 13, to increase the number of laborers from 18 to 21; and in line 16, to increase the total appropriation for the General Land Office from $487,090 to $495,270.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to amend the amendment of the committee. In line 10, instead of "sixty-three," I move to make the number "sixty-six."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Then, in the following line, I move to strike out "fifty-one," as the committee had it, and insert "fifty-three."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 11 I move to strike out "fifty-seven," as the committee had it, and insert "fifty-eight," before the word "copyists."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. In line 13 I move to strike out "twenty-one," as the committee had it, and insert "twenty-four," before the word "laborers."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The total should be changed, in lines 16 and 17, so as to make the amount "$503,750."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was called out unavoidably. I should like to know what was done with the amendment on page 84, where the committee recommended the insertion of the following clause:

For the construction from Government surveys of a series of engraved nautical charts of the coasts and harbors of the Pacific Ocean, $12,000.

Mr. CULLOM. It was stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Secretary has passed beyond lines 14 and 15, on page 93. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at that point, which palpably ought to be made. It is in the clause referring to the distribution of maps prepared in the General Land Office, and the language employed in line 14 is "and the residue shall be delivered to the General Land Office for distribution." It ought to be "Secretary of the Interior for distribution."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, on page 93, after the words "delivered to the," it is proposed to strike out "General Land Office" and to insert "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the legislative appropriations was, in the clause for "Indian Office," on page 94, line 8, to reduce the number of clerks of class 3 from 15 to 14; in line 11, to increase the number of clerks of class 2 from 10 to 12; in line 12, to increase the number of clerks of class 1 from 23 to 25; in line 13, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each from 13 to 16; in the same line, after the word "each," to insert "stenographer to superintendent of Indian schools, $1,000;" and in line 18, to increase the total appropriation for the Indian Office from $124,920 to $132,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pension Office," on page 96, line 8, after the word "day," to insert "including necessary sleeping-car fare;" so as to read:

For per diem, when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for special examiners, or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said Bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, including necessary sleeping-car fare, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance and any other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $400,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveyors-general and their clerks," on page 106, line 8, after the word "records," to insert "pay of messenger;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery and instruments, binding records, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $500.

For surveyor-general of Idaho, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $8,000; in all, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, line 1, after the word "typewriter," to insert "pay of messenger;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery, printing, binding, typewriter, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, line 21, after the word "soap," to insert "pay of messenger;" so as to make the clause read:

For printing, stationery, drafting tools, plats, drawing papers, binding records, books and plats, telephone, registration of letters, towels, soap, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, line 1, after the word "surveyor-general," to insert "pay of messenger;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, pay of messenger, stationery, printing, binding, lights, laundry, furniture and repairs, and other incidental expenses, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 10, after the word "surveyor-general," to insert "pay of messenger;" and in line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the appropriations for incidental expenses in the offices of surveyors-general of Florida, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, and Wyoming for the fiscal year 1899 shall be available for the payment of a messenger, janitor, or laborer in each one of these offices.

So as to make the clause read:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, pay of messenger, stationery, lights, ice, and other incidental expenses, $1,000: Provided, That the appropriations for incidental expenses in the offices of surveyors-general of Florida, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, and Wyoming for the fiscal year 1899 shall be available for the payment of a messenger, janitor, or laborer in each one of these offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office First Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 111, line 8, after the word "of," to strike out "the;" and in the same line, after the word "free-delivery," to strike out "system;" so as to make the clause read:

The assistant superintendents of free delivery shall hereafter be allowed a per diem of $4 in lieu of all expenses when traveling on business of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "Office Second Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 111, line 21, to insert "chief of contract division, $2,000; chief of mail-equipment division, $2,000;" on page 112, line 1, to reduce the number of clerks of class 4 from 11 to 9; and in line 7, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General from $167,180 to $167,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "Office Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 113, line 3, to increase the number of clerks of class 3 from 17 to 18; in line 4, to increase the number of clerks of class 2 from 12 to 13; in line 5, to increase the number of clerks of class 1 from 17 to 20; in line 7, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each from 7 to 9; in line 8, to reduce the number of clerks at $900 each from five to four; and in line 10, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General from $99,340 to $107,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause for "Office of Topographer," on page 113, line 19, after the word "two," to insert "one clerk, $1,000;" and in line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of Topographer from $29,340 to $30,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 117, line 15, to increase the appropriation for salary of solicitor for the Department of State from $4,000 to $4,500; on page 118, line 8, to increase the number of assistant messengers from 7 to 8, and in line 13, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of the Attorney-General from $172,600 to $173,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, line 19, before the word "books," to strike out "law;" in the same line, before the word "library," to insert "law," and in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For books for law library of the Department, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so to make the clause read:

For purchase of session laws and statutes of the States and Territories for library of Department, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, line 6, to increase the appropriation for official transportation, including purchase, keep, and shoeing of animals, etc., from $1,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 24, to increase the salary for reporter to the court of appeals, District of Columbia, from $1,000 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 124, line 5, to increase the total appropriation for the court of appeals, District of Columbia, from $25,720 to $26,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, line 22, after the word "incapacitated," to strike out "by age or otherwise for employment in" and insert "for performing;" and in line 24, after the word "roll," to strike out "or an honorable service roll;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service. The establishment of a civil pension roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the public service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service, is hereby prohibited.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 2 on page 127.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

Provided, That the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to clerks and employees in the several Executive Departments authorized by existing law shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to the amendment on page 21, line 13, and I wish to have the amendment agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, page 21, the committee amendment was to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Chief clerk, who shall also be superintendent of art department, $2,500.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me ask the Senator what that is for.

Mr. CULLOM. For the purpose of allowing the amendment to stand as the committee recommended in the first place.

Mr. ELKINS. At $2,500?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELKINS. What is it for?

Mr. TELLER. The chief clerk of the Library. He now receives $2,250.

Mr. ELKINS. And he is now to get what?

Mr. CULLOM. The purpose of the committee is to raise it to $2,500.

Mr. ELKINS. Why should he get $2,500 and the others get but $2,250?

Mr. CULLOM. Many of the chief clerks get more than $2,200 now, but the private secretaries to Cabinet officers get only $2,250.

Mr. ELKINS. Do you propose to give the chief clerk of the Library more compensation than you give the secretary of a Cabinet officer?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; more than the private secretary of any Cabinet officer, but not more than other chief clerks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I am concerned, I believe I have concluded the offering of amendments.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to call up an amendment which I have heretofore proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 11, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $4,500.

Mr. TELLER. What is that for?

Mr. ELKINS. This is a proposition to give the two Assistant Secretaries of State as much as the other Assistant Secretaries receive. For instance, the Assistant Secretary of War receives $4,500. The three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury receive $4,500 in this same bill, and I do not see why there should be any distinction made as against the State Department. The ability required to be an Assistant Secretary of State is quite as great as that required of any Assistant Secretary in any other Department, and it seems to me to be a discrimination and an injustice. No doubt the committee has overlooked this discrimination. It was not in their minds, I hope.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I have a right to make a point of order upon the amendment, but aside from that, the increase is not estimated for in the Book of Estimates at all or in any other way. I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be voted down.

Mr. ELKINS. What does the Senator say?

Mr. CULLOM. I said, in the first place, that I think the amendment is subject to a point of order, and in the second place, it is not estimated for by the Department at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Illinois does not make the point of order?

Mr. CULLOM. Well, I will make it if the Senator insists upon a vote.

Mr. ELKINS. Because it is not estimated for?

Mr. CULLOM. Because it is not estimated for. We increased this salary last year $500.

Mr. ELKINS. If I understand the Senator in charge of the bill, several items have been increased here, and they were without any recommendation.

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. ELKINS. I think that is true of the one last referred to.

Mr. CULLOM. The case the Senator refers to, having relation to the law officer of the State Department, came up in the estimates for the Attorney-General's Office or the Department of Justice. It is estimated for.

Mr. ELKINS. You raised the salary of the chief clerk of the Library $500.

Mr. CULLOM. That was estimated for by the Librarian himself, who is now deceased.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] make the point of order?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ELKINS. I submit another amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 14, strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Private secretary to the Secretary, $2,400.

Mr. CULLOM. This refers to the private secretary to the Secretary of State, and the committee and the Senate have had a good deal of trouble with that class of officers, for the reason that some of them draw twenty-four hundred dollars a year, some of them two thousand, and some of them twenty-two hundred and fifty. After the committee had raised some of them to two thousand two hundred and fifty, others insisted that they should have twenty-four hundred dollars. We recognized the inequality of the situation, and the result is that under this bill—I do not know but that we got them all to the same figure last year—we put them all at twenty-two hundred and fifty, so that each private secretary of a Cabinet officer will get that amount—no more and no less.

This amendment would destroy that equality. The situation as it is gets rid of the inequality and restores equality among that class of secretaries. If we begin to amend again, unless we put them all up or all down, the same inequality will prevail. I hope the Senator will not undertake to do it.

Mr. ELKINS. In reply to the Senator having in charge this bill, I would state that the proposed compensation seems to be just and fair. The work of a private secretary is laborious. It requires talent and ability to perform the duties of his office. He is not limited to hours. He may be called on to work till midnight. He does not go to the Department at the time prescribed for the other employees. He goes before that hour and stays later. I think these private secretaries, in view of the work and duties and responsibilities laid upon them, ought to have $2,400.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been only a few years since Cabinet officers had any private secretaries at all. They generally did the work themselves.

Mr. ELKINS. That is not against the private secretaries.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all. I know every one of these private secretaries. They are very clever and very competent, and I am sorry I can not give them what they want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Clerk to the Secretary, $2,400.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the same kind of an amendment, and I hope it will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. On page 70, line 1, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as read:

Clerk to the Secretary, $2,400.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the same sort of an amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. On page 79, line 19, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Clerk to the Secretary, $2,400.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the same thing.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. On page 89, line 8, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,400.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. On page 109, line 22, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Private secretary, $2,400.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. On page 117, line 23, I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Private secretary to the Attorney-General, $2,400.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 88, line 1.

The SECRETARY. After the word "two," on page 88, line 1, it is proposed to insert "one clerk of class 1."

Mr. CULLOM. The purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire is to increase the number of clerks?

Mr. CHANDLER. To increase by one the number of clerks in the Bureau of Yards and Docks. It has been estimated for and I know that the Bureau needs the additional force. It is strictly within the rule, I will say to the Senator. If he finds that it is not necessary he can strike it out in conference. It was estimated for, but on the whole did not receive the approval of the Committee on Appropriations. They probably did not know what I know, that the work of the Bureau has so increased that this clerk is absolutely necessary to the work of the Bureau.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing that the amendment shall be adopted, with the understanding that I shall, unless very good reasons are furnished to the committee, allow it to go out in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is another amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the total so as to read, "$10,380."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 125, after line 11, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

To defray the cost of the employment of auditors in the Court of Claims, to be disbursed under the direction of the court, $10,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. This amendment is reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee made an investigation into the subject and found that it is an important and necessary appropriation in order properly to expedite the work of the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. There is here somewhere a letter on that subject, but it is a little difficult to find it. I think, as a matter of fact, that the committee was somewhat in doubt whether the appropriation ought not to be made. Here is the letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

I am informed that an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill for the compensation of auditors in the Court of Claims has been referred to your committee, and I take this opportunity to urge upon you the importance of making provision for the purposes set forth in the bill providing for the appointment of these officers, originally referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Within a short time the Secretary of the Navy has referred to the Court of Claims for investigation all claims of the United States Navy for bounty earned during the recent war with Spain. It is altogether probable that this investigation alone will consume the attention of the auditors for that court, for whom provision has been asked, as above referred to, for the coming year. In addition to these matters, the Auditor for the War Department has in contemplation the reference of the claims of about twenty or more States for reimbursement for expenditures incurred in providing for and equipping the soldiers of the Government during the civil war. Two of these claims have already been thus referred and the others will soon follow.

I am informed that the services of at least one auditor or commissioner of the court will be wholly required for at least the coming year to attend to these matters. It seems to me, therefore, that it is quite imperative that provision be made for the employment and compensation of these auditors, as now asked for, and that it be done at this session of Congress, in order that their appointment may be made and their services be availed of without delay.

Very respectfully, JOHN W. GRIGGS,
Attorney-General.

Mr. GORMAN. How many auditors does he want?

Mr. CULLOM. This letter does not seem to indicate that the court wants more than one.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that it is to be given to one person. The court will appoint different auditors in different cases, according to the discretion of the court, and the court will fix their fees.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that if anything is allowed, we ought not to appropriate over $5,000 on that vague sort of recommendation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear from the Committee on the Judiciary on that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not call it vague.

Mr. CULLOM. It is rather indefinite.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it is very definite. If you put in five thousand, then the committee of conference will give away half of it, and if five thousand is required I think $10,000 should go in now. I would rather the dividing process should take place at a later stage of the proceeding.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee does not want to give away anything that it is sure the Government wants or needs. I am willing, so far as I am concerned——

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear from the Committee on the Judiciary on that subject. The amendment purports to be reported from that committee. I should like to hear their reasons for it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the amendment was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and it seems to me that every Senator on examination will see the propriety of it, and that $10,000 is a very moderate amount. I expected myself, and I now expect, that it will turn out to be insufficient. We have loaded onto the Court of Claims every sort of jurisdiction. We have put upon them matters that are not ordinarily put on judicial tribunals, and it will be absolutely impossible for the judges to do the duty of that court—in the matter of Indian depredations and the thousand other matters that have gone in there—unless they may have the relief of having the right to employ auditors on matters involving the examination of accounts, and containing a great number of items. That, so far as I know, is a power which is given in nearly all the States, not only to the judges of their principal courts, but to the judges of their inferior courts. In my own State it has been so for years, and it is true now in the United States courts.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think I perhaps ought to yield and accept the amendment——

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say to the Senator from Illinois, with all due respect to him, that somebody else wants to hear a satisfactory reason why the amendment should go in. I insist upon hearing it, because I am very doubtful of the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It is a waste to have the duties of a mere accountant performed by a judge at a salary of four or five thousand dollars, who ought to be dealing with great public questions. It is a waste of time; and no court, unless the jurisdiction is not enough to take up half the time of the judges, can get along without such aid.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that these commissioners or auditors are appointed by the court for specific cases?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not an annual employment?

Mr. HOAR. It is not an annual employment. They are required for a specific case, just like a master in chancery or a referee or any similar function.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all I wanted to know. I wanted to know how they are appointed and what they do.

Mr. HOAR. In a question where the solvency or insolvency of a single merchant might come up in the course of judicial proceedings, or a single bank, it might take three months of a bookkeeper's time to have those accounts properly stated and ready for the attention of the court and questions of law eliminated and stated out of the mere account. As the Court of Claims is at present situated, the judges have to do that themselves, and the result is that it will inevitably bring the business of that court, now getting into great arrears, into very much greater arrears. We have made some very large additions to the jurisdiction of the court within a few months.

Mr. GORMAN. There may be some good reason why an auditor for the Court of Claims should be provided for, but I suggest to the Senator who offers the amendment that, if there is any pressing necessity for the amendment—and I am not yet aware of it—an appropriation ought to be made for one or two auditors at a specific salary. In every other case connected with this court we provide, as the Senator will see by looking at the bill, for the salary of judges and all other officers of the court. I do not care to make a point of order if the committee think there is a necessity for the amendment, but ought there not to be a specific salary fixed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me suggest to the Senator from Maryland that we have not provided for any permanent auditors for that court. There are none by law.

Mr. GORMAN. I know there are not.

Mr. COCKRELL. If you appoint a permanent one, you will never get rid of him. This is simply the appointment by the court of a man to make an accounting in certain cases and to pay him for it. As a matter of course, it appoints lawyers and accountants, depending upon the character of the work to be done; and it would be safer in the way of economy to let it go in this way than to fix a salary.

Mr. HOAR. I will make one suggestion to the Senator from Maryland, which, I think, will be decisive to his mind, unless he suggests some answer to it that does not occur to me. The transaction that may be investigated may arise anywhere in the United States. Take, for instance, the Indian depredation claims, and some of the claims in regard to the cutting of timber. If you appoint an auditor or two auditors resident in the city of Washington, they might be called upon to travel to the State of Washington, or Alaska, or California, to investigate a single case; whereas if you appoint some competent attorney in the neighborhood he would do perhaps the whole work of the auditors in three or four days. I think a great deal is due to the uniform judicial experience in this country. I am not aware that in any State or in any court there is a system of having a permanent auditor to whom cases are referred.

Then another consideration is that the transaction may be one which requires a particular kind of an expert, a water engineer, or a manufacturing engineer, or an expert in certain kinds of fabrics, or a mining engineer. Very likely there might be some important questions connected with the value and yield of mines, and it would be necessary to have selected from the neighborhood an expert with reference to the case.

Mr. GORMAN. This is the first time I have heard of it, and I gather from the reading of the letter of the Attorney-General that he bases this very mild and modest recommendation for this appropriation or some provision on the adjustment of claims growing out of the extra work because of the war with Spain.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Missouri to read the letter.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; read Judge Nott's letter.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is as follows:

COURT OF CLAIMS CHAMBERS,
Washington, January 27, 1899.

DEAR SIR: I am informed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate that the committee has reported an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill for the compensation of auditors in this court, which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Since the matter left the hands of the Judiciary Committee, a communication has been received from the Secretary of the Navy of which I think the Committee on Appropriations should be apprised.

The Secretary of the Navy has referred to the court for investigation what appears to be the whole naval part of the war with Spain. I inclose a copy of his communication.

More than fifteen hundred claimants have already appeared by attorneys. If the remainder of the officers and seamen come into court, there will be more than 5,000 claimants, so I am informed. This is doubtless a great convenience to the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney-General, having all the claims before one tribunal, to be disposed of, probably, at one time; but it will throw an immense amount of work upon the court. The claims will undoubtedly fall into classes, and the judicial part of the work will be of a general character, such as determining in fact and in law the status of a certain vessel, etc., but assigning individual claimants to their proper classes and making up findings of fact, which will be of practical assistance for the Navy Department, will involve an immense amount of work in detail, such as the calculation of individual claims in a general fund, which, so it now seems, it will be impossible for the judges to perform without assistance.

No additional appropriation than that recommended by the Judiciary Committee will be necessary.

Respectfully, etc.,

CHARLES C. NOTT.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state to the Senator from Maryland that the letter from the Attorney-General which I read was carried away by one of the reporters of the Senate, otherwise I would present it. It will be here in a moment.

Mr. GORMAN. The appropriations, of course, for the various Departments, including the Court of Claims, come here in the regular way. There was no estimate made for this appropriation, and no recommendation from the head of the Department other than these personal letters.

Mr. HOAR. It is recommended by the Attorney-General.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to say in answer to the Senator from Maryland, that I do not think Congress should be put into leading strings quite in that way. The committees have the right to originate amendments. If any Senator discovers a necessity of the public service and introduces an amendment to meet it, and refers the amendment to the committee, and the committee take the opinion of the head of the Department about it and it is then recommended, it ought to be just as free and open a matter of legislation as if it came through the machinery of regular appropriations made five or six months previous. If we do not exercise that privilege, we might as well enact the estimates when they come here in December and not trouble ourselves with any more attempts to legislate on these matters.

I agree with the rule of the Senate as it exists, that new appropriations and increased appropriations should not be made unless they are estimated for or unless they are recommended by a committee of this body. The Judiciary Committee of this body made a careful investigation and took the opinion of the Attorney-General and the opinion of the chief justice of the Court of Claims. Now, what more would the Senator have?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not pretend for a moment that it is not proper to make appropriations in this way, but they ought not to be made without understanding the fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not ask that. I say that the evidence is ample. I am not undertaking to crowd any Senator at all. But the Senator's proposition that we ought not to do it, unless it was estimated for last October and came in the regular way from the Treasury Department in December, is an attempt to limit legislation in a way in which I do not think he really wishes to have it limited.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not intend to say that it ought to be made in the regular estimates, for a special estimate can be made, as is done frequently when cases arise after the regular estimates have been made out; but what I did say, and what I repeat, is that until this moment I have never seen any evidence whatever that there was a necessity for this appropriation. In view of the fact that we have been warned by the gentlemen who are in charge of governmental affairs that we ought to use great economy, and for the reasons publicly stated, which I shall not quote at this time, I thought that in an appropriation even as small as $10,000 it was well enough to call the attention of the Senate to it.

I do not understand from reading again the letter of the Attorney-General that he considers this a very great emergency. It is true he says that the claims growing out of the war with Spain will require at least one auditor to adjust them during the next year. If the Judiciary Committee—the gentlemen responsible for the management of the judiciary of the Government—think it absolutely necessary, I will not make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move, on page 3, line 3, to strike out the word "four" and the words "and forty" and insert in place of the word "four" the word "six;" making it read "messenger, acting as assistant librarian, $1,600," instead of "$1,440."

Mr. CULLOM. While I have no feeling about the matter, I think that the salary asked for is not estimated for at all in the Book of Estimates, or anywhere else.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know whether it comes within the technical estimate, but it is recommended by the Librarian. It is for assistant librarian. One assistant librarian gets $1,800, and I propose to make the salary of this assistant $1,600. I think the Senator ought not to raise an objection to it.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not make any point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP. I offer an amendment. On page 65, line 5, I move to strike out the word "two," before the word "hundred," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "six;" so as to read:

Assay office at Boise, Idaho: For assayer, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; one clerk, $1,600.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is estimated for.

Mr. ALLISON. It is estimated for.

Mr. CULLOM. I can make no objection to it, so far as the committee is concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. On page 5, line 11, after the word "Mining," I move to insert "the Committee on Pacific Railroads."

Mr. CULLOM. I think I ought not to agree to that amendment. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not press it.

Mr. GEAR. I do not see any reason why the clerk of that committee should not get the same salary as the clerks of other committees.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not estimated for; and I think I must make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I do not think that any of these committee clerks are estimated for.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, they are estimated for, and the appropriation is made accordingly. I shall make the point of order on the amendment. I hope the Senator will not press it. I dislike to make the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair believes the point of order to be good, unless the amount was estimated for by the head of a Department.

Mr. GEAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, after line 24, insert:

To continue employment and pay of P. L. Coultry as acting assistant foreman of the folding room, from July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1900, inclusive, $1,400.

Mr. CULLOM. That is an amendment proposing to add to what the House itself has put into the bill, and it is not asked for by the House at this time.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that the House omitted to put it in.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know how that is, but it certainly was not presented to the committee.

Mr. GEAR. It was so stated to me.

Mr. CULLOM. We generally allow the House to take care of itself unless it comes to the Senate committee and asks the Senate to do something through its committee.

Mr. GEAR. I understand that it was an oversight on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think I can allow the amendment to go upon the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not press an amendment of this kind. We have had repeated controversies with the House over our right to regulate and control our own affairs. The Senate established that fact after a long controversy, and with the distinct understanding that we would in no manner interfere, directly or indirectly, in their affairs.

Mr. GEAR. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, that I understand it was an oversight on the part of the House; that the gentleman who had the matter in charge failed to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Then the House committee ought to have presented it to the Senate committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have made but one rule, and I insist that we shall not deviate from that rule. The committee that make up the bill in the House and report it and have it passed must come and say that they want such a provision put in, and we have gone so far as to require that it shall be done in writing. Now, if we take the statement of a member of the House or of half a dozen members of the House and put something in the bill, we are gone; we have broken every anchor that holds us in a strong position.

Mr. GEAR. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, that I understand the committee of the House are willing to accept this amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee has not called upon any member of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in regard to it that I am aware of.

Mr. COCKRELL. They know perfectly well in the House exactly what we require. We have had this controversy with them. We know exactly and they all know what is required, and it is not right or fair or just that they should come and ask Senators to put upon these bills amendments of this character. They know perfectly well that if they can get the Appropriations Committee to come over here and ask our Appropriations Committee to put it in we will put it in, and then we will say to the conferees, "We did it at the request of the committee; take it out if you want to do it, or do with it just as you choose;" but we can not put in a provision of this kind on our own motion.

Mr. GEAR. I understand that the gentleman in charge failed to offer it in the House, but that the House committee will accept it in conference. It is of no personal concern to me whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate of the present Congress will soon pass out, and if you want to set that precedent and get up that row I simply give notice as to what will be the result of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment on page 107. In lines 9 and 10 I move to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of Nevada, $2,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that estimated for?

Mr. STEWART. That makes the salary the same as that of all the others.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it estimated for, I ask the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I think so.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is mistaken. There is no estimate for it, and the claim is that there are two other officers.

Mr. COCKRELL. In three other States?

Mr. CULLOM. In three States where they receive only $1,800 a year salary.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know of any other.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; both Louisiana and Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. And Florida.

Mr. CULLOM. And Florida in addition, I believe. So I must make the point of order on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made upon the amendment, and it is sustained.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, if there are no further amendments, I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to delay the passage of this bill. I want to hasten it as much as I can. It may not be strictly germane to the bill itself at this time, but I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois or any other Senator belonging to the Committee on Appropriations in what order the other appropriation bills will be presented to the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. I desire, as soon as this bill is out of the way, to call up the Agricultural appropriation bill and let it be taken up for consideration, but I do not desire that it shall be considered to-night.

Mr. ALLEN. I will put my question a little more direct, a little more pointed. Is there any purpose to bring up the Army bill for consideration before the other appropriation bills have been passed on?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that the Army bill has passed the House as yet.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, it passed the House and has been in the Committee on Military Affairs for two weeks.

Mr. CULLOM. Well, it has not been reported here.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, it is in the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I understood the Senator to refer to the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. It is rumored in the Chamber this afternoon that there is a purpose of bringing up the Army bill on Monday or Tuesday. Anticipating that the discussion on that bill will run to the end of the session, and that the other appropriation bills will be suffered to go over as a pretext for an extra session of Congress, I should like to know from the Senator from Illinois, or from any other Senator, if there is any intention of that kind?

Mr. CULLOM. I know very little about the Army bill or the Army appropriation bill. So far as I am concerned, I desire very much to proceed with the Agricultural appropriation bill on Monday and to continue its discussion and consideration until it is disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it the intention of the committee to present all these bills before the Army bill is brought up for discussion?

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the Military Academy bill is now ready to be considered, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] who is in charge of it will ask for its consideration immediately after the Agricultural appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. How many appropriation bills are yet remaining?

Mr. CHANDLER. What does the Senator mean by the Army bill, may I ask?

Mr. ALLEN. I mean the reorganization bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. That bill is not in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. The Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with that bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It has not been reported from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has not.

Mr. ALLEN. But there is such an intermingling and commingling of purposes on the other side of the Chamber that I do not know exactly who is responsible for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be glad myself to intermingle and commingle all the bills, so that the Senator from Nebraska could speak on all at once, instead of speaking on each separately.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to lengthen my remarks, and therefore will cut them in two and fit them to each bill as it comes up.

Mr. CHANDLER. It would be better if the Senator could speak on the Army bill and on all the appropriation bills at the same time.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I think not.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the Committee on Appropriations has no power to report the Army bill, as it is before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood that the Committee on Appropriations was to give way for the Army bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand it, purpose to go on with the appropriation bills as rapidly as possible. They have been considerably impeded of late, as Senators very well know, by commingling, or omitting to commingle, in a way that has not been quite satisfactory, but we hope to proceed in a better way next week.

The first bill, as the Senator from Illinois has stated, will be the Agricultural appropriation bill. That is on the Calendar. The West Point Military Academy bill is on the Calendar, and we hope to have the Post-Office appropriation bill on the Calendar early next week, and to take it up as soon as possible.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will recognize the fact that the discussion on this bill and other appropriation bills indulged in by Senators, including myself, has thrown great light upon the duty of that committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite sure of that; and I was not criticising the Senator at all, because for myself I always feel interested in what he says; and when he has occasion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations, which he is extremely fond of doing, it is always gratifying to the committee. Therefore I find no fault with the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I feel that the Committee on Appropriations could not discharge its duty fully and completely without some slight aid from me from time to time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the changes made necessary by amendments in various clauses will be made in the footings by the Secretary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to allow the Agricultural appropriation bill to be now taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have that done without interfering with the unfinished business?

Mr. CULLOM. I want the unfinished business to be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11266) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900? The Chair hears none, and lays the bill before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], who desires the consideration of a bill which he has in charge.

KANSAS, OKLAHOMA CENTRAL AND SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 11098, which has been passed by the House of Representatives and reported favorably without amendment by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was going to ask to have that bill considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11098) to extend and amend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes," approved December 21, 1893, and also to extend and amend the provisions of a supplemental act approved February 15, 1897, entitled "An act to extend and amend an act entitled 'An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.'"

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROADWAY ACROSS ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11358) for a roadway in the District of Columbia from Brightwood avenue across Rock Creek Park.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

STATE EXPENSES FOR VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 5260, which was left over from yesterday morning.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill has been read the second time in full, and there are several amendments which have been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, line 1, page 2, after the word "claims," to insert the words "of States and;" in line 4, after the date "1898," to strike out "Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for expenses incurred after August 12, 1898: And;" and in line 7, page 2, before the word "That," to strike out "further;" so as to make the section read:

That the act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, be so amended that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and is hereby, authorized to allow, in the settlement of the claims of States and of the governors of States and Territories for reimbursement under the provisions of the said act, expenses incurred after as well as before July 8, 1898: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for service of members of the National Guard or organized militia of any State or Territory who were not accepted into the Volunteer Army of the United States as of the same grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 13, after the word "Territory," to insert "or the State or Territory;" in line 24, after the word "faith," to strike out "volunteer for service" and insert "present himself for enrollment;" and in line 1, on page 3, after the words "United States," to insert:

And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply also to individual volunteers who presented themselves in good faith for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That under the appropriation made by said act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to reimburse the governor of any State or Territory, or the State or Territory, for reasonable expenses incurred by him in the actual transportation of the members of organized militia or National Guard of his State from the place of company, battalion, or regimental rendezvous to the State rendezvous or place designated for examination and acceptance of the members of such organization into the Volunteer Army of the United States, and the actual transportation from the State rendezvous to their respective company, battalion, or regimental rendezvous of such men as were rejected for lack of physical qualifications: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for the transportation of any man who did not in good faith present himself for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply also to individual volunteers who presented themselves in good faith for enrollment in the Volunteer Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 3, line 7, after the words "reimbursement of," to insert "any State or;" and in line 13, before the word "accepted," to strike out "be" and insert "have been;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That nothing in said act of July 8, 1898, shall be so construed as to prohibit the reimbursement of any State or the governor of any State or Territory for reasonable expenses incurred in the subsistence of the members of any organization of the organized militia or National Guard of his State or Territory after having been called out by the governor on or after April 25, 1898: Provided, That such organization shall afterwards have been accepted into the Volunteer Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 4. That the expenses incurred by States or the governors of States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed and paid to them, notwithstanding any unsettled accounts, claims, or indebtedness of the United States against their States, and without prejudice to such unsettled accounts: And provided further, That where an officer of the Army detailed as mustering officer for volunteers, purchased equipment necessary for the comfort of the men in camp or rendezvous, and said equipment was subsequently taken into the United States service by said volunteers and no receipts given to such military officer, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the settlement of such accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the just and proper account or claim of any railroad, transportation company, or person who has at the request of the Quartermaster-General of the Army or his agents, or at the request of any United States mustering officer or other officer authorized by the Secretary of War to enroll, muster, or mobilize volunteers for the war with Spain, for transportation of men or troops from place of enrollment to point of rendezvous, and also to pay such just and proper accounts as may be presented for transportation back from point of rendezvous to place of enrollment of men who volunteered in good faith and were rejected on account of disqualification as found by medical officers duly appointed by the War Department: Provided, That the amount allowed and paid for such transportation shall not be in excess of the rates charged for transporting troops of the United States under like circumstances.

All claims under the provision of this act must be filed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, and must be supported by proper vouchers or other conclusive evidence of interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [4] 6, line 4, after the word "before," to strike out "July" and insert "January," and in the same line, after the word "first," to strike out "eighteen hundred and ninety-nine" and insert "nineteen hundred;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. [4] 6. That all claims for reimbursement under this act or the act of July 8, 1898, shall be presented in itemized form to the Treasury Department on or before January 1, 1900, or be forever barred.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I move to amend by adding to section 4 what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by inserting after the word "accounts," at the end of section 4, line 3, page 4, the following:

And where the commander of a company or companies or troop or troops has purchased supplies necessary for the comfort or subsistence of the men in camp or rendezvous between the date of enrollment under the call of the President and the mustering in of the company or troop, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the payment of such accounts to the parties entitled.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a very crude amendment. It refers only to companies or troops; and I suggest that regiments should also be included.

Mr. CHILTON. I only drew the amendment to suit the case in my own State. Where the words "company or troop" are used, as the Senator suggests, there might be inserted the word "regiment."

Mr. ALLISON. Let the word "or" before the word "troop" be stricken out, and the words "or regiment" inserted after "troop" in both places where the word occurs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer an amendment to appear at the end of section 1.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. I desire to inquire if there is anything in the amendment of the Senator from Texas to indicate what shall be paid for?

Mr. CHILTON. The language is, "has purchased supplies necessary for the comfort or subsistence of the men in camp or rendezvous." I do not care about the language. I drew the amendment hurriedly in my seat, when I learned the bill would come up, to meet the case in my State, which is this: Between the time the companies were organized and the time when they were mustered into the service certain officers made bills with merchants, supposing they would be paid under the prior act of 1898. The Secretary of War sent a telegram to our governor, which was supposed to cover that kind of a case. On the strength of that telegram the merchants furnished the supplies, and since that time the War Department has held that they are not covered by that statute. This is intended to authorize the governor to certify to the amounts of the supplies bought of the merchants for the subsistence or comfort of the companies, and in that way secure the payment of the claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it not be better to have some limitation? We have a number of companies in Missouri in the same situation, where supplies were paid for. I have written to the Department about those accounts, and had one of them in my possession a few minutes ago. Would it not be better to say "necessary and suitable supplies," so that we should not have to pay for any and everything which might have been furnished?

Mr. CHILTON. I think the word "necessary," as used in the amendment, is really better than to put in the word "suitable." I do not think that word would help it any. I ask the Secretary to read again that particular language of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

And where the commander of a company or companies, or troop or troops, or regiment has purchased supplies necessary for the comfort or subsistence of the men in camp or rendezvous, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the certificate of the governor will cover the matter.

Mr. CHILTON. That is right; if we can not trust the governors of the States, I do not know whom we can trust.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think probably the language employed will answer the purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the amendment which I have offered may be read—to insert what I send to the desk at the end of section 1.

Mr. BACON. Has the amendment of the Senator from Texas been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I did not so understand. I wish to offer an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No formal vote was taken upon the amendment, and the Senator is entitled to offer an amendment to the amendment if he so desires.

Mr. BACON. I will state what the amendment which I propose is intended to meet, so that it may be understood. There were 10 regiments raised, known as immune regiments, United States Volunteers. The company officers secured men, and up to the time of their mustering in they paid the expenses of the men; in other words, they acted really as recruiting officers, and many of them went to an expense of several hundred dollars. They had to get men, keep them at hotels and boarding-houses, and pay their railroad expenses to the point of rendezvous. In other words, they incurred all the expenses that the Government would have incurred if the Government had been recruiting the men.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those were immunes?

Mr. BACON. Yes; those 10 regiments.

Mr. TILLMAN. The same thing happened in my State.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt it is true of all the 10 regiments. I have conferred with the War Department about the matter, and the officers there think that those expenses ought to be paid.

Mr. ALLISON. Those expenses will be paid by the War Department under proper regulations.

Mr. TILLMAN. On the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The governors of the States have nothing to do with it.

Mr. TILLMAN. And this relates solely to volunteers.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; it relates to the volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be provided for by separate legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. It should be placed on the Army appropriation bill, where it belongs.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree that proper provision should be made in the case stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but I understand this to be a bill relating especially to the State troops.

Mr. COCKRELL. Volunteers of the States.

Mr. ALLISON. Volunteer troops of the States.

Mr. BACON. I was about to say that I had conferred with the War Department in reference to this matter, and the officers there agreed with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that these expenses ought to be paid, as they were really expenses incurred by individuals which would have otherwise been incurred by the Government—the ordinary expenses that the Government meets when it attempts to recruit men for the regular regiment—but at the same time the expenses were created by the enlistment of the men. I do not desire, of course, to encumber this bill, as it relates purely to State volunteers.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state to him that the matter is already covered, and refer him to the language of section 4.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. That section provides:

That where an officer of the Army detailed as mustering officer for volunteers purchased equipment necessary for the comfort of the men in camp or rendezvous, and said equipment was subsequently taken into the United States service by said volunteers and no receipts given to such military officer, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the settlement of such accounts.

Mr. BACON. But that is not the case, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. That refers to equipment and rations.

Mr. BACON. These persons were not then officers. For instance, a regiment of immunes was to be organized and a certain number of citizens would be selected to be captains. They were told if they would raise companies they would be commissioned as captains. That agreement was carried out, and they would, out in the country, take a month, engage in the finding of men, and get their agreement to enter the company. They had to take care of the men in the meantime, a squad here and a squad yonder. Finally they were sent to the points of rendezvous, being kept in boarding houses in the meantime until the company was completed and mustered in.

I know the fact that probably in every instance there was an expense of somewhere from $200 to $400 to each one of these captains who raised companies, and they were expenses not of themselves, but expenses of the men whom they recruited, and whose support could not be turned over to the Government until they were enlisted.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the War Department suggest any remedy for that?

Mr. BACON. The officers at the War Department have said to me that they thought the class of officers to whom I have referred ought to be reimbursed, but there was no authority under the law by which it could be done; that they had no authority under the law to reimburse such expenses; and the suggestion has been made by the Department that there should be legislation for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. There should be some legislation; but there must be some power somewhere to review these accounts.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. But it seems to me that an entirely separate provision ought to be made in some other bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Army appropriation bill is the place for it.

Mr. ALLISON. A provision should be made separately for the immune regiments, and some officer of the Army should be designated to deal with these accounts.

Mr. CHILTON. The governors of States would have nothing to do with that.

Mr. BACON. I realize that; and under the suggestion of the Senator I will not offer my amendment now, but will simply ask that the matter be taken into consideration by the Appropriations Committee and attention given to it.

Mr. BATE. The Committee on Military Affairs, seeing the embarrassment in this case, framed a bill and sent it, with a communication, to the War Department. That Department sent an assistant adjutant-general to the committee, and with his assistance a bill was framed for the purpose of covering these cases. That bill was in the hands of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. I will say regarding this section of the bill that it was one which was sent from the committee to the War Department and to the Treasury to meet exactly such a case as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] describes. For instance, a captain who was raising troops for a company of the Second Volunteer Cavalry, which is exactly on the same basis as the immunes, presented a bill for meals at the hotel that he had paid. That was sent down, and the way they propose to cover it and the language in which they put it is embraced in section 4. If they have not covered it, it is not the fault of the Committee on Military Affairs in reporting the bill.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. WARREN. They stated that it was difficult to legislate so as to approach that directly and not let in accounts that would not be properly certified. They were willing to pay an account sent up from the mustering officer to the governor and by him certified, wherever the troops were. There seemed to be but one way of obtaining the authority.

Section 4 reads:

That the expenses incurred by the governors of States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed and paid to them, notwithstanding any unsettled accounts, claims, or indebtedness of the United States against their States, and without prejudice to such unsettled accounts: And provided further, That where an officer of the Army detailed as mustering officer for volunteers—

The mustering officer, of course, was not an officer of the State or an officer of the State militia in any way.

Mr. BACON. Go on and read that.

Mr. TILLMAN. You will see also that he was not an officer at all, but he was trying to get to be an officer. I know one instance in Charleston in which a young man——

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no provision in this bill to cover that.

Mr. TILLMAN. He was organizing a company for one of the immune regiments, white men, and he spent several hundred dollars and then carried his company to Macon at his own expense. He never could get them mustered in or received, and he could not get a cent of compensation under this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Having appealed to the Department to cover just such a case as this, having sent a case of that kind down, we are without any language or authority from them to correct the bill. I submit that it is best, then, to pass this bill as it is, and then undertake to cover that in some other way, upon an appropriation bill or otherwise, or else that some Senator present offer an amendment such as will cover the fault complained of and place it in this bill now. I want to cover all the points necessary to reimburse all parties who paid out money.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me suggest an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not open up the door that wide. The question of paying for recruiting service is a very broad one. There were no less than from five to ten million dollars of claims during the late war by persons who claimed to have organized troops, and they have been presenting them ever since the close of the war. The Government has persistently refused to pay them. It is an entirely different service from the service provided for in this bill. This bill provides for the expenditures made by the States or individuals in the States, and it ought to be kept entirely separate from the other question.

Mr. BACON. I was going to make the same suggestion. In view of what has been said, and as the chairman of the committee thinks that the amendment could be adopted at any time, that it could as well be put upon the Army bill as any other, I would myself withdraw any proposition to amend this bill, hoping in the meantime that we may provide some amendment which will meet with the approval of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that in cases where the recruiting officers recruited men and paid them during the organization of the company or regiment, the Government should pay it, but I think it should only apply to people who were afterwards mustered into the regiments. It seems to me that we can carefully guard it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, wherever they came for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have always done that. When the war began there was $50,000,000 appropriated for the express purpose of paying off those men, and I think there is an appropriation already. I can not point it out just now, but I think the War Department has jurisdiction of that matter.

Mr. ALLISON. In the war of the rebellion all that class of expenditures was made generally in the form of reimbursement to the States, because the company officers were usually recruiting under commissions from the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. But this is a case where it was going on directly under the Government of the United States, and they ought to be familiar with every detail.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, there is an embarrassment in that matter which no one has seemed to touch on, that there are a great many of these men who were recruited, but were not mustered in. They came there in cold weather. Take my own town, for instance. The United States officer, a captain, who was there mustering in saw the necessity, and he sent them a lot of blankets. They were appropriated, and he never took the receipt. The law is exact and requires that the individual shall give the receipt. Now they have stopped the pay of this gentleman, as I understand it, for the purpose of meeting some $4,000, or something like that. This bill in the hands of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is intended to remedy that, if possible.

Mr. PASCO. I think the difficulty complained of by the Senator from Tennessee is covered in part by this language in the fourth section:

And provided further, That where an officer of the Army, detailed as mustering officer for volunteers, purchased equipment necessary for the comfort of the men in camp or rendezvous, and said equipment was subsequently taken into the United States service by said volunteers and no receipts given to such military officer, the certificate to that effect of the governor of the State or Territory to which the volunteers belonged shall be held sufficient to authorize the settlement of such accounts.

I think that will cover the larger part of it.

Mr. BATE. That was intended to cover it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. CHILTON. Has my amendment been acted upon?

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment of the Senator from Texas has been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina? Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first section it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That compensation, at the rate paid to officers and soldiers in the Regular Army, shall be allowed to the States and governors of States as pay to such volunteers and Naval Reserves as appeared at the place of muster and were afterwards received into the service, for the period between the date of assembly at the rendezvous and the date on which they were mustered in.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state for the information of the Senate——

Mr. ELKINS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the amendment again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to insert "appeared and remained." The words "and remained" should go in.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course; if they did not remain, we do not want them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it only applies to those who remained there and were mustered in.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Lest there may be some doubt in the minds of the officers of the War Department, whom I find exceedingly particular, I want the Senate to give its own idea by its vote on this bill as to its meaning. The State of South Carolina has bonds in the Treasury Department purchased in 1857 as Indian trust funds. Those bonds are there as obligations by South Carolina, along with six or seven other Southern States—Virginia, Florida, Alabama, I think, etc.—and when we came to present our account we were met by the act of 1878, I think, or some act which prohibits a State from being paid any money until these Indian trust funds or this claim of the United States against the States on account of money owing the United States by the States for the trust fund had been settled. Therefore the claim of our governor for reimbursement was disallowed—every dollar of it. Section 4 says:

That the expenses incurred by the governors of States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed and paid to them, notwithstanding any unsettled accounts, claims, or indebtedness of the United States against their States, and without prejudice to such unsettled accounts.

I presume that language is put in there to meet the very case of an offset.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that it?

Mr. PASCO. That was the purpose.

Mr. WARREN. That was the intention of the Military Affairs Committee fully in considering the question, and I presume it is the intention of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It certainly meets the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do the words "incurred by the governors"——

Mr. PASCO. That is the language of the original bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know, but under the original bill we were told simply "we can not pay you, because there is a law forbidding it."

Mr. PASCO. This is to prevent that very thing. If the word "accounts" is not sufficient——

Mr. TILLMAN. In our case this condition arose. Our legislature had adjourned in January before the war opened, and it did not meet until last January. The governor had no funds at his disposal with which to meet these expenses. He telegraphed the Secretary of War, "What am I to do for means to subsist these people and bring them together, and furnish them something to eat, etc., until you can muster them in?" The answer was, "Incur the obligations or purchase all that is necessary and we will pay you." He has not paid those accounts, because he did not have the money, but he obligated his word of honor, based upon the promise of the Secretary of War, that the accounts should be paid.

Now, does the word "incurred" include those accounts which have not been paid by the governors as well as those which have been paid by the governors who had funds at their disposal?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think this covers the whole case. It is intended to prevent the United States from presenting any claim it may have against any State in this Union as an offset to the claims under this bill. That is the intention.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does it intend also to allow payment for every account that a governor has paid and every account which has not been paid, but which he has certified to as just?

Mr. WARREN. I think that is the intention.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that is the intention of the proposed law, and you so intend, the Comptroller of the Treasury will not tell me again that the law will not permit him to pay it.

Mr. BATE. In some of the States, as in my own, in the case of these bonds, we claim that the Government of the United States is indebted to us as a State for having taken possession of the railroad, etc., during the war. There is a bill in this Congress upon that very question, and some of the States stand in that way. We think the Government is in debt to us largely. We certainly ought not to be estopped because of that. It is in litigation. Therefore this is all right, I think.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Oregon and I have been patiently waiting here to pass two little bills before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to yield to both Senators, but I am constrained, in view of the fact of there being very few Senators here, and it was generally understood that we should adjourn when these two matters were disposed of—indeed, I made a promise privately, not publicly, that I should make this motion——

Mr. CHANDLER. That illustrates the danger of making these agreements.

Mr. ALLISON. No; not an agreement. It was a promise that I would make this motion. I have redeemed my promise.

Mr. CHANDLER. The arrangement should have been stated to the Senator from Oregon and myself.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very sorry I can not yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 13, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 11, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a conference report.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

THADDEUS M. MAHON,
THEOBOLD OTJEN,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY M. TELLER,
WM. M. STEWART,
S. PASCO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist on its disagreeing votes and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the same conferees—Mr. MAHON, Mr. OTJEN, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 1964, and move that the House adhere to its amendments and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the House further insist on its amendments to the Senate bill and agree to a conference on the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1964) for the erection of a public building for the use of a custom-house and post-office at Newport News, in the district of Newport News, Va.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the House further insist on its amendments and agree to a conference.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let us have the amendments reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "elevator."
Page 1, line 12, strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, is that a privileged question? If it is not, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order.

The question was taken; and the House insisted upon its amendments and agreed to the conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. MERCER, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HICKS, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD.

RIGHTS OF WAY BY RAILROAD COMPANIES THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ETC.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11868) to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me a moment just at this point, is this the general right-of-way bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that fact should be stated, so that the House may give some attention to the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11868) to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a right of way through any Indian reservation in any State or Territory, or through any lands held by an Indian tribe or nation in Indian Territory, or through any lands reserved for an Indian agency or for other purposes in connection with the Indian service, or through any lands which have been alloted in severalty to any individual Indian under any law or treaty, but which have not been conveyed to the allottee with full power of alienation, is hereby granted to any railroad company organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, which shall comply with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be prescribed thereunder: Provided, That no right of way shall be granted under this act until the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the company applying has made said application in good faith and with intent to construct said road.

SEC. 2. That such right of way shall not exceed 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of the road, except where there are heavy cuts and fills, when it shall not exceed 100 feet in width on each side of the road, and may include ground adjacent thereto for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, not to exceed 100 feet in width by a length of 2,000 feet, and not more than one station to be located within any one continuous length of 10 miles of road.

SEC. 3. That the line of route of said road may be surveyed and located through and across any of said lands at any time, upon permission therefor being obtained from the Secretary of the Interior; but before the grant of such right of way shall become effective a map of the survey of the line or route of said road must be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the company must make payment to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the tribe or nation or individual Indian, as the case may be, of full compensation for such right of way, including all damage to improvements and adjacent lands, which compensation shall be determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in such manner as he may prescribe.

SEC. 4. That should any such company fail to construct and put in operation any portion of its road within three years after the approval of its map of location by the Secretary of the Interior, the right of way hereby granted shall be deemed forfeited and abandoned ipso facto as to that portion of the road not then constructed and in operation: Provided, That the Secretary may, when he deems proper, extend the time for the construction of any road for which right of way has been granted.

SEC. 5. That where a railroad is constructed under the provisions of this act through the Indian Territory there shall be paid by the railroad company to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nation or tribe through whose lands the road may be located, such an annual charge as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, not less than $15 for each mile of road, the same to be paid so long as said land shall be owned and occupied by such nation or tribe, which payment shall be in addition to the compensation otherwise required herein. And within the Indian Territory upon any railroad constructed under the provisions of this act the rates and charges for passenger and freight service, if not otherwise prescribed by law, may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time, and the rate for carrying the United States mail may be fixed by Congress, and when not fixed by Congress may be fixed by the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of section 2 of the act of March 3, 1875, entitled

"An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," are hereby extended and made applicable to rights of way granted under this act and to railroad companies obtaining such rights of way.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations, not inconsistent herewith, for the proper execution and carrying into effect of all the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That Congress hereby reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act, or any portion thereof.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 3, in line 3, after the word "prescribed," add the following:

"Provided, That the compensation herein provided for must be paid for the benefit of the allottee or person in possession before construction is commenced through such allotment or possessory rights, and the other compensation shall be paid at such time for the whole line, or such part thereof, as the Secretary may provide."

On page 3, line 11, strike out the word "construction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "completion."

In line 12, page 3, after the word "granted," add the following: "and a part of which shall have been built."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report. It is very short. I hope there will be order while it is being read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11868) to provide for the acquirement of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, make the following favorable report:

When it is remembered that 38 bills have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs at this session of Congress granting rights of way in the Indian Territory alone, to say nothing of the number of bills which have been introduced granting rights of way over Indian reservations and Indian lands outside that Territory, the necessity for this bill is perfectly apparent. A great part of every meeting of the committee is taken in hearing parties interested in these measures, and unanimous consent is frequently asked for bills of this description on the floor of the House.

In addition to the above, all of the bills are referred to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, and the time of clerks in that office and in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is greatly encroached upon in the work of reporting upon the same, all of which will be done away with by the passage of this bill. We attach herewith, as a part of this report, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs asking for the passage of this bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 27, 1899.

SIRS: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a general bill for rights of way for railroads through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments. During the sessions of Congress no inconsiderable portion of the time of the Indian Bureau and of the Secretary of the Interior is taken up in the consideration of and in reporting upon special bills granting railroad rights of way through the Indian Territory, Indian reservations outside of that Territory, and through Indian allotments. These special bills attempt no uniformity in the substance of their provisions or in the manner of proceeding thereunder. It is believed that legislation of this character should be uniform, as in the case of rights of way for railroads over the public lands under the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 482), and as in the case of rights of way for canals and ditches through the public lands and reservations of the United States under section 18 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095, 1101).

The bill herewith inclosed is thought to be so framed as to fully preserve and protect the rights and interests of Indians and also to secure entire uniformity in the method of obtaining such rights of way and to save the time which, under existing conditions, must be given to each of the separate special bills. It is earnestly recommended that it receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.
C. N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

On page 3, in line 3, after the word "prescribed," add the following:

"Provided, That the compensation herein provided for must be paid for the benefit of the allottee or person in possession before construction is commenced through such allotment or possessory rights, and the other compensation shall be paid at such time for the whole line, or such part thereof as the Secretary may provide."

On page 3, line 11, strike out the word "construction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "completion."

In line 12, page 3, after the word "granted," add the following: "and a part of which shall have been built."

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object until after I hear the gentleman's explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves the right to object.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand this bill was prepared by the Department and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It was prepared by the Department and submitted to a subcommittee composed of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], and myself. We carefully went over it and recommended two or three amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it is very urgent that the bill be passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. If I heard aright, the bill allows a company chartered three years before entering upon the construction of the railroad.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The bill as prepared by the Department allowed five years, and we reduced it to three.

Mr. DOCKERY. What has been the time heretofore fixed in special bills?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. From three to five years. They generally required 50 miles to be built within one year.

Mr. DOCKERY. I also notice a provision that in the carrying the mails Congress shall have the right to fix the rate of compensation, and in the absence of exercising such right the Postmaster-General shall fix the rate. Is that correct?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That section was prepared by the Interior Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. The chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is present. I did not know of any special provision as to compensation for carrying the mails in Indian Territory. I thought the mails were carried by all railroads on the basis of weight, space, and distance.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I have no personal knowledge on the subject, but I suppose there is some provision.

Mr. LOUD. The law covers the whole country.

Mr. DOCKERY. It occurred to me that this provision was unusual.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There surely can be no harm in the provision. It is simply a matter of precaution.

Mr. LOUD. It may be a question of whether it does not by implication repeal the law and give him discretionary power to pay what he sees fit.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If the House thinks that way, I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. DOCKERY. My queries are for information. If the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is content with the provision, I shall not press an objection; but, as I have understood the law, railroad companies are now paid on a basis of the weight of the mail they carry, the space it occupies, and the distance they haul it. I supposed the law as to compensation would apply to the carrying of mails in the Territories just as in the States.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. One of the railroads running through the Indian Territory only charges 3 cents a mile in Kansas for passengers, but charges 5 cents a mile in the Indian Territory, and there may be something in the original charter in regard to the carrying of the mails. I have not looked that question up, as it has never come before our committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I simply call it to the attention of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads because it seems to fix different rates for carrying mails through the Territories from those fixed by the statute for the States, or at least there is a presumption that it does.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I think it was only put in the bill as a matter of precaution.

Mr. DOCKERY. What precaution?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. To prevent any extortion in case there were no such rules or regulations.

Mr. DOCKERY. Would not this provision enable the railroads to carry the mails at a different rate of compensation to that which other roads of the country are compelled to carry them?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who will read the provision.

Mr. LACEY. The provision, Mr. Speaker, is as follows:

And within the Indian Territory upon any railroad constructed under the provisions of this act the rates and charges for passenger and freight service, if not otherwise prescribed by law, may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time, and the rate for carrying the United States mail may be fixed by Congress, and when not fixed by Congress may be fixed by the Postmaster-General.

This was intended as a reserve power to prevent any extortion. Of course the Postmaster-General can fix the rate by contract, if a fair and reasonable one, but in case he does not, the reserved power would be held to fix the rates absolutely in the Department, or for Congress to do so. In view of the fact of this grant of that additional right and privilege, Congress has the reserved power that they have not attempted to exercise heretofore.

Mr. LOUD. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the language in the bill is ambiguous. You are evidently seeking to compel the railroad company to carry the mail, but the language can not be interpreted in that way. You do not say that they shall carry the mail, but you say the Postmaster-General or Congress may prescribe the rates. Under the general statute railroad companies are not compelled to carry the mails, but if they do, they must carry them at certain rates.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The companies must comply with the provisions of the act and the rules and regulations of the Departments.

Mr. McRAE. I would suggest that there might be a change of language so that the rates paid them should be the rates paid other railroads.

Mr. LOUD. I think the bill ought to prescribe that the railroads shall carry the mails, but it does not prescribe it at present.

Mr. DOCKERY. The language "fixed by Congress" is a little faulty, because Congress does not fix the rate; it is fixed by law. Any expression of the two Houses of Congress must have the approval of the President. I think the word "Congress" should be stricken out and the word "law" substituted.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman from Kansas think that at this late day we ought to compel railroad companies, where they are coming to Congress for cessions—to compel them under it to carry the mail?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I do.

Mr. LOUD. The bill as now drawn will evidently not accomplish that purpose, because the present statute would probably govern their carrying the mail.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. We can change the word "may" to "shall."

Mr. LOUD. I do not think you would accomplish it then. It ought to state specifically that the railroad companies shall be compelled to carry the mail.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the following amendment to meet the objection:

Strike out in line 12 the word "Congress" where it appears twice and insert the word "law" instead. Also add at the end of line 13, "and such railways shall be post routes, and the mails shall be carried by companies operating the same." I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, the bill was refused consideration yesterday, as alleged by the gentleman who made the objection, because the mortgages which might be placed on the road were recorded in the Interior Department. That was simply for one railroad. I understand this is for many railroads.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is a general right-of-way bill, but I want to say to the gentleman that for the Indian Territory there is no other place to file mortgages except with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLARDY. That was what was stated yesterday, and it did not satisfy the gentleman who made the objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I did not make the objection.

Mr. CLARDY. No; but that was the alleged objection. Where are the mortgages which shall be placed on the road provided for in this bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That will be provided for in the rules and regulations of the Department. There is but one place where they can be filed, and that is with the Secretary of the Interior, until a place is provided in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CLARDY. If that had been stated yesterday I think there would have been no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. LOUD. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] be considered separately.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

On page 3, in line 3, after the word "prescribed," add the following:

"Provided, That the compensation herein provided for must be paid for the benefit of the allottee or person in possession before construction is commenced through such allotment or possessory rights, and the other compensation shall be paid at such time for the whole line, or such part thereof, as the Secretary may provide."

On page 3, line 11, strike out the word "construction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "completion."

In line 12, page 3, after the word "granted," add the following: "and a part of which shall have been built."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments other than that offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk read the section as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

And within the Indian Territory upon any railroad constructed under the provisions of this act the rates and charges for passenger and freight service, if not otherwise prescribed by law, may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time, and the rate for carrying the United States mail may be fixed by law, and when not fixed by law may be fixed by the Postmaster-General; and such railways shall be post routes and the mails shall be carried by the company operating the same.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] that it reads a little awkwardly at present, because it is the understanding that they should carry mails under existing law. Would it not be well to provide in the bill that these companies shall carry the mails under such laws or regulations as may be hereafter enacted by Congress?

Mr. LACEY. I think the suggestion a good one. An amendment inserting at the proper point the words "under existing law" would, I think, meet the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. LOUD. I suppose we would have at any rate the right to repeal the law at any time.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "carried" insert the words "under existing law;" so as to read, "the mails shall be carried under existing law by the companies operating," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think the amendment is in correct form. I suggest that by unanimous consent the bill be allowed to go over until Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, and in the meantime the amendment can be perfected.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote on agreeing to the amendment will be considered as vacated, and the matter will go over, to be called up after the reading of the Journal on Monday morning.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The question then to be only on this amendment and the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 12086) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read twice, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I give notice that I propose to call up this bill as soon as the sundry civil bill is disposed of.

SUBPORT OF MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5186) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, A. D. 1880, by extending the privileges of the first section thereof to the subport of Miami, Fla.

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, A. D. 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the subport of Miami, in the State of Florida.

Mr. DAVIS. The object of this bill is fully explained in a very brief report of the Committee on Ways and Means, which I ask to have read.

The report (by Mr. PAYNE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5186) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes, approved June 10, A. D. 1880, by extending the privileges of the first section thereof to the subport of Miami, Fla., report the Senate bill back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill pass.

The object of this bill is to extend the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the subport of Miami, Fla. The first section of said act reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That when any merchandise, other than explosive articles, and articles in bulk not provided for in section 4 (1) of this act, imported at the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Portland, and Bath, in Maine, Chicago, Port Huron, Detroit, New Orleans, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Galveston, Pensacola, Fla., Cleveland, Toledo, and San Francisco shall appear by the invoice or bill of lading and manifest of the importing vessel to be consigned to and destined for either of the ports specified in the seventh section of this act, the collector at the port of arrival shall allow the said merchandise to be shipped immediately after the entry prescribed in section 2 of this act has been made."

The effect of the adoption of this bill would be to allow merchandise destined for other ports to be carried directly through Miami, as provided in the statute quoted above. This privilege has been extended to many other ports, and in this case is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The committee also recommend that House bill No. 11192, regarding the same subject-matter, lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS] that the House bill (H. R. 11192) corresponding in its provisions with this Senate bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

DAM AND BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11732) to authorize the Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct a dam and bridge across the Mississippi River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., its successors and assigns, to construct across the Mississippi River, at a point within the limits of the village of Grand Rapids, Minn., to be approved by the Secretary of War, a dam, canal, and works necessarily incident thereto, for water-power purposes, and a wagon and foot bridge if desired in connection therewith for the purpose of travel. Said dam shall be so constructed that there can at any time be constructed in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes: Provided, That the Government of the United States may at any time take possession of said dam and appurtenant works and control the same for purposes of navigation by paying the said company the actual cost of the same, but shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation: Provided further, That said dam shall be so constructed as to provide for the free passage of saw logs and fish. The said Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company, its successors and assigns, shall make such change and modification in said dam, canal, and works incident thereto, and said bridge, as the Secretary of War may from time to time deem necessary in the interests of navigation, at its own cost and expense: Provided further, That in case any litigation arises from the obstruction of the channel by said dam, canal, and works incident thereto, or such bridge, the case may be tried in the proper court of the United States in the district in which said works are situated.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void unless said dam herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "dam," in line 3, insert "and appurtenant works."

After the word "navigation," in line 8, page 2, insert the following:

"Provided also, That said dam shall be so constructed that it will not at any time raise the water surface, at a point 300 feet above said dam, to an elevation higher than the floor of the sluices of the reservoir dam built by the Government at Pokegama Falls on the Mississippi River, in section 13, township 55, range 26 west of the fourth principal meridian, Minnesota."

In lines 17 and 18 strike out the words "and fish. The said Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company" and insert "without tolls or charges; and the said company shall construct and maintain, at its own expense, suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commissioner; and the said company."

Mr. LOUD. Is this improvement to be constructed at a part of the river which is now navigable?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the extreme head of navigation on the Mississippi River.

Mr. LOUD. There seems to be a very dangerous implication in the provision that hereafter the Government may be at liberty to buy this dam if it should want to improve the river. It seems to me that if the Government should desire to improve the river these people, who may meanwhile have dammed up navigation, should at least be required to donate the dam to the United States, without compelling the Government to buy it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government has a dam about 600 feet above this. This dam, below that of the Government, will not interfere with any future navigation.

Mr. LOUD. I do not know anything about the river at the point contemplated. But it seems to me dangerous to even intimate in a bill of this kind that the Government should buy this dam after these parties have dammed up the river.

Mr. DOCKERY. What use would the Government have for this dam?

Mr. LOUD. It might be desirable to extend navigation, as will evidently be the case in a few years.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is another provision in the bill, if the gentleman will allow me to suggest, that ought to be changed in the interest of the Government. If the Government buys this dam, the bill provides that it shall "pay the cost" of it. There should be some provision to determine what that cost is.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am perfectly willing to strike out that provision.

Mr. DOCKERY. Because the cost of the dam may not be the actual cash value of it at the time of purchase, and if the Government should desire hereafter to make the purchase, it ought to be provided that the payment should be the actual cash value and not the actual cost.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it would meet the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the proviso entirely. Then hereafter if the Government wishes to purchase the dam it can do so under ordinary condemnation proceedings.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to striking out the provision to meet the point made by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. What use could the Government make of the dam?

Mr. FLETCHER. None whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. What use does the Government make of the dam above this one?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a reservoir dam.

Mr. FLETCHER. This dam is at the extreme head waters of navigation and it can be of no service to the Government.

I would sanction striking out that portion of the bill to which the gentleman from Missouri refers. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS], and he knows all about it. I will yield to him.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it proposed to strike out the proviso as to the purchase altogether? If not, I would like to amend, before unanimous consent is given, to provide that the Government in the event of its purchase of the dam shall be required to pay only the cash value.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no objection whatever to striking that out.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman make a motion to strike out the provision in question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will move that that provision relating to the purchase be stricken out altogether.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment proposed by Mr. FLETCHER was read.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Missouri that that provision was put into the bill, as it is put into all bills of this character, for the protection of the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. That may be. But some of the gentlemen around me on the floor, lawyers, have suggested—and notably the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]—that the interest of the Government would be better subserved by striking out the entire provision, and leaving the matter of purchase to be hereafter determined by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no objection to its going out of the bill, but I do not believe it is better to eliminate it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no information whatever in reference to the matter. What I sought to do was to simply strike out a provision which seems to require the Government to pay the cost, in the event of purchasing the dam, instead of what I think should be inserted if the provision remains at all in the bill, the actual cash value.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest that the amendment be simply to strike out the word "cost" and insert the words "actual cash value."

Mr. MORRIS. That, I think, would be better.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will withdraw my amendment, then, and accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOCKERY. It ought to read "not exceeding the actual cash value."

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me, there comes up another question, if his suggestion is adopted, as to what the word "value" may include. Does the word "value" include as an element the value of the franchise? It opens a very wide field.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest simply the words "cash value," which would seem to include everything.

Mr. MOODY. The value of a bridge, for instance, has been held to include the value of the franchise to use the bridge and collect tolls. I fear the amendment will take us "from the frying pan into the fire."

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts suggest an amendment to meet the difficulty?

Mr. LACEY. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these words be substituted, "the actual cash value not exceeding the cost."

Mr. MORRIS. I think I can suggest an amendment that will meet all the objections which have been urged. Let the proviso be made to read in this way:

Provided, That the Government of the United States may at any time take possession of the dam and control the same for purposes of navigation.

Then leave out all about paying the cost or anything of that kind, and go on as follows:

But shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

That leaves out all about paying for the dam, and simply provides that the Government may at any time take possession of it for purposes of navigation when it becomes necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is that suggestion acceptable to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MOODY. The suggestion eliminates the question of compensation altogether, and I have not followed sufficiently the general purposes of the bill to know whether it would leave it in a proper form.

My objection was that, if we were going to provide for a standard of valuation and payment, we ought to provide for it without including any element of franchise, the uncertainty of which we all know. If there is to be no payment, then the suggestion I make about excluding the franchise value falls to the ground.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it not answer every purpose if you were to eliminate entirely this provision, and then if the Government afterwards desires to take possession of that dam in the interest of navigation it could do so under the right of eminent domain and pay whatever the assessed value of the property was at the time of taking?

Mr. MOODY. Then I will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the fact that that would include the franchise value.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly it would.

Mr. MOODY. And it seems to me that if the Government is to authorize this company to construct a work upon a navigable river, and it seems possible that it may become desirable in the future that the Government should revoke that grant and should retake control of the stream for purposes of navigation, there really ought to be some provision in the bill that the Government should take possession of that work upon payment of a sum not exceeding the actual value of the physical construction. And while I am not ready with a suggestion which would cover this particular aspect of the question, I think it could be very readily done.

Mr. LOUD. Why should the Government pay for this dam? If they propose to make the river navigable, if John Smith has dammed it up, why should the Government pay for the dam?

Mr. MOODY. The suggestion of the gentleman from California is a very apt one. My position would be that the Government ought to have the right to retake control of the navigable stream, and if the Government is to pay anything for that, which is a question upon which I express no opinion, it ought not to pay anything further than the actual value of the dam as constructed.

Mr. LOUD. I will ask the gentleman, should it pay anything?

Mr. MOODY. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that if one pays only sudden attention to a question of this kind, he does not like to answer it offhand.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, well, the answer will appear only in the RECORD, and nobody will ever know what you said. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY. I understand that; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is doing me the honor to listen to me now, and I do not want to suffer any depreciation in his good opinion.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Illinois is judging your remarks by his own.

Mr. HOPKINS. I certainly do not judge them by those of the gentleman from California. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will kindly avoid conversation on the floor.

Mr. MORRIS. I should like to call the attention of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and my friend from California [Mr. LOUD] to the provisions of this bill, which have been drawn, as far as they could be drawn, for the protection of the Government, and are directly in the line of similar bills which have been passed heretofore in this House. Just before this provision to which exception is taken there is a provision that—

Said dam shall be so constructed that there can at any time be constructed in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes.

With that provision in, there is no danger that navigation will be obstructed if it shall hereafter be necessary to open the river for navigation. There is a provision for the construction of a lock, which will afford the facilities necessary to get by this dam. Now, if you add to that the further proviso that the Government of the United States may, at any time, take possession of said dam and control the same for purposes of navigation——

Mr. LOUD. If you will stop right there——

Mr. MORRIS. Wait a minute. But that it shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation, you have got the whole thing guarded.

Mr. LOUD. That would guard the interests of the Government, and the Government could take possession of the dam without paying anything, to such extent as the interests of navigation may require?

Mr. MORRIS. To such extent as the interests of navigation may require.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that he insert the words "without compensation therefor," so that there shall be no question about it.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. BROMWELL. No, I think not. It says, "take possession of it," but still leaves it open whether they shall have compensation.

Mr. MORRIS. Why, I accept the idea of the gentleman from Ohio, and ask that the amendment read this way; that the first proviso shall read as follows:

Provided, That the Government of the United States may at any time take possession of said dam without compensation and control the same for the purposes of navigation, but shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

In other words, at the end of line 3, after the word "dam," insert the words "without compensation therefor," and strike out the words, in lines 5 and 6, "by paying the said company the actual cost of the same." That will accomplish it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair understands all other proposed amendments are withdrawn. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 amend the first proviso so that it will read as follows:

"Provided, That the Government of the United States may at any time take possession of said dam without compensation and control the same for the purposes of navigation, but shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERSONAL REQUEST.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a personal request to the House. On yesterday I made some remarks upon one phase of the tariff law. Under the leave given yesterday I have permission to extend my remarks for five days. I find I shall have to be absent Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, leaving to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent that I may have until a week from to-day; and I state to the House that there will be no word in the extension except what relates to the particular subject-matter of my remarks.

Mr. CARMACK. Will you give bond for your good behavior?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PENSACOLA AND NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11736.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11736) granting the right and authority to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, to build one bridge over each of the following-named rivers in the State of Alabama, namely, the Alabama River, the Warrior River, the Sipsey River, and the Tennessee River, the said bridges to be used and operated for and in behalf of the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company to carry freight and passengers by rail and otherwise.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company, a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate one bridge over and across each of the following-named rivers, all in the State of Alabama: The Alabama River, at a point in Monroe and Clarke counties, or in Wilcox County, Ala.; the Warrior River, at a point in Hale and Greene counties, Ala., or at a point in Marengo and Greene counties, Ala.; the Tennessee River, at a point in the counties of Colbert and Lauderdale, Ala.; the Sipsey River, at a point in Pickens or Tuscaloosa County, Ala.; and to lay railroad tracks on the said bridges to run trains on same: Provided, That the said bridges shall be constructed and maintained in such a manner as not to obstruct navigation; and the plans for said bridges shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of War; and the said bridges over the said streams shall be built by the plans approved by the Secretary of War, evidenced by his written approval, of which written approval there shall be filed and recorded a certified copy in the office of the secretary of state of Alabama, and the original shall be filed and recorded in the office of the said railroad company; that the said bridges are to be used, operated, and maintained for and in behalf of the said Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company to carry freight and passengers, by rail and otherwise, at a reasonable price, not in conflict with the United States or State laws.

SEC. 2. That any part of this grant and act not carried out within five years from its passage will become subject to repeal.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 7, strike out the words "over and."

On page 2 strike out all after the word "same" and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That any bridges built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be lawful structures, and shall be recognized and known as post routes; and they shall enjoy the same rights and privileges as other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridges and their approaches for postal telegraph purposes.

"SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridges shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same and over the approaches thereto upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridges and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridges, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

"SEC. 4. That all bridges authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said rivers as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, maps of location and designs and drawings of each of the bridges; and until the said plans and locations are approved by the Secretary of War the bridges shall not be commenced or built; and should any changes be made in the plans of said bridges, or any one of them, during the progress of construction or after completion, such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and all changes in said bridges, or any one of them, required by the Secretary of War, at any time, or their entire removal, shall be made promptly by the corporations or persons owning or operating said bridges at their own expense.

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridges herein authorized is not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting the right and authority to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company to build bridges over certain rivers in the State of Alabama."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

OWNERS OF BRITISH SHIP FOSCOLIA.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10814) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the British steamship Foscolia, sunk by collision with the U. S. S. Columbia on the evening of May 23, 1898, near Fire Island light-ship, for and on account of the loss of said vessel and cargo, may be submitted to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and to render judgment thereupon: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: First, the said court shall find the facts attending the loss of the said steamship Foscolia and her cargo, and second, if it shall appear that the responsibility therefor rests with the U. S. S. Columbia, the court shall then ascertain and determine the amounts which should be paid to the owners, respectively, of the Foscolia and her cargo, in order to reimburse them for the losses so sustained, and shall render a decree accordingly: Provided further, That the amounts of the losses sustained by the master, officers, and crew of the Foscolia may be included in such decree.

SEC. 2. That should such decree be rendered in favor of the owners of the Foscolia and her cargo, the amount thereof may be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. LOUD. What is this, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STONE. One word. The report of the committee will explain the bill, which was prepared by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STONE. The bill was transmitted here with the recommendation that it receive the attention of Congress. The vessel Foscolia was run down by a United States vessel carrying no lights on account of anticipation of Cervera's fleet, and the bill is sent here with the recommendation that the whole matter be referred to a court of admiralty for consideration and action. The report of the committee embraces the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. YOST) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10814) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo, have considered the same, and respectfully recommend that the bill do pass, for the reasons set forth in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 26, 1899.

SIR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 10814) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo, and to your request of the 23d instant for report in regard thereto, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the Department's communication of the 11th idem, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, showing the facts regarding the loss of the Foscolia and the views entertained respecting the measure for the relief of her owners.

Very respectfully, JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES N. BRUMM,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 11, 1899.

SIR: In response to the committee's request, contained in its letter of the 9th instant, for the views and recommendation of the Department in regard to Senate bill 5000, for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo, I have the honor to state that on the 23th of May last, at 7.30 p. m., the U. S. S. Columbia, while engaged in patrol duty just outside the harbor of New York, and about 12 miles southerly and easterly from the Fire Island light-ship, came into collision with the British merchant steamer Foscolia. The Columbia was not seriously injured, but the Foscolia suffered much damage and sank nine hours after the collision. There was no loss of life, the officers and crew of the Foscolia being taken on board the Columbia and cared for and brought into port, but the Foscolia and her cargo were a total loss.

It appears from the finding of a naval board of inquiry, convened to investigate and report upon the circumstances attending the collision, that at the time it occurred and for an hour and a half previously a thick fog had prevailed; that the vessels were both running at reduced speed on account of the fog, that a proper lookout was kept on both vessels; that the Foscolia was exhibiting the usual lights and sounding the fog signal, but that the Columbia had all her lights screened and was sounding no fog signal. It also appears from the finding of the court that no fault is imputed to any of the officers or men on board the Columbia, and that aside from the screening of lights and discontinuance of the sounding of fog signals everything that could have been done by them to avoid the catastrophe and to minimize the consequences when it became inevitable was done. The testimony adduced shows that the lookouts on each vessel sighted the other at about the same time, the two vessels being about 100 yards apart, and that the Columbia was so maneuvered that a glancing blow only was received from the Foscolia, and doubtless little injury would have been caused either vessel but for the fact that the bow of the merchant steamer was caught upon one of the projecting after sponsons of the cruiser.

Upon careful consideration of the facts reported by the naval court of inquiry above mentioned, the Department is satisfied that there is at least reasonable ground for the contention advanced by the owners of the Foscolia that the collision might have been avoided had the Columbia shown the lights and sounded the fog signals usual under such conditions. The lights and signals were, however, dispensed with by the Columbia on this occasion for the reason that the Spanish fleet, under the command of Admiral Cervera, had not at that time been located, and the cruiser was then engaged in patrol duty in the vicinity of the most important ports of the country, New York and Philadelphia, the points between which she was cruising being Fire Island light-ship and Delaware Breakwater, and that it was deemed essential to take extraordinary precautions, even to the extent of incurring some hazard, in guarding against possibilities which might have developed at any moment.

A collision with one of our war ships having occurred under such circumstances, when, for public reasons deemed sufficient to justify such action, our vessel was disregarding the rules of the road at sea, and a valuable merchant steamer and cargo belonging to a friendly power being destroyed, apparently without contributory negligence on the part of her officers and crew, it would seem proper that the losses incident thereto should not be allowed to rest upon the owners of a private vessel, but that such losses should, on the contrary, be borne by the United States, provided, of course, that it shall be judicially determined in the courts of the United States that the facts are as hereinbefore outlined.

Entertaining these views, and inasmuch as it appears that the bill (S. 5000) provides simply for the submission of all matters of fact in the case to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and for the payment of such amount only as may be adjudged to the claimants by decree of such court, the Department recommends the bill to the favorable consideration of the committee, section 2 of the bill, making provision for the prompt payment of the amount which the court may find to be due, being deemed proper in view of the fact of the foreign ownership of the vessel lost and the desirability of avoiding in such a case the delay which would result from a resubmission of the matter to Congress for the necessary appropriation.

In this connection I desire to state that under date of the 21st of June last, this Department addressed letters to the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, recommending favorable action in the matter of the claim of the owners of the Foscolia and cargo.

The inclosures of your communication are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Chairman Senate Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to this case, but I can only submit to the House that there are a great many cases where American vessels have been destroyed under circumstances just as aggravating as they appear in this case, and yet the Department has not taken any action, while here we have a case where the Department does take action where the vessel was under the English flag; but in no single case where an American vessel has been sunk under more aggravating circumstances, where the parties have been knocking at the doors of Congress for a number of years for relief, have they been able to get action on the part of the Department. But as this goes to a court, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. One point in connection with the consideration of this bill. I find that section 2 makes an indefinite appropriation. It is customary in cases of loss with our own seamen, under the general law, that after the court shall find judgment the judgment shall be reported to Congress for appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAIRD. I want to ask the gentleman if the second section of the bill does not carry an appropriation?

Mr. STONE. It does.

Mr. BAIRD. I object.

Mr. STONE. Let me make a suggestion for one moment. Suppose the second section goes out. The second section is that which provides for an adjudication in the southern district of New York. If the matter were to go before the Court of Claims, it would provide for a return of the findings to Congress. If this second section be stricken out, will the gentleman withdraw objection to that extent?

Mr. BAIRD. No; I object to the consideration of the bill.

PAY OF WORKMEN AT UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 307) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay certain laborers, workmen, and mechanics at United States navy-yards and naval stations 50 per cent additional for work performed in excess of eight hours per diem.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay 50 per cent additional for all work in excess of eight hours per diem performed by laborers, workmen, and mechanics whose compensation is fixed upon a basis of eight hours per diem, and who, between March 18, 1898, and October 31, 1898, were employed at any United States navy-yard or naval station, and who worked in excess of eight hours per day and have not already received said additional compensation; the amount due each laborer, workman, and mechanic affected by the above to be based upon the time records of the several bureaus at the navy-yard or naval station where the work was performed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I thought there was an eight-hour law upon the statute books, preventing the working of laborers, mechanics, and artisans over eight hours. I shall not object to this bill, because laborers should be paid for any excess of time over eight hours.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, how are we to construe the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri? Is he in favor or against the joint resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. "The gentleman from Missouri" stated very clearly that he was in favor of paying any laborer for any excess of time he may have worked over eight hours. As I understand the joint resolution, it proposes to accomplish that result. My query, however, was how they could have been worked over eight hours under existing law.

Mr. HOPKINS. This bill proposes to pay them for the excess of time and 50 per cent in addition to that allowed by law.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if this has been paid?

Mr. RIXEY. This bill is to pay those who have not been paid for the extra time one and one-half rates.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RIXEY. Pending the reading of this report I will make a short statement. The Secretary of the Navy writes that under regulation (c) he has paid some of these men. That regulation provides that—

(c) Men who have rendered service during the day, and who, by reason of emergency, are required to work in excess of eight hours, shall be paid for all such extra work performed after 5 p. m. and before 6 a. m. at the same rate per hour as for day work, with 50 per cent additional.

Under that regulation the men who went to work at 12 o'clock in the day and worked until 12 o'clock at night were paid one and one-half pay between 8 o'clock and 12 o'clock, but the men who went to work at 12 o'clock at night and worked twelve hours on the same work and for the same number of hours only received the straight pay. Now, this bill would put all workmen on the same footing. As to the future, it has been provided against. The Secretary of the Navy has made this regulation:

(2) The following rules shall be observed for estimating the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics for work performed in excess of eight hours per day and for work performed outside of yard hours:

(a) For work performed, by reason of extraordinary emergency, in excess of eight hours per day, the ordinary rate of pay, with 50 per cent additional, shall be allowed.

(b) Men employed in relays shall be paid at the rate allowed for day work whether they work by day or at night.

(c) For work performed on Sundays or legal holidays the ordinary rate of pay, with 50 per cent additional, shall be allowed.

(d) The foregoing provisions relate solely to laborers, workmen, and mechanics whose compensation has been fixed upon a basis of eight hours per day, and have no application to employees whose ordinary duties require their presence before or after yard hours, at night, on Sundays, or on legal holidays, and whose compensation has been fixed with reference to the irregular and unusual character of their employment.

So this condition of affairs will not exist in the future. This bill is to authorize the payment of the men for the overwork between March 18 and October 31, and it seems to me there can be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recognized, if not inconsistent with the order of business concerning this bill. When it is ready to be put on its passage, or at the proper time if this is not the time, I would like recognition from the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of two distinguished friends, members of this House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], calling attention that this bill was not necessary if there had been an eight-hour law already in vogue, compels me to call the attention of the House, as well as of the country, to the fact that there has been for twenty years a constant clamor throughout the nation, and a righteous demand, for an eight-hour law in all public work.

There has never been a national convention for twenty years of either of the great parties, nor of new ones, which has not pledged in its convention the enactment of such a measure. We have in this House observed seven consecutive measures projected, and yet events occurring intermediately have inevitably prevented these measures either from becoming law; or when such, from receiving the recognition of the administrative officers. The Attorney-General of the United States, in a late opinion brought to the attention of the public, has given out that the late eight-hour law is practically suspended in its operation upon Government work. This upon the theory of emergency which justifies the suspension.

With that opinion at this time I have no expression of dissent. I do, however, call the attention of the House to the bill passed by this House at the last session, that it still lingers in the Senate, in another branch of this legislative body, not yet passed, sleeping because of neglect. With the construction of the Attorney-General, which renders the old law practically nugatory and vitiates it as far as its effects or application is concerned, with the new law suspended in its passage, the country is confronted with the fact, demonstrated by the remarks of the two gentlemen I have referred to, that we are to do without an eight-hour law which has been the expression of both Houses and the desire of all humane people and the intention of this honorable House. Worse is it to admit to-day, sir, that there is an absolute failure of realization by all of those mostly interested, those burdened toilers whose interest it was the intention of this House to subserve.

Mr. Speaker, this House, with the best spirit, in many votes indifferent to partisanship, found it agreeable to give that bill an almost unanimous vote. I can not but call attention to the fair-minded men of the House, to the Speaker, and the country, so far as my voice may reach it, that I am impressed with the absolute injustice of longer letting that eight-hour bill remain suspended and longer deceiving the army of workmen by promises never fulfilled. What is it which ever induces the laborer to trust those who ever deceive? Why is he always the greatest object of solicitude during political campaigns, yet ever forgotten and ever ignored—yea, ever betrayed and oppressed—in the day when his righteous demands should be complied with and his honest needs be satisfied?

Mr. Speaker, a million men are interested in having their hours of labor shortened to the actual necessities of their toil, so that they may not only attend to the needs of their families, but cultivate social intercourse with them and look after the education of their children and their spiritual welfare. Such considerations as these appeal essentially to humane men. They call into operation a principle which is not only recognized to-day in the passage of this brief measure, but which will, I trust, prompt us, in the remaining hours of our service in this body, to do everything in our power to further the passage of a general eight-hour law. [Applause.] And if as members of this body we can bring any influence to bear upon the coordinate branch of Congress, we should not hesitate to do so in behalf of the interests to which I have referred, and as a matter of just humanity as well as of deserved right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I always yield with pleasure to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is the gentleman from Washington familiar with section 3738 of the Revised Statutes of the United States——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. "The gentleman from Washington" is familiar with it——

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). Which reads as follows——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I beg to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he was present during the whole of my remarks?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not quite all.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I thought not. I referred to that section.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to finish what I was undertaking to say?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Certainly. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The provision to which I refer reads as follows:

Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I beg to answer my distinguished friend by saying that I had referred to that section. I observed that the gentleman was out of the House at the time. I stated that under the construction of the law department of the Government that provision of law is now practically suspended, although we passed in this House a bill designed to conform to the opinion of that distinguished law officer, so that the provision of law should not be wholly expended by such; that rather than increase the hours of labor there should be an increase of the force. We should give more men work, and not more hours upon those who do the work. Since the opinion to which I have referred, and since the bill which we passed has been held up in the Senate, it is found that we have no eight-hour law at present in operation with respect to work of the Government. It was to that point I desired to call the attention of this honorable body. I am in receipt of many communications from toilers working under Government contractors complaining of this injustice. I speak in their behalf.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I gladly yield for that purpose.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to say that the men in the employ of the Government were only worked extra time during the war, and that in our various arsenals, etc., the term of daily labor has now been reduced to eight hours. During the exigency growing out of the war, men working in the navy-yard in relation to which this joint resolution is proposed, were working twelve hours a day on two shifts. They were not only willing, but desirous to work over time. But since the war closed, these men are working only eight hours a day. Their employment for extra time grew altogether out of the fact that the war brought us face to face with an immediate emergency, with inadeqate implements of war on hand. During that emergency the men who commenced work at noon and worked till midnight received for work subsequent to 8 o'clock the regular rate and one-half additional, while the men who commenced their work at midnight received only one hour's pay for a straight hour's work. The object of this joint resolution is to cure that discrimination.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I appreciate the purpose of this resolution and I certainly advocate its passage. I appreciate also the suggestion made by my friend from Iowa. I recall that he was one of those gentlemen who gave attention to the defects of our eight-hour law and joined with me to amend its provisions, so as to cover what in justice it should cover with respect to workmen in the employ of the Government. I am glad also that he reminded the House of that other important fact that in the turbulent hours when the interests of this Government were greatly at stake her most loyal citizens, those who gave her their most zealous aid, were that army of toilers who cheerfully worked overtime without murmur or dissent and without extra compensation. Yet, sir, who were more needy than they?

In view of the existing conditions I respectfully suggest that not only should this measure be passed by the House, but that, acting in accord with its spirit, we should all do what we can to secure the passage of such an eight-hour law as will cover the cases of all persons justly entitled to the benefit of its provisions.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Washington kindly inform us what are the hours of labor prescribed by law in his own State?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. We have there, of course, three or four different classes of laborers. In respect to farm labor there is no limitation as to hours. In respect to mechanical labor, there are limitations similar to those adopted in the gentleman's own State, our law being copied practically from the statute of Massachusetts, as construed by the judicial decision to be found in 142 Massachusetts Reports.

Mr. MOODY. I will inform the gentleman from Washington that there is no State, as far as I am aware, that has an eight-hour law, except in relation to the employees upon the public works.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I referred to that.

Mr. MOODY. And my question, therefore, had no reference to such employees. I refer to the great masses of the people who are laborers in private employment, and ask the gentleman again what is the limit of the day's labor in the State of Washington?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I regret exceedingly that the legislature has not passed an act limiting the hours of all labor in that State. It has been a Republican legislature save on one occasion, and we have been unable to accomplish this act of justice. [Laughter.] We have now a labor commission, the most efficient of its kind throughout the nation.

Mr. MOODY. Then, as a matter of fact, what did the Democratic legislature do?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Unfortunately, in consequence of the inimical action of the filibustering Republicans, no relief could be afforded. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOODY. Well, let us have the exact truth in reference to the matter. That is what we are seeking.

Did they pass a law—that legislature to which you refer—limiting the hours of labor in your State?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I confess I can not inform the gentleman. There was a serious conflict between the legislative departments upon this subject, which prevented the legislative action from becoming operative.

Mr. MOODY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Washington, in view of the fact that it seems he will have ample leisure for some time in that direction, that he go to his home and endeavor to have brought about by the legislature of his State the same provision of law that is enforced upon the same subject in the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts as to the hours of labor.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will inform my friend from Massachusetts that I happen to be the author of the only bill which passed both houses of my legislature; but unfortunately, as I have stated, it later met the inimical action of the Republican governor. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RIXEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5427. An act granting to the Clearwater Short Line Railway Company a right of way through the Nez Perces Indian lands in Idaho; and

S. 5258. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 26) for the establishment of a light and fog-signal station on or near Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4690) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11217) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9219) for the relief of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5258. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5427. An act granting to the Clearwater Short Line Railway Company a right of way through the Nez Perces Indian lands in Idaho—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4382. An act to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1357. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt; and

S. 4690. An act for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DINGLEY.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for present consideration the special order and ask the reading of the resolutions which have been submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions which have just been read.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my duty to call the attention of the House for a few brief moments to the occasion to which the special order just read is devoted, being the opportunity which the House has taken to pay its tribute to one of its former members who for many years was a conspicuous and influential Representative of the State of Maine in this body.

There are comparatively few members in the House, perhaps, concerning whom anything in the nature of biographical statement would be less necessary. Mr. DINGLEY has been so long a prominent factor in the legislative proceeding of our Government, has occupied such conspicuous positions in public life, and has so long been recognized as an influential member of the House of Representatives that it seems to be entirely unnecessary at this time that I should attempt anything like a sketch of his private or his public life. In my judgment this occasion is more that of an opportunity for us, his fellow-members who have been associated with him for a long period of years, to pay an earnest and feeling tribute to his personal worth, his public services, his many amiable and winning qualities, rather than to give our judgment of the usefulness of his public life.

Governor DINGLEY has been an acquaintance and friend of my own for a great many years. Associated, as we were, professionally in the publication of newspapers, our relations with each other and our relations to public affairs have moved along in parallel lines; and it is a very gratifying reflection to me at this time that we have agreed on all great and moving questions that have attracted public attention and excited public interest during the last generation.

As the proprietor and editor of the Lewiston Daily and Weekly Journal, having an exceedingly large circulation in our State and beyond, the Hon. NELSON DINGLEY has for many years exerted a very widespread and potent influence upon public affairs not only in Maine, but throughout New England. It is unnecessary to say to those who have known him in his daily walks that his newspaper has uniformly been the advocate of all those policies and principles which in his belief lead to the uplifting of public morals, public integrity, and the advancement of civilization.

As a writer Governor DINGLEY has had few superiors in the journalism of this country. A profound student, a man of rare accuracy of information, he had a facility and a felicity with the pen that are seldom found, even in this age of so much writing. He was always an earnest man, profoundly so: not aggressive, rather inclined to be cautious. Carefully searching out with infinite pains the ground work of his beliefs and convictions, he framed them into arguments of rare cogency and great influence.

He came to this House in 1881, making his service here in the vicinity of eighteen years of long, faithful, conspicuous, and useful devotion of his talents and ability to the welfare of his Government. He was a modest man, distrustful of his own powers of attraction in public assemblages, and yet possessing a due self-respect and a confidence in his ability to search out the merit of questions and get at the pith of controversies.

It is interesting to me in the retrospect, as it was interesting to me during our joint service in the early years, the Governor having preceded me by a single session before the Forty-eighth Congress, to observe the steadfast purpose, the self-knowledge, and the determination to accomplish an object with which my distinguished colleague devoted himself to that line and sphere of public efforts to which he was best fitted. Without the charms of oratory, not having the attractions of a mellow and sibilant voice, the Governor early recognized, or, in fact, on his entrance into this forum became satisfied, that his sphere would not be that of the orator, to hold breathless thousands upon the resonance of his speech, but that he had a mission and a field and a talent that was not only adapted to this legislative body, but could be used with real devotion to the public interests, to advance those great causes upon which his heart was bent, and to frame his contribution as no insignificant one to the formation of the great public interests committed to the care of this body.

So my colleague became preeminently the student of the House of Representatives. It was my fortune to live in the same hotel with him during a long period of years, and I do not recall a single instance when I have entered his apartment while he was there that I did not find him seated with a pad upon his knee, surrounded by documents, laboriously but intelligently searching out the bases upon which the great questions agitating the American public were to be decided in Congress.

And so it came that in spite of his lack of a commanding presence, in spite of his lack of oratorical attractions, month by month and year by year, it became more and more fully recognized that the quiet, unassuming, unassertive man from Maine was a marvelous repository of accurate and trustworthy information upon an enormous variety of subjects, and that while his speech was not loud or aggressive, he was a very dangerous antagonist in any discussion which involved great knowledge of the question at issue.

So from year to year he went forward in his quiet, unassuming but devoted way, acquiring more and more of that information which perhaps some of us were inclined to permit him to dig out over the midnight oil, until it came to pass that all over the House, on both sides, without regard to political divisions, the Hon. NELSON DINGLEY was looked to as a trusted authority upon public questions, especially upon all of those intricate and most important affairs relating to the revenues and finances of the country, and when he made a statement as one of fact it came to be a rare thing to find anyone even disposed to question its correctness.

The amount of absolute labor by which Governor DINGLEY acquired the confidence of this House and of the country it would be hard to overestimate. In my knowledge I have never met so steadfast and devoted a student as my late colleague. I know the many hours that he has devoted to that most wearing of all pursuits, the elucidation of facts from statistics, the careful examination and analysis of public reports bearing upon the great questions that have agitated the country, and I have no question but that to a degree sapped his vitality and led to a shortening of his years. He was absolutely tireless in his devotion to the public service.

Within the last year, in addition to the immense labors and responsibilities of the great position which he held as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the recognized leader of the controlling portion of this legislative body, he responded promptly to the invitation of the President to take a position upon the British and American commission which, in the midst of all these other cares, undertook to compose and adjudicate and settle the vast amount of rasping and difficult questions that had arisen during all the years of the past between this country and Canada.

Between those additional cares and those with which he was charged by the Speaker of the House in his assignment to the chairmanship of the great business committee of Congress, he wore out his life, his frail constitution broke down under the strain, and he passed away, as much a sacrifice of patriotism as if he had fallen on the field of battle, amid the flurry of drums and the roar of cannon, beneath his country's flag. No more faithful soldier of the Republic has ever fallen in the face of a foe than NELSON DINGLEY when the last spark of life gave out in a struggle that he had been making, performing heroic public duties until the body was too weak for the soul, and it passed to the hands of its Maker.

It became my duty to accompany the remains, with others of his late associates here, to his home in his native State for final disposition. No one who accompanied that sad party will ever forget the universal character of the interest manifested or the deep sympathy evinced by the people of communities all along the route; and when we reached his late home and found the population of a whole region practically massed around the station, hushed, reverent, and sorrowful, it impressed upon the minds of everybody present what a potent force there is in character when the death of one man, a quiet, unassuming man, can so impress itself upon a whole community that a great Commonwealth should toll its bells and wait in hushed silence while the friends of his childhood, the pastor who had watched over his manhood in church affairs, to which he was so sincerely devoted, paid their tributes to the memory of a great and good man.

Mr. Speaker, these services are held to furnish his late associates in this body an opportunity to speak their judgment upon him as a man, as an associate, and as a friend; and it is my purpose simply to-day to inaugurate this tribute as a fellow-member by the few remarks which I have made without attempting to go into a detailed record of his life or a detailed eulogy of his characteristics. For myself, his death has come as a very severe blow. The State of Maine has a small delegation in numbers. We have stood here since I became a member, only four of us. One passed away a year ago; another has recently followed; and the shattering of a delegation by the removal of one-half of its membership by the hand of death is a serious blow. And the death of Governor DINGLEY, while it will be lamented and felt throughout the country and especially by his State, is peculiarly a heavy blow to the delegation from the State of Maine with whom he has stood here so stanchly and so faithfully during all these years. It is a pleasant thought at this time that that delegation, of which the governor was so conspicuous and influential a member, stood together in all the great stresses that have come upon us, and no one of the surviving members will ever fail to remember how often and how securely we have depended upon the wise counsel, sagacious views, and faithful patriotism of our deceased colleague, Governor DINGLEY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th day of last month the earthly career of NELSON DINGLEY came to an end. It was the close of a long and useful life, in which he had accomplished much for his generation and his country. Though he had nearly filled out his three score years and ten, it seemed to us that he was cut off in the very height of his honor and in the midst of his greatest usefulness. It is fitting now that we, his companions and friends, should pause in the public business and offer a tribute to his memory.

My first acquaintance with Mr. DINGLEY began on the assembling of the Forty-eighth Congress in December, 1883. He had then served one term, while I was entering upon my first. I remember well his kindness to the new members, and very early there sprung up the beginning of that mutual friendship and respect which has ripened with the years. In the Fifty-first Congress we were both placed on the Committee on Ways and Means, where we were also associated at the time of his death. We had, therefore, labored together in the formulation of the tariff law of 1890, as also the tariff law of 1897. There is no place where you can get to know a man more thoroughly than in an association of this character.

Mr. DINGLEY came to Congress after a long experience in public life and a much longer study of public questions. It is related of him that long before he had reached his teens he read the speeches of Webster and Clay with more avidity than would most boys pursue Scott's novels. He was a Whig long before he was a voter, and could give "a reason for the faith that was in him." In 1855, when the Whigs and the Free Soilers united in Maine as a part of the new party, Mr. DINGLEY wrote that the Republican party then formed was "destined to live in history." He began writing political editorials before he attained his majority, and this was his favorite occupation and the one most cherished by him down to the last time of his departure from home to participate in the duties of the present session of Congress.

His studious habits were formed in his early boyhood, and they increased with his years. Often on his vacations, when others would carry a rod or a gun, he always provided himself with a writing pad and a pencil. He knew something about everything; he knew everything about many things.

Before he came to Congress he had served several terms in the legislature of his State, during a great part of which time he occupied the speaker's chair. He had also served two terms as governor.

Entering the House of Representatives in the fiftieth year of his age, he was splendidly equipped for a career of great usefulness and honor. His mind was a storehouse of useful knowledge on all public questions. But better far than this, he had formed a life-long habit of untiring research. He had learned to take nothing for granted. He must verify the truth for himself. To him to know was a delight, and the toil by which he reached that goal, so irksome to others, had become the keenest pleasure.

In this body a man is generally measured by his companions at his true worth. We may have sharp encounters and fierce political debate, but, after all, men of all parties are measured by their comrades by a just and true standard. Political blindness never hides the true worth of our political friends or adversaries. It was a great tribute to the industry, perseverance, energy, and truthfulness of NELSON DINGLEY that information was sought from him by men of all political parties, and was uniformly accepted as reliable, frequently furnishing the basis for important action. This is the more remarkable when we consider that his greatest and most important work here was in connection with the formulation of two great tariff bills on partisan lines.

He has impressed himself on all the most important legislation of the last decade. No great question has arisen here that has not been illuminated from the stores of his knowledge, garnered by years of patient toil. He has been heard on the needs of a merchant marine, on the civil service, on the great appropriations, connected as they are with all the branches and interests of the Government, on the currency question, the national credit and the public faith, and especially on the great questions of revenue and protection. To each he has added a store of learning and good sense, winning the respect even of those who differed from him. His was not a brilliant genius. I was particularly impressed by the words of his pastor in his address to the neighbors of Mr. DINGLEY, at Lewiston, his late home. With a truthfulness and boldness too often wanting in the eulogist, he said, speaking of his enduring success:

> It was not great intellectual ability, for his was not a preeminent endowment; it was not eloquence, for he had no special gifts as an orator; it was not the charm of a polished manner, for, while he was ever affable and courteous, he had not cultivated the "arts of grace as a means to an end."
> What, then, was it that enabled him to attain unto and hold so long the position he occupied in the thought, esteem, and affection of his countryman?
>
> The answer to these queries is found in his loyalty to principle, his devotion to truth, his thorough preparation, and conscientious work. Thus he was ever ready for and equal to the demands of the hour and the occasion. By his earnest application to the task in hand and by his signal success in his chosen field of effort he proved to the young men of this Republic that—
>
> The heights by great men reached and kept
> Were not attained by sudden flight;
> But they, while their companions slept,
> Were toiling upward in the night.

In this Hall mere elocution and oratory sometimes hold sway, but the man who uniformly reaches the ears and holds the attention of the members of this House is the man who always has something to say. Members are not looking for one who merely amuses for the moment, but for him who always furnishes valuable information. Although it required the utmost physical exertion to make himself heard, with no grace of oratory, no well-rounded periods or glittering sentences, yet Mr. DINGLEY never failed to get the attention of the members of the House. It was the triumph of patient toil and study over all outward circumstances.

In his own city, in his district, and in his State he was greatly beloved. I shall not soon forget the crowded throng that passed his bier in the city of his home. The sturdy farmer, the nervy mechanic, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, all seemed to feel the loss as of a personal friend. Many a poor man and woman brushed away a tear, while one thanked God for the friend who had saved her husband and her son by his timely aid. Better than the plaudits of the nation, which followed him to his grave, was the heartfelt tribute of such as these, who knew him best. Looking back over his life, it would seem that he had performed a full measure of labor and success. Looking forward at the work before us, it would seem that the country could illy spare the ripened judgment of the political scholar and statesman. Questions new and grave are right in front of us, demanding the highest wisdom and best statesmanship. We shall miss his cool and dispassionate judgment, his wise counsel, his unerring sagacity, and his vast information. His life is a valuable lesson to the boys of America. It illustrates that genius is the capacity for hard work. Brilliancy discourages patient toil; what we call natural genius is ever a failure without eternal vigilance and constant effort.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I come to pay a brief tribute to the memory of a man whom I respected, revered, honored, and loved. I knew NELSON DINGLEY before he was elected to Congress, and my acquaintance with him began under circumstances which point to one of the great characteristics of the man. It was during a political campaign in the State of Maine. It was at a time when fierce controversy raged throughout that splendid State, and when public speakers were criticised with sharp intelligence and with almost brutal pertinacity. There was a question which involved a matter of financial history of our own country in comparison with that of France.

I had been challenged at a meeting in one of the lower counties of the State to answer certain interrogatories. I was not very well prepared for the emergency. I delayed and parried the issue, but I was to be met again the next night upon substantially the same field of battle, and a newspaper took occasion to remark that I had exhibited some of the merits that were valuable in a soldier under certain circumstances, and that I would live to fight, perhaps, another day. I did not have access to books; I did not know whom to go to for advice, but a gentleman told me to go to Lewiston and see Governor DINGLEY. I took the train, went up there, and met him for the first time. I introduced myself, and, laying before him the proposition, he sat down at his desk and in a very few moments wrote out a complete solution of the whole difficulty that I had labored under, and furnished me with the material on which I demonstrated to my audience the following night that I was absolutely master of the whole situation and knew all about it, and that they had made a great mistake in the challenge. From that day to this I knew Mr. DINGLEY, and met him often before I came to Congress in the Forty-ninth Congress, he having preceded me by two Congresses.

I am not attempting an analysis of his character. We are all familiar with it here. I had the honor to serve with him on the Committee on Ways and Means during the last two Congresses of his life. He had served on the Committee on Appropriations in the Fifty-third Congress, and then took the place that was vacated by his honored colleague, the present distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives. Coming later into Congress, I tried to follow along in the footsteps he had made. I think I may say without hesitation that I never met a man who knew so much about so many things that were incident to our political history as he did.

It has been very well said by the gentleman who has preceded me that Mr. DINGLEY knew a great deal about everything and everything about a great many things; and under that second subdivision of his suggestion, I would state as my belief that he knew more facts and events of American history than I have known to be possessed by any one, living or dead, American. No man who was ever associated with him in the way of work of a committee will ever forget the patience and untiring industry with which he mastered every question that came before it. In the winter that followed the election of 1896 he called together the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and devoted the entire winter, by day and by night, to the study of every item that was to be affected by legislation in the coming Congress. I would not disparage the work of any other member of that committee, for there were several gentlemen upon it who were of distinguished ability and who had served long and faithfully in that connection, but the chairman of the committee—the chairman of the detachment of the committee—never allowed anything to go through and be finished that he did not at some time study and master every fact in connection with it.

It has been said by his pastor, in the extract read, and by other gentlemen who have preceded me, that he was not an orator; that is, in the ordinary and popular sense of the term. He came into public observation, into public prominence, and ultimately into the leadership of this House, during a period of time when there was a discount on oratory as compared with the market value of it in the years that have gone by. He might not have been a Henry Clay in oratorical power, but he far exceeded him in the power of analytical examination of the great questions of American politics. He may not have been fluent of speech, but he was reliable in thought. He may not have been attractive in his personal appearance as he stood on the floor of this House, but when we came to examine the subject-matter of his address we found we had listened, perhaps unthinkingly at the time of the utterance, to the declarations of a master.

He had no sense of humor; he never permitted himself to be carried away for a moment from the sturdy and studious business of life by any thought of the attractiveness of humor or gaiety. We all remember some instances here in the House that we shall remember while we live and speak about as illustrative of this curious feature of his character. No man was ever brilliant enough in repartee or in wit to make apparently the slightest impression upon him. If it was a statement of fact, he heard it; if it was an application of an argument, he analyzed it; if it was a witticism, he did not seem to hear it.

He was a faithful man. He was one of the men that when you looked for him at the place where he notified you he would be found upon any question he was there; you did not have to consider whether or not there might be a change in his purposes in that behalf. Loyal and faithful to his party, I think it is fair to say that, strong partisan as he was, he never permitted partisanship to override his devotion to that which was best for his country.

His State had been peculiar in one matter of its politics. With the bare exception of a term for some gentlemen who represented a combination of opposition—with this exception, one single party, the Republican party, had dominated the representative capacity of that State ever since the Republican party was organized. So that we might have looked, in the development of a man who had come to be a Representative from that State, for a tendency toward more indifference to others' interests than the interests of his own party. I put it forward as one of the great characteristics of NELSON DINGLEY that he never lost sight of the greatest good to the greatest number.

I was talking with him a few days before he was taken sick. I was going home, and had an opportunity of an hour's conversation with him, and I can say this with perfect propriety, that he cast a horoscope forward through the entire session, the remaining session of this Congress; and in speaking of the several great measures that were to come before us I saw that he had already studied, considered, analyzed, and arranged the whole subject, not only of the arguments upon our side, but in those questions which were to be political, as he thought, he was prepared already to meet the arguments on the other side.

A word as I hurry along. What was the great strength of NELSON DINGLEY as a member of this House? I do not speak of him in his relations to the party, in his relations to the family, in his relations to the church and his people at home, but I speak of what it was that made him the powerful man he was on this floor. It was not because he had been assigned by the practice of the House to the leadership of the majority, not that. Because that may be repudiated at any time, as we all know and understand. The leader, the assigned and chosen leader in the House, must have capacity to assert the propriety of his choice, or he will not be the leader on this floor. What was his great strength? First, a wonderful knowledge of everything that came here; and, second, and possibly greater than all else, was the fact that he never made a statement of fact that did not turn out to be as he had stated it. He never was unwilling to be corrected in the hurry of debate if he had made a slip on facts or figures, but when he launched his case upon a proposition of fact, both sides in this House understood that the discussion afterwards must proceed upon the assumption that that was true.

And then in all that relates to that intercourse between members, that which relates to the orderly progress of business in partisan debate and partisan procedure, NELSON DINGLEY'S words to the other side of this House were just as safe and just as certain to be accepted as truth as though it had been put by unanimous consent upon the Journal of the House. He was loyal and faithful to the party to which he belonged. I may state now without qualification or hesitation that there was no man in the United States who was nearer to the administration of this Government to-day than was he, no man who had the confidence of the President in a higher degree, no man who in an emergency was called upon oftener, nor so often, as was NELSON DINGLEY, and no man who knew the purposes and aspirations and hopes of the Administration more conspicuously than did NELSON DINGLEY of Maine.

I may not discuss the fact that he is gone. There will be no hour of this or the next Congress when we shall not miss him. He was a man upon whom his associates on this side of the House loaded their burdens. Let me be specific about that. An attack might be made from the other side assailing some act of this side, all along the lines of economical administration and legislation; facts and figures might be hurled at us. I am sorry to say that we paid but little attention to such things here, because we knew that at the proper time the matter would receive proper consideration and action at the hands of the chosen leader of the party. We shall miss him in that regard. And the other side will miss the genial gentleman on whose courtesy and consideration they always relied. This brings us to the consideration of two or three propositions.

How wonderful are the ties that bind us here, even though the bitter assaults and storms of political controversy come and for the moment apparently divide and sever us. How quickly we learn the character of a man, even though he may be our assailant. How quickly we appreciate the man, though he may differ so widely with us. And so I think I can speak truthfully when I say that no man had a higher standing in the estimation of his fellows, even upon the Democratic side of the House, than did DINGLEY.

He has gone, but he has written upon the statute books of this country his views upon political matters. They will be his monument in coming time. He has left upon the hearts of his countrymen a sense of proprietorship in his great name that will be a heritage to the people who shall follow him.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, in view of my short service in this House, it seems but fitting that I should leave to those who were longer and more intimately associated with NELSON DINGLEY in its work the duty of testifying to the distinguished character of his services here.

In the brief but heartfelt tribute I desire to offer, I wish to speak more particularly of his relations to the social and political life of his own State. Maine has ever been loyal to her Representatives at the national capital, and has never failed to feel a just pride in the successes achieved by them. I was for some years in a position to know and appreciate how strong this feeling was in the case of Mr. DINGLEY. No man ever served in this body who enjoyed in a greater degree the love and respect of the people of his State and district. They knew his sterling worth and had an abiding faith in his sound judgment and purity of purpose.

Born on one of the rugged farms of Maine, in a section where nature in the dispensation of scenic beauties had been prodigal of her gifts but exacted toil as the price of existence, he inherited the sturdy relf-reliance of an honest, God-fearing ancestry, and was early schooled in those habits of industry he retained through life.

His father, who combined the pursuits of agriculture with the running of a country store, was a man of sterling worth; possessed great energy, together with strong tenacity of purpose. His mother, who, prior to her marriage, had been a successful teacher, was a woman of rare attainments and beauty of character. To her gentle influences may be attributed no small part of her son's steadfast devotion to duty and the notable success that attended him in the work of life.

The qualities that so distinguished him in later years were early manifest. The child was father of the man. In his early years he evinced a power of self-control, a tenacity of purpose, a wonderfully retentive memory, and a love of truth that gave bright promise of his later distinguished career. As he progressed into manhood these qualities developed with his growth. His aspirations were ennobling, his associations helpful and elevating. He undertook no labor that he did not complete, and none that was not done thoroughly and well.

Following his graduation from college he pursued a course of legal study and was, in due time, admitted to the bar. He was a man of judicial temperament with marked powers of concentration. There can be no doubt that had he continued in the practice of law the same high qualities of head and heart, the wonderful insight, the intuitive grasp of the salient points in a case, and the great capacity for close and sustained labor that so distinguished him as a member of this House must inevitably have secured him eminence in his profession. His tastes, however, did not run in this direction. He had been for some time a successful contributor to various newspapers and soon abandoned his legal pursuits to purchase an interest in and assume the editorial duties of the Journal, a weekly paper published in the growing city of Lewiston.

No man was ever better equipped, both by nature and attainments, for duties of this character. He was an indefatigable worker, and his paper soon became a recognized power in the State. In 1860 he added a daily edition, which speedily pushed to the front in Maine journalism, a position it has ever since maintained. In those days the editorial writer was far more of an individual force than he is at the present time, when the personality of a writer is frequently merged and practically lost in the name and character of his paper.

To the readers of the Lewiston Journal NELSON DINGLEY was a living, breathing reality—a potential force. They soon came to entertain a profound respect for the sterling qualities of his character and the soundness of his judgment. The number of those who came to him for counsel and advice was large, and the circle of his personal influence became second only to that of his newspaper. How much Mr. DINGLEY owed to this absolute accessibility, this habit of taking his neighbors and friends into his immediate confidence, it would be difficult to conceive. But undoubtedly here was the source, and, in large measure, the foundation of the strong hold upon the people of his district and his State which he retained to the day of his death.

Mr. DINGLEY carried into his editorial work the same direct and attractive qualities that characterized him in his personal relations. He was a clear and cogent writer, though never a maker of phrases. Language with him was merely a vehicle for the transmission of thought, and never in any degree an end in itself. There was in all his writings an atmosphere of truth and sincerity. He attempted nothing by indirection, nor was he a man who ever sought to evade or ignore the strong points of an opponent. He met them courageously and manfully. A man of absolute convictions, he was always ready with reasons for the faith that was in him.

Party workers sometimes imagined that he gave opposing views altogether too courteous consideration, for he had the same fairness that characterized Lincoln in stating the position of an adversary. There was no fighting, so far as he was concerned, with men of straw. He was strong enough and broad enough to seek or desire no undue advantage. He went directly, with unerring precision, to the heart of any question he was discussing. He was quick to detect the weak points in the armor of an opponent and knew how to direct his thrusts there with telling effect. At the same time his utterances were characterized by a calm dignity and tolerant spirit. He never permitted himself to be tempted to a lower level.

The irritability and acrimony that not infrequently fix the stamp of a small soul upon editorial expression had no place in the journalism of Mr. DINGLEY. He touched no subject that he did not elevate to the plane of frank and philosophical discussion. Throughout his long and busy life he was a man of high ideals. Positions of public trust and responsibility came to him naturally.

At the age of 29 he was elected to represent his city in the Maine house of representatives, and served in that body for four successive sessions. During two of them he occupied the Speaker's chair and declined a third election to that position, preferring to retain his place upon the floor. A few years later he again served his constituents for two sessions in the same body.

His experience at the State capital gave him a valuable legislative experience and so strengthened the popular appreciation of his high character and abilities that in 1873 he was given the Republican nomination for governor, receiving a vote of nearly two to one in the convention against two popular opponents. His administration of State affairs was clean and businesslike. He was reelected in 1874 by an increased majority, but declined a renomination in 1875, preferring to devote his energies to the work of his newspaper.

In 1881 the Republicans of the second Congressional district of Maine gave proof of the confidence and esteem in which they held him by electing him to this House as the successor of Hon. William P. Frye, who had been promoted to the United States Senate, and he was returned at every successive election with constantly increasing majorities. He had been elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

It was, after all, in his own happy home circle that Mr. DINGLEY was seen at his best. Here the tenderness and beauty of his character were most conspicuous. It was a Christian home, as unostentatious as it was hospitable. Here in the society of his devoted wife and children Mr. DINGLEY found the principal relaxation from the cares and anxieties of public station and passed the happiest hours of his life.

At no stage of his distinguished career did Mr. DINGLEY fail to keep in close and sympathetic touch with the plain people. Success did not allure him from his simple tastes and quiet life. He was to the end of his days the same unaffected, accessible, industrious, upright man that he was before he grew into national prominence. There was in his whole career no spot or blemish. The fierce light of publicity that shines upon every act of a great party leader in this House only served to throw into stronger relief the noble qualities of his nature. He grew in the estimation of the people of the country as he had long before grown in the estimation of the people of Maine. At his death a nation mourned.

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Mr. DINGLEY our country has sustained the loss of one of its purest public men, one of its wisest and most accomplished statesmen. It is a loss which will be long felt and which it is most difficult to supply. I know no one who possessed so thorough and so complete a knowledge of this Government and of all of its departments and institutions as did Mr. DINGLEY. His knowledge in this direction was amazing, both for its breadth and its accuracy. He was fully equipped to be the chairman of any committee of this House. He had also the rare faculty of utilizing his vast learning both for the purposes of discussion and for the preparation of statutes and revenue bills. In him was successfully blended the thoughtful student and the practical man of affairs. His career in Congress was one of preeminent distinction.

Few members attended the sessions of the House so constantly as did Mr. DINGLEY. None kept a scrutiny upon proposed legislation so carefully as he.

For four years he was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and, as such, the leader of the Republican majority in this House. Not since the civil war has the great Committee on Ways and Means possessed a chairman who could surpass Mr. DINGLEY in his knowledge of finance, of the tariff, and in his acquaintance with the varied and immense industries of this country. He will be remembered in history as one of the most distinguished chairmen of this great committee.

During these four years this committee has had to deal with the most important questions affecting this nation. Mr. DINGLEY was the central figure, the moving spirit in the determination of all these matters by the committee. The recommendations by this committee to this House bear the impress of his mind, the conclusions of his thought and research.

Upon matters before this committee which did not involve the differences between the two great parties upon taxation and finance he was equally as potential with the Democrats as with the Republicans. Upon those questions involving the principles and the policies of his own party his was the voice that was listened to with attention and his was the hand that pointed the way that his party finally went.

Congress has witnessed very few more successful floor leaders than Mr. DINGLEY. He possessed the rare faculty of being first without exciting envy or jealousy. Much of this was due to the fact that it was recognized by all that he was entitled to this preeminent position on account of his solid attainments and not on account of superficial display. Much of it because he himself was entirely devoid of all jealousy and envy and rejoiced at the success and abilities of anyone. Much of it was due to his wonderful tact in controlling matters without pushing himself individually forward, and by his kind and considerate attention to the humblest members of this House.

He possessed the faculty of not exciting the bitter antagonism of the opposition more than any leader I ever knew of. He was held in affectionate esteem and regard by all members of the Democratic side. He accomplished this by unfailing courtesies, fairness, and by never descending to partisan discussions or indulging in personalities. He stated the position of those opposed to him fairly, and met the issues offered directly and manfully. When party policies were not involved, he was equally desirous to accommodate and to serve a Democratic member or constituency as a Republican. By acquiring the good will and affectionate regard of the opposition he was enabled to get along smoothly in the House and pass his legislation without inciting bitter feeling or encountering delays often engendered simply to harass.

When one reflects upon the many and important and exciting questions which he has had control of in Congress for the last four years which he passed through the House, and which was accomplished with very little friction, delay, or bad feeling, it is astonishing and gives one some conception of Mr. DINGLEY's wonderful tact and ability as a parliamentary leader. If measured by success and by achievements, he will be remembered as one of the greatest parliamenthry leaders. No one, as a speaker, was listened to more attentively than Mr. DINGLEY. He did not possess the voice or the graces of an orator. His speeches were not resplendent with rhetoric nor sparkling with satire and wit, but they were illumined from commencement to conclusion with careful thought and valuable information. The House listened to him for instruction and not for entertainment. In his management of the Republican side of the House he was equally as tactful as in his treatment of the Democratic side. His control of the Republican side was nearly absolute. Many a time when there was a disposition on the Republican side to break upon important questions he rallied the disorganized forces by one of his lucid and thoughtful speeches.

In keeping his own party united he ignored entirely the usual methods of party leaders of appealing to party prejudices, but he addressed himself to the reason and the understanding of his party associates. The effect produced by his calm reasoning was remarkable.

In their future conflicts his party associates will sorely miss his calm, thoughtful speeches and his tactful and discreet leadership. The Democratic side will miss his unfailing courtesy, his uniform fairness, and his considerate kindness. The whole House will miss his great learning, his valuable instruction. His friends will miss a kind, sincere, gentle soul, undemonstrative, unpretentious, but as true as steel. His country will miss a wise, pure, patriotic statesman.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that, having been absent from the House when the time was set for eulogies on the life of Mr. DINGLEY, I received notice too late to make such preparation as I ought, to do justice to his memory. Though late in coming, I come with as eager a desire as any to lay my little wreath of affectionate admiration and esteem upon his coffin.

The language of eulogy is too apt to be the language of extravagance. Mr. DINGLEY needs no eulogy of that kind. Justice to his life and character calls only for the naked language of truth. His was a career that requires no embellishment in words and no exaggeration. What he thought and what he wrought suffice to give him a name and place among the most distinguished and useful men of his time.

He was fortunate in the opportunity to serve the people, both in his State and in the nation, during a critical time of the national life. His career covers the grave periods of the civil war, of reconstruction, and of the succeeding years which have seen the entrance of a nation, and not a confederation of States, upon a career of unexampled prosperity and a future of incalculable promise. Unfortunately for us all, the grim reaper seized him when we were facing new and untried conditions, and when his wisdom and experience would have been of immense service to his country. But he needed not any glory to be gathered in new fields to be added to the already full measure of his fame. He died full of years and of honors, and an appreciative people do willing and sorrowing homage at his bier.

When Mr. DINGLEY entered public life, the flames of civil war had made lurid the whole horizon and the perpetuity of the nation was at stake. When he was called to depart this life, a saved and reconstructed Union was in the enjoyment of an established and yet further promising prosperity. To this happy consummation he, in many ways, largely contributed. It was characteristic of him that to whatever place or whatever task called, he rendered faithful, conscientious, and fruitful service.

From 1863 till 1873 he was, with a slight interruption, a member of the Maine house of representatives, and during a term its speaker. Succeeding this service, he was the governor of his State. For eighteen years he was a member of the National House of Representatives and died its leader upon the floor, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. In many other capacities he rendered distinguished public services. The mere recital of the places that he held is a witness that he was a man of mark amongst his fellows and of service to his kind. Mr. Blaine once said that no truer test of a man's power could be found than his success in the House of Representatives; that place therein must be fought for and won by merit. This test Mr. DINGLEY successfully stood. When he died he was facile princeps in the House, a leader whom we all delighted to follow and one who commanded the confidence of his party and equally commanded the respect and esteem of the opposition. His career is a valuable contribution to the glory of republican representative government, wherein the equality of all men, not only before the law but in a contest for advancement upon the ground of merit, is a conspicuous feature. He was a shining example of the possibilities of American citizenship. Nothing came to him by inheritance; he was the architect of his own fortunes, and his fortunes were built upon the solid foundation of a noble character.

He was a manly man, patient, learned, and eminently industrious. He was a manly man because he was ever true to his ideals, and his ideals were lofty. Pure of private life, with strong convictions, he never swerved from his standards nor forsook what he believed to be the interests of the people whom he was called upon to represent, and he believed that he was called upon to represent the people of the whole country. He was a patient man, charitable of the views of others, though fixed in his own. He was a tactful man, anxious, always, to work out by the wisest methods, by compromise, when necessary—but never a compromise of principle—by courageous methods when others failed, what he believed to be the true interests of the people. He was a learned man. He had a wonderful storehouse of information, in general and in detail, and his information was exact and accurate. A wonderful memory added greatly to his power as a leader. He was rarely found wanting for a ready reply to the arguments offered by the opposition.

To such an extent was reliance placed upon what he had to say that he never rose to speak that he did not command the attention of all, whether friend or foe. I have never known a more industrious man. Every waking hour of every day was given to the acquisition of useful knowledge. With an apparently delicate physique, his capacity for work seemed nevertheless without limit. All that he knew and all that by his patient industry he learned was gladly devoted to the public service. I could not if I would recount the measures that his advocacy wrought into the statute law of the nation. Suffice it to say, that during his long career there were few matters of important legislation that did not receive his attention. He was an ardent believer in the principles of his party, and their predominance to-day is as much the result of his labor as it is of any other one man.

Nothing so knits men together as association in a work in which they have a common interest. Among the days of my public life that I shall always remember with the greatest interest will be those when the Committee on Ways and Means of the Fifty-fourth Congress was framing the tariff bill now known as the Dingley law. We were then in closest communion. Then it was that every man on that committee revealed to all his fellows his most characteristic qualities. Then it was that we learned from the inside the strength and the weakness of each other. We were engaged in a great work, one of stupendous importance to the nation at large and of more or less interest in its various features to each of us. Out of the struggle that ended in the framing of the Dingley bill we all came with an estimate of Mr. DINGLEY as a leader full of tact and resources, as a wise and conservative statesman worthy of the greatest of the chairmen of the past of the Committee on Ways and Means.

It is not for me to seek to penetrate the veil and speak of Mr. DINGLEY in that sphere in which as husband and father he was the beloved center. It was there that the graces of a Christian character made a happy home and furnished an example to bear fruit long after his time.

His life work ended, he died in the fullness of his fame, leaving to his countrymen the record of a useful life spent in their service and to his children the priceless legacy of a spotless name.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the death of Governor DINGLEY has removed from public life one of the most useful men who has appeared in the national councils in this generation. His long service in this House gave him such a relation to national affairs that his untimely removal is in the nature of a national misfortune. He came into Congress in 1881, after a distinguished career in the legislature and the executive office of the State of Maine, and from the time of his entrance into the House was recognized as a trained and experienced legislator. He had a preparation for public life, based upon a liberal education in one of the most famous colleges in New England, besides the advantage which arises from the studies required for admission to the bar. In addition to this he was, throughout his life, identified with journalism, a circumstance which in itself greatly contributed to his usefulness as a statesman.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, will my good friend the gentleman from Iowa permit me to inject into his address a brief expression of my appreciation of our departed friend?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. In an experience of nearly twelve years I do not think I have known a member of this House who has so industriously, so efficiently, and so ably devoted his time to the best interests of our great country, and at the same time has so faithfully, so successfully, or more unselfishly served the people of his own beloved State. He was a man of unusual information and ability, of unquestioned integrity, was respected and honored by all good people, more especially so by those who had the pleasure of his personal acquaintance.

Mr. DOLLIVER. He had the wisdom to understand that the range of public affairs is too broad to permit a man to become an authority in all its departments. He therefore, following the natural bent of his mind, deliberately identified himself with that branch of public affairs which deals with the fiscal problems of the Government, with the creation and disposition of the national revenues, and with the larger problems that relate to the coinage and currency of the country.

While he was alive his preeminence in these fields of research and controversy, generously conceded by all, invited neither envy nor jealousy, so that we only repeat the tribute ungrudgingly paid to the living statesman on all hands when it is said, now that the labors of his life are done, that no man of his time equaled him in the mastery of the complex and difficult problems which concern the Treasury of the United States.

In other matters the House may have turned to others for authoritative statements of fact and suggestions of policy, but when the questions of coinage, banking and currency, of ways and means were before the House every member acquiesced in the universal confidence in the profound knowledge of Governor DINGLEY upon these subjects.

It was not an accident that he occupied this unique relation to the affairs of the Government, for to a natural adaptation to studies of this character he added an industry with which he pursued his favorite themes without weariness and without vacation. We have heard it said that Governor DINGLEY owed little to natural talents and everything to unremitting labor. It is nearer the truth to say that he was sagacious enough to know that even the possession of extraordinary gifts is futile unless they are put into the harness and driven by a steady and severe hand.

He was an example of the intellectual type that takes nothing for granted, that stands upon the solid rock of fact and truth, perfecting every detail with patient care, until at last men looked upon him as a leader and teacher of his fellow-men.

It is probable that Mr. DINGLEY regarded his labor in the present Congress as his most important public work, and there is no doubt that his name will be chiefly known to posterity in connection with the fiscal legislation of 1897. It was my good fortune to be associated with him in the preparation of the tariff law which bears his name. For many months prior to the extraordinary session of this Congress he sat at the head of the table, surrounded by the ten members of the Ways and Means Committee belonging to his own party, conducting the investigations which resulted in the original draft of the Dingley tariff bill. They were months of labor, without a day of recreation and without an hour of leisure. The chairman of the committee, even then to all appearances frail and uncertain in strength, brought to the business in hand that wealth of accurate information, that vast store of definite knowledge, that unflagging zeal of personal attention which left his colleagues in daily astonishment as they came to see the fullness of his equipment in the field of practical legislation.

The minute details of previous legislation from the first tariff law to the last, and the history of American industries, great and small, including the vicissitudes of the business world, seemed to be within easy reach of his infallible memory, so that he could neither be deceived by the petitions of those who asked for duties unreasonably high nor the protests of those who sought to reduce them to a point unreasonably low. In this bewildering mass of statistics, official reports, price lists, and personal statements, Governor DINGLEY moved about like a man perfectly at home, never failing to get at the facts, never hesitating to cast aside hearsays from whatever quarter, and when the work was over and the bill approved by the House without an amendment not suggested by the committee, every man associated with him, in addition to admiration for the statesman, found in his heart a sincere affection for the man himself, for the unostentatious colleague whose greatness as a leader only emphasized his kindness and generosity as a friend.

In so far as his fame rests upon what he said and what he did, it is preserved in the RECORD of the proceedings of this House. That RECORD will show to future generations the wisdom with which he approached the questions of his time. His speeches upon this floor have a permanent value to the student and the historian, not only because of their trustworthy statement of the matters under consideration, but because they are inseparably connected with the national policies by which the business affairs of the Government have been guided.

But it is true of Governor DINGLEY, as of all others who have been influential in shaping great events, that we naturally turn away from the public arena in which he acted so conspicuous a part to recall the attributes of personal character, upon which, after all, every great reputation rests. Men followed Governor DINGLEY because they believed in him, and they believed in him because his life displayed, even in the smallest affairs, a fixed and immovable integrity.

His character was greater than his intellect and dominated every faculty that was in him. It exhibited that strong fiber of moral conviction, that inflexible vigor of conscience, which has done more to make the nation what it is than all the triumphs of genius, than all the ornaments of learning.

It was a character based upon the religious creed of our ancestors, a survival of the Puritan ages, so sure and steadfast that it seemed a little strange, from a common, worldly point of view, to find a man going about amongst us, the guide of the political thought of millions of people, the counselor of Cabinets and of Presidents, the trusted leader of a political party, whose funeral brought together in this Chamber the high officials of every department of this Government and the representatives of all the nations of the earth in a stately national ceremony, who had preserved the perfect ideal of Christian manhood and amid the vicissitudes of a long career had literally kept himself unspotted from the world.

The leadership of such a man in times like these is in the nature of a national benediction. It shows that in the midst of the evil tendencies of wealth and luxury the sources of the national life have not been corrupted, for while a single New England homestead may nurture such a man, it takes the scattered homesteads of a great nation to support and give significance to such a career.

The hope of the Republic lies in these old-fashioned homesteads, with their tables spread with the frugal comforts of life and their family altars made sublime by simple faith in God. The statesman in whose memory we are assembled here to-day illustrated before our eyes the homely virtues of the men and women who laid the foundations of society in the New World. They looked forward not alone to material prosperity. They had an eye also for the higher concerns of the community, so that, side by side with the material progress of the nation, the intellectual and moral interests of the people have been advanced, until to-day the real estate of the Republic is not the boundless territory of the national domain, nor its real wealth the accumulated sum of its property, nor its real life the unnumbered millions of its people, for after you have gathered together all the statistics of material prosperity you have yet to find by the quiet firesides of an upright people the authentic census of a great commonwealth.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire on this sad yet interesting occasion to add my meed of praise to the memory of our departed friend and colleague. I shall leave it to others who knew him longer and better to speak of his early manhood and of the training that he had preparatory to his entering upon his great career in this House. My acquaintance with Mr. DINGLEY commenced in the Forty-ninth Congress. When I came here at that time he had served his district and State faithfully and well in our national councils for a number of years and had already attained a commanding position with his colleagues.

As a new member, I naturally made a careful study of the leading members of that Congress, and of all the men who then and since have filled conspicuous places in the public mind Mr. DINGLEY was one of the if not the most interesting character. He was not gifted by nature with a voice and person that would attract attention. What he gained in the way of public distinction was in spite of many personal defects. It was the superb quality of his mind and that never-tiring industry so characteristic of him that placed him in the foremost rank of the public men of the day. Whatever he had in hand to do he did well. He was a good parliamentarian, well versed in the science of finance, thoroughly conversant with the principles of political economy, and as a member of the Appropriations Committee he distinguished himself for the depth and variety of his information. As chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means he has inseparably connected his name with the legislative history of our country in connection with the law now on our statute book known as the Dingley law.

None of us dreamed at the opening of the present session of Congress that his earthly career was so nearly ended. Up to the holiday recess he came daily among us in the committee room and as leader on this floor with all the old-time vigor, courtesy, and firmness that have marked his leadership. He had the entire confidence not only of his Republican colleagues, but of our Democratic friends as well. Whenever he arose to address the Chair on any subject relating to legislation he was listened to with respectful attention, and his words made a deep impress upon his political friends as well as those in political opposition.

I think during my experience on this floor, for now nearly fourteen years, that I have never known a member more universally beloved, whose opinions were more highly regarded, or whose influence was greater than that of Mr. DINGLEY. He was an ideal American, and while the Second district and the State of Maine may claim him, he had long since outgrown those environments and stood forth a man of national character, whose ability and influence were dedicated to the service of his country. He exerted an influence upon legislation second to none of the men of our time. I can not, owing to the number who are to pay their tribute to his memory to-day, dwell at any length upon the characteristics which made Mr. DINGLEY the successful public man he became and so endeared him to his family and to his friends. His life was well rounded, and it was indeed a happy one. He achieved a success in public affairs realized by few of his contemporaries. In his domestic relations he enjoyed a felicity which falls to the lot of few. In his death we feel a personal bereavement and the public have sustained an irreparable loss.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if it were not for the sacred demands which the dead make upon the living, I should prefer to leave undone that which I am about to do.

The esteem we bore him, the services he rendered to us and the country, the man he was and is—all these are the peculiar possessions of the heart, and it is with the greatest reluctance that we ignore her grief at the present hour and bid her deliver up her treasures.

Half the charm of men is usually lost under the pressure of work and the irritation of haste; and surely the citizen, journalist, legislator, statesman, and scholar whose life we honor and whose death we mourn to-day was one of the most industrious of men, but he was in an eminent degree an exception to that rule.

He possessed a grace of manner and a thoughtful considerateness in word and act, particularly in his intercourse with the younger members of the House, which made him dearer than a friend to many of us.

When, in all his years of service on this floor, has he not stood ready to impart information and counsel to his colleagues? Who, in the annals of this numerous and eminent body, has enjoyed the friendship of so many men, of all political parties, as he has? Among the distinguished leaders upon this floor in the past, who enjoyed the confidence of his colleagues and followers to a greater degree than he did? Did not all feel stronger because of his presence, and did not our hearts pause for a moment when we heard the sad news?

Many of those who knew Mr. DINGLEY here would, I believe, have preferred to leave unspoken the esteem in which we held him, so personal is the loss we feel; but silence does not become the living when a soul has passed from earth, and especially such a soul as his. The desire for immortality which burns in every breast bids us break the spell of grief and speak; the innate respect we rightfully feel for all that appertains to human life and its sorrows bids us speak; our gratitude for the duty he performed and for the life of industry and integrity he lived bids us speak.

The dead, sir, in this matter are the undisputed masters of the living. The lives of great men live and should live after them, as molding forces in succeeding generations, and I take it to be an obligation which devolves upon the living to describe the achievements, define the principles, and immortalize the virtues of those who weary of life's burdens and fall asleep in their midst.

Nor is it fitting that the cause of the solemn ceremonies which we have recently witnessed in this Chamber should lack commemoration. The ambassadors and ministers of foreign powers came here; the Supreme Court and the Senate of the United States adjourned their sessions out of respect for the dead and sought places upon this floor; the President of the United States and his Cabinet were here; these walls were adorned with flowers and bathed in sacred song and oratory.

It is fitting, therefore, that we should pause for a few brief hours to recount the labors and define the ideals which hovered like angels about the life of our honored colleague and beloved friend.

The life of NELSON DINGLEY reminds me of nothing so much as of a majestic ship moving cautiously from its home port and grandly plowing the deep, gathering strength from each fresh encounter with wind and wave, until, out upon the high seas, while in the full enjoyment of proud dominion over the elements, almost without warning, sharp rocks crash into her bow, and the towering citadel of the sea, loaded with wealth and throbbing with power, sinks deeper than a plummet's sounding into the dark and swirling tide.

His life was one of steady progress and ever-increasing strength and usefulness. He was a boy on the farm, with high ideals and noble resolves; a student at college, at the head of his class; a journalist, with ready pen and broad information; a lawyer, of profound scholarship; a legislator, who loved truth and fairness; a governor, of wise discrimination and an able executive; a statesman, than whom none possessed a more complete mastery of the facts and principles appertaining to national policies and to the administrative affairs of the Government; a party leader of sincere devotion and reliable judgment, who led, not by the power of will alone, nor by persuasive eloquence, but by a charm of manner, a sincerity of purpose, a considerate regard for the opinions of others, and a masterful command of every detail of situation which inspired that confidence without which successful leadership is impossible.

In all the circumstances of his life he was an upright, industrious citizen and kindly neighbor, serving with the great talents God had given him his day and generation; and when the message came, as come it will to every man, and he was called to join the innumerable throngs which move to the silent halls of death, it found him in the midst of happiness among the scenes of his greatest usefulness and intensely devoted to those purposes which had been the guiding stars of his life.

It is said that Mr. DINGLEY was not a genius, and if to be a genius is to be eccentric, meteoric, and convulsive, the remark is certainly true. There was no steadier, saner man. But who is there that will maintain that he did not possess a truly great intelligence? Who would deny that his was the seeing eye and the faithful hand? And, moreover, he possessed a quality more valuable to the world than genius—a quality that gives to genius all its worth, a capacity and love for toil with both hand and brain.

He was not, like Achilles, talented beyond both Greeks and Trojans, but driven by passions stronger than himself. He was rather like Ulysses or Diomede, far-seeing, faithful, and prepared. He loved law and order and hated chaos. Like Socrates, the greatest of the Athenian statesmen, he obeyed the laws of both church and state, even when he could not, in all the length and breadth of his catholic mind, respect them. He was practical, useful, and efficient. His great service to us and to his country was unobtrusive, not strained, and it had the quality of mercy, "which droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath."

How beautifully did he describe those virtues which he himself possessed when on the 2d of February, 1886, he paid his last tribute to the deceased ex-Senator from Indiana and Vice-President of the United States, Thomas A. Hendricks.

The kindliness of his manner—

Said Mr. DINGLEY—

his affability toward all who approached him, and his uniform courtesy to the humblest united with a dignity and self-poise which lent a charm to his presence and made him hosts of friends, and even disarmed to a certain extent the criticism of political opponents. In the heat of party politics, characterized so often by unjust assaults upon personal character, I do not remember to have heard or read any charge reflecting on Mr. Hendricks's integrity. Certainly, if any such charge was made, it fell harmless at his feet. His private life was above reproach, and his example a beneficent influence in the community in which he lived. The loving tenderness of Mr. Hendricks's domestic life has made his memory in this respect a sweet savor wherever happy homes are recognized as the citadel of national virtue and the hope of the world.

While Mr. DINGLEY had neither the physical presence nor the fluent manner of a magnetic public speaker, and while he did not possess the quality and flexibility of voice upon which successful oratory depends, nevertheless he spoke with marvelous effect, and never assumed the floor but to instruct and enlighten and thereby to mold the judgment of his colleagues. With the subtle arts of oratorical suggestion he was not conversant. He belonged rather to that small group of public men who represent the progressive tendency of the age toward intellectualism.

The sphere for forensic discussion grows steadily narrower as the life of the American people becomes more and more complicated and its problems more difficult. The demand for sheer intelligence becomes greater. The work of the committee has, to a large extent, already supplanted open discussion. The wide and accurate information of the student is needed to-day rather than the insidious graces and poetic suggestions of the orator. The entire country has changed since the days of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun. And in this respect Mr. DINGLEY, I repeat, belonged rather to the advancing tendency. For I take it we are coming to the time when a great memory, clear thought, and profound learning in the affairs of state will be indispensable qualifications of those who aim to attain to usefulness in this body.

But NELSON DINGLEY possessed more than a great intelligence and a capacity for toil. He was justly esteemed as a citizen and a man. He had strong, pure affections that bound him to his country and to his friends like bands of steel.

> He seemed the thing he was, and joined
> Each office of the social hour
> To noble manners, as the flower
> And native growth of noble mind,
> And thus he bore without abuse
> The grand old name of gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY possessed in an eminent degree the quality which we well name integrity, wholeness; for he was never two or many persons, but everywhere the same. To whatever position he was called, NELSON DINGLEY was always self-identical. He championed upon all appropriate occasions not only noble, but the noblest principles within his knowledge. His character had but few blemishes and many excellences. He was in the truest sense a religious man and could with perfect consistency say that for him "religion is life or neither is anything." He left all word battles and dogmatic narrowness to men of smaller minds. Beliefs were to him simply rules of action, attitudes toward the world. He seemed to be above all mere partisanship, whether ecclesiastical or political. His affiliations with the institutions of his time were the natural and inevitable outgrowth of his convictions. In all things he seemed, like Abraham of old, to seek for "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

It was this which gave to his life and character its unusual unity and poise. He stood—

> Like some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
> Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm.
> Though 'round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
> Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

In my personal intercourse with Mr. DINGLEY, during the last two Congresses on the Committee on Ways and Means, of which he was chairman, I, like many of you, came to think of him with esteem and affection. His kindliness and patience, his industry, and his great ability profoundly impressed me. I had come to rely upon his judgment in many things, and the news of his death brought with it a sense of personal loss.

I know of no sincerer compliment which the living pay the dead than their sorrow; and as for NELSON DINGLEY, with all my heart I wish he were living still. There was, there is, no simpler, gentler, manlier man.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when the members of the Fifty-second Congress, in December, 1891, assembled in this historic Chamber and cast lots for seats, it so happened that Mr. DINGLEY, of Maine, did not hear his name when called.

The result was he had to take the one vacant seat in the rear row after all others had been selected. My name was called early in the drawing and I had selected seat No. 27, on the Republican side, now occupied by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. FLETCHER.

Being a new member from a new State, I really preferred the back seat which had fallen to Mr. DINGLEY's lot.

Next morning he accepted my offer to exchange seats.

No. 27 was the very seat which he had occupied for many years in preceding Congresses.

This little incident, so insignificant in itself, is now cherished as one of the happiest episodes of my Congressional life. It gave me the acquaintance and good will and in time the friendship of one of the noblest, truest, and purest minds and characters that American statesmanship has ever developed. He was always so helpful, so kind, and so thoughtful of us new members. Our admiration for and appreciation of him grew with the passing years. We of his own political household followed him unfalteringly, sometimes walking by faith more than by sight, through the years when our party here was in a hopeless minority. We rallied around him with confidence and courage when a turn in the wheel of political fortune made him the floor leader of a triumphant majority. In victory or in defeat he never failed us.

He knew well political history, the sources of revenue for the Federal Treasury, and the objects for which the public money could properly be expended. His accurate knowledge and comprehensive grasp of public affairs commanded our respect, and his integrity of character won our unbounded confidence.

Respect for his knowledge and confidence in his integrity gave to this man his commanding influence while living, and they will insure for him an earthly immortality in the Pantheon of his country's history.

The encouraging thought in connection with such a life is that the renown and success achieved by him were due to neither wealth nor hereditary rank, nor yet to any peculiar great natural gift of oratorical or other intellectual endowment not vouchsafed to common mortals.

The homely virtues that made him respected and loved are the potential heritage of every American youth.

Knowledge is acquired and can be acquired by all who are willing to pay the price in patient, persevering, self-denying study. Integrity does not even have to be acquired. It is an original patrimony, possessed by all who do not intentionally or negligently throw it away.

It may be news to some, but it is a fact that the "Congressional Temperance Society" is the oldest temperance society in America. For sixty-five consecutive years it has held aloft the banners of temperance on the battlements of this Capitol. For the last half score of years or more Mr. DINGLEY has been our president. We shall sadly miss him at future meetings. But the cause must not suffer. Other hands must seize the colors he relinquished. "The workman may fall, but the work must go on."

Wherever assigned to duty he did his work well. Appropriations, commerce, and the national defense by land and sea each claimed his attention and responded to the touch of his guidance in a manner always calculated to enhance the happiness and prosperity of the people and the enduring glory of the Republic.

But his greatest achievement, for which his countrymen, and especially we of his own political party, will ever cherish his name and memory, was writing upon our statute book the revenue law of 1897, popularly, and very properly, known as the Dingley law.

All his associates on the committee labored faithfully and industriously on certain schedules; Mr. DINGLEY mastered every detail of every schedule.

When our work was concluded, he remarked one day that we had done three times as much hard work as any committee had ever done on any tariff bill before; and he knew, for he had served on the Ways and Means Committee during the revisions of 1890 and 1894.

Soon after completing these arduous tasks the Spanish war came on, necessitating the levy and collection of hundreds of millions of additional revenue. How wisely the crisis was met, both in strengthening the public credit and in levying the necessary additional taxes where they produced the least hardship, the present condition of our industries and finances amply attest.

The honor of these achievements are due, not exclusively, but largely, and I might say mainly, to Mr. DINGLEY.

Then, when summer vacation came and the rest of us scattered to the seaside, the mountains, and the prairies for rest and recreation, renewing our health and strength for the labors of another year, Mr. DINGLEY went to work harder than ever in the service of his country on the Canadian Joint High Commission.

The intellectual and spiritual man shone out brighter and stronger than ever, but the physical broke down. The pitcher was broken at the fountain.

As literally and as cheerfully as ever a soldier died in battle did this hard-working, model American statesman give up his life in the service of his country. Peace to his ashes. Blessed be his memory.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, when a good man dies his country feels the shock. When one who has been useful to his generation suddenly departs, mankind involuntarily say: "What shall we do now?" The Hon. NELSON DINGLEY was both good and useful in such wonderful degree that he was great. If all the people of America could know how true he was to duty, how diligent to every detail of their interests, how faithful to the country's cause, how genuine in character, how gentle in his disposition, how solicitous for the public welfare this man at all times was, to-day would be universally observed throughout the land in paying tribute to his memory.

But he was not covetous of notoriety. His voice was not heard far, though the fruit of his intelligence and labor falls in rich abundance wherever industry prevails. He left the richest legacy of his ability and industry in the legislation of his country. Every citizen is his legatee. Men will enjoy the benefits of his toil and maybe never know his name nor comprehend his thought. The wheels were spinning and the axles whirling on the day of his demise. Labor has received increased rewards, and the faces of its children, once haggard with the marks of hunger, are gleaming now with joy—unconscious tributes to the wisdom and the usefulness of him whose loss our nation mourns.

To this faithful servant of our country, to this gentle, truthful comrade of every earnest Representative in the Congress of America, I pay the tribute of a constituency who appreciate essential worth and genuine manhood, who understand the value of good deeds, the vanity of praise, and something of the loss our country suffers in the death of one like him.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, it is a melancholy duty, and yet a privilege not to be foregone, to speak a word touching the exemplary life of the friend and colleague who has so lately passed from us—of him whose amiable personal qualities, exalted attainments, and national distinction endeared him to us all in so great a degree.

What little I shall add to that which has already been so well said by others deals particularly with a phase of his career and character which came under my direct observation in my experience as a co-worker with him in the public service.

NELSON DINGLEY, Jr., entered Congress as the successor of Hon. William P. Frye, from the Second Maine District, two years before my entry here; but even those two short years had enabled him to take a prominent rank in the House. From that date until his untimely death a few weeks since, I witnessed with pleasure his rapid rise in the confidence of his party and the esteem of the House, and his continuous growth in great usefulness to the country.

He has gone from us so recently that it is hard to realize that his familiar presence is not among us still, and even harder yet to know that we shall never more see him in his customary seat in this Hall, or at his post on the floor, or in his wonted place at the committee table. It is painful to adjust ourselves to the stony reality of fact with respect to his departure—painful to think that he has gone irrecoverably on his long journey to

> The undiscovered country, from whose bourne
> No traveler returns.

Mr. Speaker, it is altogether idle to say merely that we miss him, that we shall always miss him, that the peculiar place he occupied in our regard and affections can never be filled by another just as he filled it. The bonds of tried friendship and the ties of warm comradeship can not be thus broken asunder in a moment without a cruel shock of surprise and grief. In the endurance of such a calamity the heart recovers but slowly, and time alone can heal the sundered ligaments and soothe the throbbing of the anguished nerves.

Yes, he has gone from us so recently that his personality is as fresh before our minds as though we had heard him bid us good morning but an hour ago. We can see before us his frail figure, clad in the scholar's black; his grave and sensitive countenance, touched with the "pale cast of thought;" his dark, eagle eye, beaming with intelligence and kindliness; his black hair and beard, his nervous hands, his quick movements, his unassuming manner, his cheerful, reassuring presence.

We all know that his temperament and disposition were alike lovable and rare. All his instincts were kindly and humane. He was utterly devoid of malice. His heart was warm and gentle as a woman's, and his conscience as delicate and keen. None of us, even in the acrimonies of debate and in the fiercest struggles in the legislative arena here, ever heard an unkind word fall from his lips. His temper was of the sweetest, inoffensive, beneficent. So far as my own knowledge and observation extend, all outward manifestations of anger, resentment, and irritation were unknown to him and to his conduct in life. He never considered or treated public questions from the personal side or from the private or individual standpoint. On the contrary, his treatment of such questions was invariably abstract and impersonal, whether they were distinctly political or public in a wider sense.

Governor Dingley had exact and accurate knowledge upon a greater variety and a wider range of subjects of public concern than perhaps any contemporary in public life. His invaluable store of knowledge was the harvest of long years spent in patient study and investigation after a manner exclusively his own. So far as his habits of work were concerned, the dominating and distinctive characteristics were his extraordinary industry, his method, his system, his economy of time, and his utilization of opportunity. He was a tireless student, an indefatigable investigator, a close observer, a clear thinker—

Deep and slow, exhausting thought,
And hiving wisdom with each studious year.

Possessed of richest stores of information on almost all public questions, he never wasted them on unworthy objects or diverted them to idle uses, but employed them effectively and brilliantly when the suitable occasion presented. His memory was wonderful, and equally so was that complementary faculty, his power of analysis. He had the seeing eye and the trained hand; the sense to discern and grasp essential principles hidden in the mass of external wrappings. In addition he had a strong synthetic or constructive faculty, which he put to the noblest use. Indeed, his equipment for the public service, by reason of his thorough knowledge and practical experience of so many things, was such that he had few equals and no superiors in numerous lines of intricate legislative work. And he left the clear impress of his strong individuality upon much of the most important legislation enacted by Congress within the past fifteen years.

In a strictly political sense Governor Dingley was an intense and uncompromising partisan. But as a statesman, exercising his talents in a larger field, he was an ardent lover and a potent champion of good government for its own sake; and as such he was always ready on adequate occasions to subordinate partisan advantage to the public welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I had myself the best opportunities of knowing this and of becoming intimately familiar with his character and methods, through my close association with him on the Committee on Appropriations, and particularly through my still closer association with him on what is commonly known as the "Dockery Commission" to reconstruct the accounting system of the Government—when we labored together without interruption during a long interval, and always in the completest confidence and most perfect harmony.

The so-called Dockery Commission was organized by the act approved March 3, 1893, continuing for two years, and consisted, on the part of the House, of Governor DINGLEY, JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee, and myself, as chairman, and on the part of the Senate of FRANCIS M. COCKRELL, of Missouri, SHELBY M. CULLOM, of Illinois, and JAMES K. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. James C. Courts and Mr. Thomas P. Cleaves, clerks respectively of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, serving as invaluable aids.

In pursuing its labors the Commission largely relied upon the sound judgment of Mr. DINGLEY. He united in a peculiar degree, legislative and executive capacity of the highest order. Night after night, for a period of two busy years, we met, either in the room of the House Committee on Appropriations or in some one of the rooms of the Treasury, working out, with scrupulous care, the details of the new accounting system, whose great object was to expedite the accounting methods of the Government, to secure economy, and yet to retain at the same time all necessary safeguards.

That exceedingly important work—for it must be so regarded, dealing as it does with the expenditure of more than $500,000,000 annually—was antagonized at almost every step by those who were led to believe that the marvelous advance and progress of the century could find no exemplification in a governmental accounting system. It was also opposed by that other large class who feared displacement from public position by reason of improved and up-to-date business methods. Although confronted with this opposition, oftentime from his own political friends, Governor Dingley never wavered. Indeed, the Commission was unanimous in all its findings—an agreement at the outset having been made that nothing should be reported to Congress unless it had the sanction and accorded with the united judgment of all the members of the commission. A great many reforms were accomplished during those two years.

The new accounting system, however, the most important fruit of the Commission's labors, went into effect October 1, 1894, and has had the indorsement of all the officials charged with its execution. The Commission, by a simplification of business methods and by dispensing with a cumbrous mass of "red tape," was enabled to effect a reduction of expenses for all time, amounting specifically to $607,591 every year. Indirectly this saving exceeds $800,000 each year. And it is a source of sincere gratification to me to be permitted to pay a deserved tribute to the memory of Governor Dingley for his hearty, unselfish, steadfast, and efficient cooperation in the accomplishment of this result.

Mr. Speaker, Governor DINGLEY was my personal friend. The friendship established now nearly sixteen years ago was strengthened with the passing years. Great changes in the membership of this House have occurred since I first made his acquaintance in December, 1883, at the opening of the Forty-eighth Congress. Of the Representatives of the House at that time, only seventeen are now members of this body—Messrs. BINGHAM, ERMENTROUT, BRUMM, and HARMER, of Pennsylvania; Messrs. REED and BOUTELLE, of Maine; Messrs. CANNON and HITT, of Illinois; Messrs. PAYNE, RAY, and WADSWORTH, of New York; Messrs. HENDERSON and HEPBURN, of Iowa; Mr. BLAND and myself, of Missouri; Mr. STEELE, of Indiana, and Mr. LANHAM, of Texas.

All the others have gone—some into the busy activities of private life, but many, very many, have preceded DINGLEY to the Great Hereafter.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in concluding this tribute to the memory of my friend, Governor DINGLEY, I declare, in the language of sincere affection, that he was honest, capable, incorruptible, and faithful to every public duty.

Life! I know not what thou art,
But this I know, that thou and I must part;
And when or where or how we met,
I own to me 's a secret yet.

Life! we 've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear—
Then steal away—give little warning;
Choose thine own time: say not "Good night!"
But in some brighter clime bid me "Good morning!"

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, for nearly twelve years I was acquainted with Mr. DINGLEY as a member of this House; for nearly four years associated with him on the Committee on Ways and Means. During all that time it was my pleasure to live while in Washington at the same hotel where the distinguished leader resided. Thus I came to know him in a social and friendly way beyond what is the privilege and opportunity of Congressional association. Others may speak of his distinguished public service, his influence and direction in this House, his wise and able legislation, his eminent qualities as a statesman. We all recognize the worth and the distinction of his publ c career.

But I would be amiss to my own keen feeling of love and regard for the departed friend if I failed on this occasion to bring tribute to his memory because of the affectionate, kindly, helpful character of the man in all the associations and actions of his private life. Every day doing the work and carrying the burdens of public service, yet every day he was mindful of others and helpful and cheery for them. His public service was performed without parade or bluster. His friendship and his assistance to those with whom he daily met and lived was quietly and constantly given. His character and influence and encouragement all flowed out as wellsprings of vigor and stimulation into the lives and into the hopes of those who knew him and among whom he lived.

Mr. EVANS. I yield to others the pleasure of speaking of Mr. DINGLEY in more elaborate terms, and shall limit myself to a few brief remarks about him as I saw him during the four years of my active participation with him in the labors of this body and of one of its important committees.

In giving my estimate of him as a man and as a public servant I shall indulge in no mere extravagant laudation, but shall endeavor to rate him at his real worth to the country.

I knew Mr. DINGLEY for something over fifteen years, though not at all intimately until I came to the House and began my service as a member of the great committee of which he for four years was the eminent and efficient chairman. From the beginning of his chairmanship in the Fifty-fourth Congress great and important duties developed upon him, and before the expiration of that Congress, inasmuch as all the Republican members of that committee had also been elected members of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and as the Presidency had also fallen to that party, the work of preparing a tariff bill to supersede the act of 1894, known as the Wilson bill, was actively begun by those members under Mr. DINGLEY's guidance and leadership.

It was a long, a tedious, and a most exacting labor, extending over several months, but by the 15th day of March, 1897, when the Fifty-fifth Congress convened in extraordinary session, the draft of the new tariff bill, which was to take his honored name, was ready to be submitted to the new House. How skillfully he guided it through all its subsequent parliamentary stages is known to all.

It was for labors like these that Mr. DINGLEY's equipment was superb. In all the fiscal concerns of the Government he was remarkably expert and preeminently useful. These great matters of the first practical importance to the country claimed and always received his most faithful and intelligent attention. Indeed, it is much to be doubted whether within the present century any statesman has appeared more thoroughly equipped for the work involved in such legislation. His knowledge of all fiscal affairs and of all that pertained to them—statute law, practice, rules, and regulations—was astonishingly thorough and accurate.

While his powers as a mere orator were not conspicuous (measuring oratory by ordinary standards), no one commanded more attention when speaking to the House, and this was because what he said was sure to be most thoughtful, accurate, and wise.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have sometimes thought that if of any man of our day it could be truly said that he had been worth his weight in gold to his country that man was NELSON DINGLEY. The value of his services, not merely in saving money to the Treasury, but in devising ways and means of getting it there without oppressing the people, was incalculable. In the list of great men who have been chairman of Ways and Means and leaders of the House he takes a high and most honored position.

He was a man not only of remarkable assiduity in the discharge of any duty, but of equally remarkable good judgment. His convictions of public duty were profound, his devotion to the public service most sincere and conscientious, and no man in the country more sedulously strove for the public welfare.

In fact, to labor for his country was his meat and drink, and his life was probably as certainly sacrificed to this as if he had died on the field of battle.

As a parliamentary leader Mr. DINGLEY had great skill and judgment, and his influence over the House was supreme. It was the leadership, too, of kindness and confidence, and not of harshness or truculency.

His private life and virtues were known to all men. No breath of scandal ever touched him.

Mr. Speaker, a truly great man has been taken from Congress and the country. The country suffers, his friends and surviving relatives deeply grieve, this body will long miss him and lament the absence of his wise counsel, but "through the gloomy portals of death" Mr. DINGLEY himself "has entered the radiant temple of enduring fame."

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, all men would do well to talk and think much of death if they could thereby "tear one terror from the grave." The dread of death has reached and abides with all men; the thought has found its way into the elementary law books that men die intestate because they imagine that the making of a will brings them nearer the tomb. Indeed, any human condition is "a paradise to what we think of death."

On the 28th of February, 1843, the President of the United States and his Cabinet and many members of both Houses of Congress went aboard the steamer man-of-war Princeton to watch the workings of her two great guns, which threw balls to the weight of 225 pounds. One of her great guns exploded. The Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of State, and many other prominent men in the public service were killed. The gloom and sorrow of that day of death of the great forced reflections on the public mind of the instability and shadowy fleetingness of the pursuits and contests of life. Many who had fallen from the shock and were unconscious upon reviving testified that they had gone through the experience of a sudden death as if from lightning, which extinguishes knowledge and sensation.

Such an one knows what it is to die without feeling it, and such a death is nothing to him that revives. It is taught in the friar books that if any part of the human body is pressed or tortured we can then best imagine what the pains of death are when the whole body is corrupted and dissolved. Yet death passed, in the case of the explosion in the Princeton and blowing up of the Maine, with less pain than the torture of the finger's end. It may also be that the most vital parts are not the quickest of sense. Men too often forget in contemplating the dread monster that God has armed all his servants with forces that disarm death and extract the dreaded sting.

Stoic philosophy has lifted the black veil from death's abiding place and given to the weakest passions of the mind the power to mate and master the fear of death. Therefore, death is no such terrible enemy when a man has so many attendants about him that can win the combat over him. Revenge triumphs over death; love slights it; grief flieth to it; and Seneca adds that "a man would die though he were neither valiant nor miserable, only upon weariness to do the same things so oft and over and over." I ask, in the light of the character and services to the Republic and humanity of our great leader here, NELSON DINGLEY, who can say that a mind fixed and bent upon the loftiest conceptions of man's duty in high places occupied by him is not in a large measure freed from the dolors of death? We all know that he that dieth in earnest pursuit is like one wounded in hot blood—he is unconscious of the hurt.

Yes, it is a blessed prerogative the Creator has given man that in the path of righteousness and lofty aims there are attendants he can summon on the last battlefield of life to mate and match death. Death hath also this glorious attendant—it openeth good fame and extinguishes envy. But as an excellent musician can not utter himself upon a defective instrument, so death in its second kind office can not open good fame nor extinguish criticism in a man without the traits of nobility of character. Evil fame deserved is blacker than death, and death can not reduce a mountain of human folly. Indeed, there is a lingering, living death, more to be dreaded than the dissolution of the body. Who can imagine a greater calamity, a greater pain than that which overtakes a man who, though living, doth follow at the funeral of his own reputation?

'Twere long to tell and sad to trace
Each step from splendor to disgrace.

Such a life, if not a living death, is like "the young Venetian's scorpion girt with fire"—

As do the dark in soul expire,
Living like scorpion girt by fire,
So writhes the mind remorse hath riven,
Unfit for earth, undoomed for heaven.

No, 'tis not the length of days, but the goodness of them that makes a great life, that can destroy the sting of death. NELSON DINGLEY came fully up to the highest standard of a Christian philosopher's ideal of a great life. The last years of that life on the earth were his greatest.

In no sense did he follow at the funeral of his own reputation. He constantly advanced up the ladder of human excellence and usefulness to the end. I saw much of his intellectual power displayed in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses. To clip from the Journal and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the doings of the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, would mar the strength and beauty of these two sessions much more than to eliminate the work of any of his associates. The distinguished gentleman from Maine, the present Speaker of the House, once remarked to a member who inquired of him how the members from that State retained their places so long, "This, sir, is easy of solution; we increase our majority at every election."

Mr. DINGLEY deserved such continued increase of majorities at the polls because by his industry he daily increased his stock of information and enlarged his capacity for usefulness. It is indeed a high mark of merit to be named chairman of the Committee of Means and Ways of the House of Representatives of the United States. The work of the committee is perhaps greater now than at any prior period. It will possibly go into history that he was the greatest chairman this greatest committee ever had up to the day of his death. As a party leader Mr. DINGLEY possessed every quality of heart and head necessary for that delicate task. Superb reasoning powers, knowledge, and judgment were the lordly qualities that made him great. He was not an attractive speaker so far as the possession of mere oratorical gifts was concerned.

Despite certain infirmities of voice and want of a commanding presence that many of the great American orators possess, whenever he spoke he commanded to a remarkable degree the attention of this large body. In fact, no member ever gave attention to him on the most abstruse questions that have arisen here without being benefited. This vast fund of information which his indomitable energy and will placed at his command enabled him to obtain the ear of most members even in the most excited debates. His influence on the side of the House of which he was the acknowledged leader contributed much to good order. Large legislative bodies can only be kept in order by the staid judgment and steady purpose of one thoroughly equipped in parliamentary law as its presiding officer. And this would fail in a House composed of strong political organizations without a prudent, skillful leadership of each organization as an auxiliary to the presiding officer. The excitement founded in political struggles for supremacy can not always be kept without these wars. Here intemperate expressions in the heat of debate often stir both sides of the House to the point of frenzy quite as much as the debates at the hustings.

The angels were all singing out of tune
And hoarse with having little else to do,
Excepting to wind up the sun and moon
And crush a runaway young star or two.

Congressmen are not freer from excitement and tumult than Byron's "angels." The calm, philosophical temperament of NELSON DINGLEY in directing debate has often been of great value. Under his influence "tumult dwindled into calm." NELSON DINGLEY was a very great man. Often the allurements of exalted station and intellectual superiority displayed in purely mental contest, and other honors to which great minds aspire, root out of a man's life any recognition of Christianity. DINGLEY was great in the fiercest conflicts in this Chamber, but greater in his loyalty to the demands of morality and Christianity. That man is indeed an ideal statesman and Christian who stands the central figure in both politics and Christianity at the same time.

The armor which his great pure life had thrown around him possessed no weak spot that invited the shafts of malignancy. Since I have occupied a seat here I have attended two conventions, one in the interest of temperance, the other of the Sabbath. At each there were learned and pious bishops and many clergymen of exalted piety and learning. NELSON DINGLEY stood among them as he did among his fellows in this Chamber. The greatness of his public life as a patriot was more than equaled by his exalted purity of character and loyalty to truth as a Christian. It can not be that this is the end of this great life; the spirit that tenanted the form of NELSON DINGLEY must live forever.

An ancient legend fitly presents the end of his life: The India fig tree, having grown to the period of fruitage, is said to let its branches fall down to the earth, whereof she conceived again and they became the root of their own stock. So man, having derived his being from the earth, first lives the life of this tree, drawing his nourishment as a plant, until, made ripe for death, he tends downward and is soon again in his mother earth, but receives quickening for the eternal life.

But here 'tis done—all words are idle;
Words from me are vainer still;
But the thoughts we can not bridle
Force their way—without the will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we honor and mourn a bright and noble character, one that all of us knew, for its burning light so shone before men that they might see his good works.

He was every inch a man in force of character and strength, activity, acumen, and accuracy of mind, yet kind, sympathetic, and tactful as a woman; the best conditioned and unwearied spirit in doing courtesies, unflinching in his firmness and energy, with the fervor and hope that know no obstacles; possessing blended dignity and simplicity, force and gentleness, fire and judgment; full of the most varied knowledge, but never proud or intolerant of the ignorance of others; always a follower of conscience, and never yielding to prejudice; eager and yet controlled; restlessly active, but always patient; devoted to the great principles of the party that he loved and led, but never partisan; adroit as a politician and parliamentary leader, but always frank and absolutely true.

Thus he commanded the unfaltering allegiance of his party and the love and trust of every member of whatever shade of opinion, each of whom feels in the death of NELSON DINGLEY that he himself has lost a personal friend and that a pillar of the Commonwealth has fallen.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with the Hon. NELSON DINGLEY began in the fall of 1865, at his home in Lewiston, while I was a student at the academy in Auburn. He was then 33 years of age, strong, vigorous, cautious in business, but a spirited journalist and an enterprising publisher, intent on building up a newspaper that should meet the needs of the whole State and place before its readers editorial views pitched on the highest plane of right thinking.

Already a prominent figure in his city, in his church, and in his State, he was gradually extending his influence throughout the adjoining Commonwealths, standing out conspicuously as a type of that Pilgrim character whose influence had given New England its commanding position and whose principles had been extended across a continent.

In all respects his life conformed to the high ideals which he had early accepted for his personal guidance. He attended with conspicuous regularity the services of the church, took an active and most interested part in home and foreign missions, and performed with scrupulous care all the labor which such devotion to the cause of religion placed upon him, yet without narrowness or bigotry, and untouched with the slightest taint of cant or pharisaism. He was likewise deeply interested in charitable and reform movements, his voice and his pen being at the ready command of whatever promised good, and was in accord with the best judgment of the best men.

At this period, too, he was about entering for the fourth time the lower house of the State legislature, of which he had already been twice speaker, a position that gave him rare opportunity to reveal a character for integrity and fairness and a judgment as excellent as it was substantial. He was much interested in politics, and undoubtedly most ambitious for its honors and its opportunities. Probably no man in Maine watched or studied with keener interest the great problems of national finance and reconstruction. The editorial pages of the Lewiston Journal evidenced the serious attention its young editor and proprietor was giving to these important questions, showing that even then, although sixteen years must elapse before he was to enter this House, a foundation was being laid for great usefulness whenever he might be called to this broader and more inviting field.

But, Mr. Speaker, his ambition, however well defined and persistent, never influenced or swerved him an iota from the principles governing his daily life. He was then, as ever after, absolutely temperate in his habits, yet so modest in the application of principle to conduct that he gave no offense to those who desired for themselves larger personal liberty in a Commonwealth that had set its seal of disapproval upon the customs and habits which had formerly, though comparatively to a limited extent, obtained in the Pine Tree State.

It was at this time, too, well understood that his business and political methods squared with his well-known character for right living. The Golden Rule governed his conduct on Monday as well as on Sunday, no business project, although illuminated by the glitter of much gold, no political scheme, however promising to present or future preferment, being allowed to divorce him from this principle. And the people sincerely loved and respected him for it.

Mr. Speaker, it may be safely asserted that no man at the age of 33, living at any time in any State, ever held a firmer place in the hearts and the confidence of the whole people of a Commonwealth than did Mr. DINGLEY in 1865 in the State of Maine. This is the more remarkable, perhaps, when coupled with the fact that he had been out of college but ten years.

Probably with equal confidence can it be asserted that such regard was based almost wholly upon his well-known character. His ability was fully recognized, and the painstaking thoroughness for which he has been conspicuous in this House had manifested itself while yet he was in college. A careful speaker and profound thinker, he shared the honors of debate with the ablest and oldest men in church council and legislative hall, while as a journalist he was easily classed with the editor and brilliant Congressman whose home was then in Augusta.

But the conspicuous regard shown Mr. DINGLEY and the people's willingness to trust and honor him, to accept his judgment, and to rely upon his leadership was due largely to the fact that he was then, as ever after, an ideal man in all that goes to make up sterling character. With him character was born, not made, and right action seemed as natural and as unconsciously taken as a breath of mountain air. Doubtless he had his temptations, but the world was not permitted to see so much as the footmarks of the struggle.

Yet he was in no sense austere or narrow or severe. He had no criticism for neighbors. If his life differed from theirs, he seemed unconscious of it. Affable, kind, remarkably sympathetic and gentle, he mingled freely with men of all sorts and conditions, without mannerism or affectation—a plain citizen whose life had been seamed with toil and sweat, who had known obscurity and battled with adversity, who claimed no superiority and sought nothing that was not readily accorded him.

Although one of the busiest men in Lewiston, he easily found time to listen to the wants of young men, students who flocked to the academy in Auburn and to the college in his own city, taking ample time, before giving advice, thoroughly to understand their situation, their needs, their aims, and their possibilities. At such times the one sentence that he oftenest repeated, drawn doubtless from his own experience, was the necessity for hard, conscientious, persistent work, without discouragement or change of purpose, along lines that offered the most attraction.

To a student of 19 Mr. DINGLEY seemed not 33 but 60 years old, so varied and important was his work, so high his standing, so interested in all movements touching life, so rich in experience, so devoted in his attentions, so wide in his acquaintance. He was already a trusted adviser in the municipal affairs of his city, a favorite of the president and trustees of the college that graduated him, an important factor in the councils of the Congregational Church, and the welcomed guest of every town and city in his State.

Mr. Speaker, it can create no surprise that such a man at 33 should be at 66 the respected, the forceful, and the patriotic leader of this House, recognized not only in Maine and New England but throughout the whole country as an able, conscientious, and conservative statesman. He was not a mosaic. He grew as the tree grows, round and full, on lines of its creation, so that the end was known from the beginning.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I bring my tribute to the memory of a great man, who, during my brief service here, was always kind, helpful, and accessible to me.

NELSON DINGLEY, of Lewiston, Me., and the United States of North America, died at Washington, D. C., Friday, January 13, 1899.

His life had been one of continuous, laborious progress, and he died at the period of his greatest usefulness.

He was a New Englander by origin, nature, and nurture.

Mr. DINGLEY's life results are an illustration of the saying that "The gods sell everything to labor."

His genius was the genius of hard work.

In his boyhood his father kept a country store at which everything except liquor was sold.

His parents were opposed to every form of strong drink, and their convictions in this behalf became their son's convictions, so that his life from beginning to end was a temperate life.

He was not only temperate as to appetite, but temperate in speech.

He could be indignant, but could rule both pen and tongue.

In the office of the Lewiston Journal, with which he first became identified editorially in November, 1854, it is remembered of him that when any writer upon that paper was inclined to strike back because of some personal attack he would say: "Young man, write out what you have to say as hotly as you please, and then notice that such stuff is excellent to kindle the fire."

He purchased a half interest in the Lewiston Journal in 1858, and since that time, it is said, that though absent from his editorial desk, first in the legislature of Maine, second as governor of Maine, third in Congress, a week has seldom passed when the Journal has failed to receive from him contributions or advice.

He was encyclopedic and minute in his knowledge of our history. He could carry the reports of our governmental departments in his memory, and when called upon to write or speak upon some event which had suddenly projected itself for immediate and accurate consideration, without time for consultation of authorities, he was equal to the emergency.

This training, this constant studiousness, fitted and ordained him for the work he performed in his public career as governor and legislator.

He was admitted to the bar in 1856, but left the profession of law to enter upon newspaper work.

He was six times member of the Maine legislature, beginning in 1861.

In his second term he became speaker.

He held the office of speaker twice and declined it once.

He was twice elected governor of Maine and declined a third nomination.

Mr. DINGLEY first came to Congress in 1881 to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of WILLIAM P. FRYE, and since that time he has steadily represented the Second district of Maine in this body.

Declining the position of Secretary of the Treasury under this Administration, his services as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means are a conspicuous part of our current national history, and—

> If what we call
> The spirit flash not all at once from out
> This shadow into substance, then perhaps
> The mellowed murmur of the people's praise—

may yet ascend to him.

Mr. DINGLEY was not an orator, but he was a great debater.

He had been a debater from his boyhood up; first in the old-fashioned lyceum in his native town; next in his father's country store, where local statesmen congregated to discuss all sorts of affairs, local and national; and then in the State and national legislatures.

He had not the form or voice for oratory, but he had tremendous perseverance, inexhaustible energy, and an endless store of facts made available by a splendid memory.

His physical strength seemed frail. His voice was not far-reaching in speech, but what he said traveled far beyond more robust utterances, because of the inherent power of what he said.

It would be difficult to name any important legislation in Congress in the last fifteen years with which he has not been identified.

His long service, in cooperation with the long service of other Maine Representatives, has made the comparatively small State of Maine a power in the national councils.

In school, college, and public service he pursued the same painstaking, steady, studious, and laborious course.

As a boy, it is said, he preferred one of Webster's speeches to any novel, and mastered Whately before he was 20.

He was a religious, temperate, methodical man all his life; but his whole studious temperament was illuminated and softened by warmth of love for his family and friendly regard for his neighbors and associates.

He kept a diary in which it is said he made daily entries "from the age of 10 years to the date of his last sickness."

And no man who knew NELSON DINGLEY could fail to know that his daily entries in this book of life were all honorable and without dishonorable mental reservation.

He lived up to his designation of Honorable.

As he acted out and wrote out the story of his life day by day, he made for himself "more stately mansions" in thought and statesmanship.

He was not a creature of opportunity—he moved forward steadily and laboriously, performing the task at hand, which when finished had merged his energies into another greater task.

Life, with him, was a perpetual, studious evolution.

When opportunity knocked at the door of NELSON DINGLEY, it found him already bending over his task, not startled by the revelation of new avenues upward, but ready to move on, simply, unostentatiously, and inevitably.

Out of the mist and murk and dreariness of January weather he has gone where—

> Beyond the path of the outmost sun, through utter darkness hurled
> Further than ever comet flared or vagrant star-dust swirled,
> Sit such as fought and sailed and ruled and loved and made our world.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, after the elaborate reviews of the public life and services of Governor DINGLEY to which we have listened I desire only to add a few words of tribute to the fame of a man for whom I not only had a high respect, but also a warm personal affection.

One of my earliest Congressional acquaintances when I first came to this House ten years ago was NELSON DINGLEY. His death was a personal bereavement to all who knew him well.

Ready at all times to give the benefit of his advice and counsel, he was always the friend of the new member, and I esteem myself fortunate to have acquired his personal friendship at the beginning of my Congressional life.

Where any public man makes his mark he gives evidence of his previous preparation for his public career. In the hurry of official duties at every step he will show his previous preparation or its lack.

Governor DINGLEY's thoroughness was his great characteristic. He was not a meteor, but shone with the steady persistence of a fixed star.

He was always listened to by his colleagues because he only spoke when he had something to say. He showed the depth of his capacity by his continuous power of mental endurance. In private life the most lovable of men; in his public relations he was respected by all. He never yielded to the temptation to say unkind things in debate. His statements on all questions were accepted without question by his political opponents as well as by his friends. His deductions or conclusions might be controverted, but his statements of fact were never colored nor distorted.

> The purest treasure mortal times afford
> Is spotless reputation.

It has been noted by all old members that when Governor Sayers, of Texas, made any statement from the Democratic side of the House it was accepted without question by his political adversaries across the aisle. Governor DINGLEY's word from the Republican side passed among the Democrats with the same unquestioned verity. Two men could not be more unlike, and yet both were held in the same esteem by the opposing sides of the Chamber.

The political views of these men might be antagonized, but never was any fact misstated or its effect shaded or discolored for the purposes of debate by either. Such men do honor to political life and only lead us to regret that it is so difficult to fill their places. Maine and Texas honor themselves and the whole Union by choosing such men to represent them.

As one of Mr. DINGLEY's political associates and a firm believer in his doctrine, it was with pleasure that I heard of his selection as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and that his name would be linked with the new legislation which I believed would result in good to our country. I hope and trust that the Dingley law will do all that its supporters have predicted, and that the name of our deceased friend may be indissolubly linked with an era of national prosperity unequaled by any in our previous history.

Even those of his colleagues who hold entirely different views from those on which Governor DINGLEY's industrial legislative work must rest will join in saying that if any such legislation can prove to be a success they would rejoice to have it known as the work of the statesman whose life and death we commemorate to-day.

This is neither the time nor the place to discuss the respective merits of the principles that Governor DINGLEY espoused.

But the friends and the enemies of his policy alike unite in saying that there has been no abler exponent of the doctrines of his cause in the history of the Republic than the principal framer of the Dingley tariff law.

In every political campaign since I have been in Congress I have circulated his speeches among the people of the district which I represent. I selected his presentation of his party principles because of their clearness, perspicacity, and eminent fairness. His plain, clear, vigorous English was understood by all, and the man who read one of those speeches, though firmly opposed to the views expressed, could not fail to admire the speaker, and to at least respect the cause that was susceptible of such generous and fair presentation.

Mr. DINGLEY wisely, I think, put aside the proffered portfolio of the Treasury to become the author of the most important legislation that Congress can be called upon to frame.

In this hour the man himself shines out from among the architecture of his life's work, and we delight to think of him as the good citizen, the faithful husband, and kind father.

Was his death timely?

He fell in the full vigor of his mental strength, loved and honored by all that knew him.

No slow decay of powers made his body a mere prison house for the soul, but when his fatal sickness came it found him full of life and eagerly at work.

His tireless mind was always busy.

Measured by what he did, his life was long indeed, for he left his impress on his country's history. His name is no longer on the roll call. He no longer leads his party; but he has left an influence upon his country's history that will endure.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, this day has been set apart for loving tributes of friends and associates upon the life, character, and distinguished services of our great leader, NELSON DINGLEY.

Others have told you of his home life and the sweetness and all-pervading influence of his lofty character; of his early public work, and of his entire mastery of the great problems of state so vexatious to many and yet so yielding and pliable under the influence of his master mind; some have spoken of his methods of thought and his deep devotion to any duty falling to his lot.

I can not hope by any words of mine to add to this sublime summary of his life work, in which all agree with singular and spontaneous accord; but, Mr. Speaker, as a young member of this body, I desire to pay my weak tribute to this masterful mind, this storehouse of knowledge, this fountain of information, to which we have so freely gone for wisdom, instruction, and refreshment. Gentle, loving, kind, and indulgent, not a young man in this House that has not drank from his fountain of wisdom and been refreshed and instructed thereby.

In this busy forum, in which he has borne such a distinguished part, amid the distractions and perplexities of his official life, I can not now recall a single hasty dismissal, so common to busy men; but with patience, toleration, and kindness, sublime in its simplicity, he gave willing ear to our ungenerous claims upon him, until, borne down by responsibilities which no one could help him bear, his strength gave way, his lamp of life flickered and went out, casting a gloom over the official life of this nation.

In his death the young men of this House have lost a safe and willing counselor, the country a tried and true public servant, and the party with which he was identified a most sagacious, honorable, and worthy leader. In his devotion to the public service he has left us a priceless legacy, a blameless life. His memory will make this Hall fragrant for all time, and the sweetness of his character and relation to his fellow-members will prove a perpetual benediction to us all.

There are waves far out in the ocean
That never will break on the beach,
And hearts filled full of emotion
That finds no expression in speech.

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, nothing that may be said or done here to-day can either add to or detract from the eminent abilities, the devotion to duty, or the nobility of character of the distinguished dead whose memory we all fondly cherish and whose loss we so deeply deplore. The name and fame of NELSON DINGLEY have already been made—honorably made, made by himself—and they are imperishably enshrined in the hearts of an appreciative people. We who have been his associates and friends in this Chamber may only to day bear witness to those verities which have already been recognized by his countrymen, and thus once again pay our tribute of affection and esteem to the nation's honored dead.

It has been truly said respecting men that "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." What shall we say respecting our departed friend? What would he say if he were here to-day in his accustomed place? Manifestly there would be but one reply: "Whatever distinction or greatness that may have come to me have been acquired by a lifetime of constant, patient, persevering toil." This also, I submit, must be our conclusion. We had watched him rise in times when greatness was not won by chance, and in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon his name and memory. And now that he has been taken from our midst, his sturdy manhood, his splendid abilities, his generous heart, each and all impress us with the magnitude of our loss.

Mr. Speaker, some men attempt to rise in this world by pulling other people down. This can not truthfully be said, it never will be said, of our departed friend, for no man ever rightfully sought him who was not the recipient of his generous, helping hand. Every step in his pathway, from obscurity to greatness, was honorably, manfully won; and when at last, here amid the scenes of his greatest achievements, he laid aside his burden of responsibilities and cares, there was not a single envious or unfriendly eye cast upon it.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my province to pronounce a eulogy upon the life and character of our departed leader. That office were better bestowed upon those who have known him longer and better than I.

But I can not forget, sir, that his voice was one of the first that came to me as a new member of this House. His words were dignified, fearless, and true. They made an impression upon my mind that I shall not soon forget. And now that his lips are silent and cold, I shall cherish his precept and example as a precious benediction and friend.

It was my sad duty, as one of the funeral committee representing this House, to accompany the remains of Governor DINGLEY to his home in the State of Maine, to the city he loved so well, to his neighbors and friends who had so signally honored him and who loved him so well.

No bray of trumpets, no glittering pageantry, witnessed the approach of the funeral train; but our precious dust was committed to tender hands and to loving hearts in a manner that was in keeping with his modest, unostentatious life.

We buried him amidst the scenes of his childhood days—days that in some respects are the happiest and dearest to us all. Not in the din of the loom and the spindle, for on that sad day the wheels of industry had ceased to revolve, the noise of business was hushed, the voice of partisanship was dumb; but we buried him in the silence of a sorrowful, stricken city, and under countless wreaths of flowers that were as pure, as sweet, and as beautiful as was his life.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative from Indiana, a State contributing her share of eminent men in the sweep of our national growth, I esteem it a distinctive honor to speak a sincere word of eulogy upon the life and public services of this great son of Maine. In so doing, it is proper to say that the death of no other public man except Oliver P. Morton, upon whom my youthful mind had looked as the colossal figure of my native State, has seemed so nearly a personal affliction as did the going forth of Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, trained from earliest childhood in sentiments of respect for my seniors in age, I am of those who entertain almost a reverence for a great and good man who is full of honors in a life devoted to sacrifice and service.

We can not cherish too sacredly or boast too highly a just pride in our worthy public men. A great ship propelled with its utmost capability, a limited express in its reckless whirl, cause us to start with wonder and admiration.

But see a man in action! Quickened with his conscious power, clear and regal in his equipment of knowledge, courageous in meeting his duty and faithful in its performance—this challenges and inspires praise, this suggests the force applied to evolve and develop the ship and the train—this is the demonstration of mind superior to matter. To those familiar with the long public service of Governor DINGLEY must be left the pleasing task of analyzing his great character. I can but briefly touch upon the impressions received and the estimate formed of our distinguished friend from my entry to this body in the Fifty-fourth Congress. Being small of stature and disposed to retiring manner, there was little in the outward man to betoken his greatness.

The quickness of his movements must have been noted, his indefatigable industry understood, his honest and earnest face studied, and his versatile knowledge attested by his words of wisdom in both private and public utterance to appreciate fully the real measure of the man.

With all his absorbing versatility in public affairs, he will be remembered as the leader easiest of approach. Unlike many men eminent in position, he showed an interest in the newcomer to this great body. To those of us honored with seats near him, his cordial and cheery "Good morning! How are you?" will abide in memory as a testimonial to his kind-heartedness.

Mr. Speaker, the career of NELSON DINGLEY is a most conspicuous instance of the result of a patient and painstaking industry. Born of indigent parents, his course was destined to be run and fashioned by his own effort. His mother had been a schoolteacher and blessed him with encouragement to study. This early direction to the young mind, which nature had formed in a serious mold, developed the impetus, the application, and investigation which characterized him in every undertaking. He taught school to assist himself to a college education. His life began as it ended, in contact with arduous service. The last day he sat in this House, that on which we adjourned for the holiday recess, I said to him, "Governor, are you going home to enjoy the holidays?" "No," he answered, "my time has lately been so taken up with attendance in the House and with the labors of the Joint High Commission that some of my work has gotten behind and I shall stay in Washington during the recess and bring it up."

Little did we think as these words were uttered that within one short week he would be in the toils of the fatal pneumonia. It was work, work to the last with him. Thus is his an illustrious example to our youth of the excellence of great labor. Whether as editor and proprietor of the Lewiston Journal, which he owned from 1856 to his death, as member of the legislature, as governor of his native State, or as Representative in Congress, where he served above seventeen years, his paramount purpose seems to have been that his work should be performed with fidelity, thoroughness, and effect.

No man living had the grasp on the details of our revenue operations or kept more closely in touch with them than he. Since the enactment of the great tariff law that bears his name he followed its operations with the solicitude and pride with which a father observes the growth of his child. Men of all shades of politics agree that in his passing from us a calamity has fallen upon the country. This period needs the service of our wisest statesmanship, and he was preeminent in that class.

Those who knew him best will cherish his memory most. Patient and unassuming in his relations with men, yet able, forceful, and brave on occasion, he commanded the respect and confidence of all. He was devoted to his family as husband and father as he was to his country in service. He was pure and upright in speech and life, showing forth the qualities of gentleness and kindness to the weak and the poor, thus practicing the Christianity he professed. His mind was honest, his purpose lofty, his long service dedicated to the good of his State and country. It is not surprising, therefore, that as the honored leader of his party in the American House of Representatives NELSON DINGLEY attained such distinguished position that political relations were forgotten in the genuine sorrow felt by all his colleagues at his untimely death. It is difficult to realize that he has gone not to return. I hesitate to think of such a man as dead. I believe he is exalted to a better life, and I lay this simple tribute to his memory as I would drop an immortelle at his tomb, and thank God for his sojourn among us.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am at this moment designated as one to give his voice in this chorus of sacred amens. I am not filling the place of an eulogist. That office is permitted to those who know of the birth and the life, who speak of the character and the work of this dead statesman whose name and memory the House mourns as it honors. Unto me alone is offered a privilege which I accept with graciousness. I am one of the new members, the "one-term member," speaking. It is as one of the young men and for them that I bring forth this tribute.

It may be that those whose impulses overcome reflection shall charge my following expression as rash. It is that I do not concur in the sentiment that death is untimely. I hold that in the great temporal theater of events each scene is shifted by a guiding hand. Never a curtain falls save in response to the bell. To me the very fixedness of earth, the race of the planets, the burning glow of heat and the cold light of the stars yield obedience to the law of order and of time.

"If the stars have their time to shine
The flowers to wither in the cold wind's breath,"
For it there is a time—
As well as all of time for death.

I would not have it understood that I hold that death is merely timely in itself. Rather would I know, rather would I feel and have it expressed that unto those who die it is timely. There can be no act of Nature or of her children that is without a purpose. Death serves some men well, both in its occurrence and in the time of its choice. In the obedience to Death's demands the subject complies with the law, and thus obedience, though inevitable, has its reward. The reward is seldom visible to the eyes of those whose loss seems irreparable. It can not be appreciated by those whose grief forbids philosophy; but time, the test of events, speaks the consolation and proves the wisdom of the end as well as the blessing of the time.

Some men live so long and under conditions which forbid their due appreciation by their fellow-man. This works a deprivation to the children of their generation following. It denies them the sacred light of exalted reflection in which to walk and be known. The deeds of such great, covered by the increase of minor events and hidden by the multiplication of increasing detail, is as have been great lights submerged in fog and beacon gleams lost in mist. When a man has lived so long that in the slow but unerring and unabating graduation of life he reaches all the perfections which the world allows and closes the best act of existence with his exit from the theater, what more is to be desired? Who of us would not rather such to be our termination than to endure the recall or to be destined to play again amidst others who are the center of the admiring eye, the sole voice of fickle praise? This seems like the philosophy of Epictetus. I place it shortly in the language of the Greek:

Let me not live an ignoble life to die, to be forgot,
Thrust foully beneath the earth, like a worm to rot;
Rather let me in some glorious deed expire,
That distant ages may the deed admire.

Mr. DINGLEY closed the most important epoch of his life with his death. He concluded the most important event that could occur in his life and bowed himself out, as the player who speaks his best and then gives to his audience the adieu. Masters of finance, ministers of revenue, creators of the muniments of the nation's wealth have invariably been cursed by their immediate generation—seldom blessed. Mr. DINGLEY created and gave to his nation the expression of the system producing the finance into the body of his nation—the two arteries which in time of war have been told us are the life springs, "money and iron."

Necker, in France, and Peel, in England, lived to see the fulfillment of their theories. No other lives of modern day can we recall who were gladdened with the sight of the realization of their own system as devised by them for the salvation of their country in the hour of peril. Those who have been given the privilege to devise the method of a country's guidance while serving here have been few. The world's greatest ministers of finance have been those who are in cabinets, who were the administrative officers.

But when in the coming years youth shall turn the pages of history to mark who in our legislative halls that laid the foundations of revenue saw the realization of their effort and obtained from the public expression of his nation the approval of his method, the indorsement of his views, and the acceptance of his results, he shall be confronted with the two epochs, the late civil war among the States, and recall Morrill, of Vermont; and then the war between Spain and America, and recall the name of NELSON DINGLEY. "A great name, next to a great act, by nature herself cemented, and joindered by time; orders the act itself to die, but by the melt of time, when can an act expire without oblivion, when its event is of the glory of war or death? It survives to eternity."

Mr. Speaker, it is known that in the political differences permitted under our form of government I entertained varying views to those expressed by the distinguished dead. Therefore it is not of his views nor of his work which I memorialize; it is of the man, his manner of kindness and gentleness, of indulgence to those who needed his friendship and were dependent upon his forbearance—the new member, the young man. When one enters this House, he finds an atmosphere filled with jealousies, envies, contentions, sometimes bitterness—all times opposition and suspicion. These are born from the mutual ambitions of men, spring from the individual aspirations of the race, are natural to the zealous impulses of the man himself.

This House is well illustrated by the story of the Egyptian vipers in the Alexandrian pitcher, each struggling to get its head above the other where the room will permit but one head at a time, yet in the blind and maddening squirm careless of the death sting inflicted upon the other in the conflict. In such scenes, where shall the new member who has not yet inherited opposition or party animosity—to what source shall he turn, if not to those who may lay aside their ambitions, pause from their aspirations, stand above self-adulation, and be beyond his self-admiration in order to serve and to accommodate—yea, to befriend—those who may need?

It was this spirit of the distinguished dead which attracted me. The humblest man in this House could not address an inquiry without receiving the courteous and dignified response. The most embarrassed member in the most confusing moment could hope for the suggestion of rescue and the kindly prompting of encouragement from Mr. DINGLEY. His years of service to country and to self taught him that those who sometimes bend rise higher than ever when recovered; that they who serve are served to the best.

So thoroughly was he without the jealousies which prevent recognition of merit in others; so devoid of envy which denies the admission of capacity in others; so broad and generous in his appreciation of his fellow-creatures, that to him genius in youth was a light which was beautiful, ability in age was a source of his constant respect, and wisdom from experience was his ever unfailing refuge. All of this was to him a part of the great endowment of his Master. For these to him, particularly in others, were a part of the world's property which he always admired, ever applauded, and constantly enjoyed.

Sir, seldom given to fulsome compliments or unnecessary adulation, he yet found it often agreeable to say to the humble member struggling for little place that his work was well done. This left many a young man touched with his considerate and measured praise feeling himself—

Laudari a viro laudatus.

To be thus praised by the praised did more than flatter self-esteem; it gave confidence to strength and purpose. It was never lost to him who gave, and yet it was twice blessed to him who gave and to him who received.

Mr. Speaker, it is of these qualities in which the figures of speech are neither necessary nor defensible, the expression of which the plainest of words convey the most. Of these I speak. I speak as one of the young members and of the young men who were the recipients of some of the generous kindness in his unselfish nature, which to-day any flattery would wound, not soothe, his "dull, cold ear." For this I am compensated.

Sir, in days to come, as the recurring sessions will bring men here, and as the closing day will take them from us, as the too oft mock and ceremonious form of eulogy will be presented in this House, still, sir, no man will have more said of him, however much, than that he was a just man.

Be this writ upon the tomb. To his virtues let no higher eulogy be sought. None higher could be written on earth, none better finds its way to heaven.

Through the aisles of earth, where the lamp of character ever swings its incense, perfuming the air, no odor so rare and sweet, no gleam so gentle and so pure, as that which shall be given generations to come by the lives of such as this glorious dead, who leaves its walks filled with the memory of justice and its course bright with the light of truth. Public virtue in public life, private character above reproach, the Christian man, who looked upon mankind as brother and turned ever to God as the giver of all, surely such is after all the noblest and best example from which youth may pattern and the highest which civilization and the world's immortality can contribute to man's existence.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, the sense of bereavement by the death of Mr. DINGLEY is not confined to those who enjoyed an intimacy with him. It is not strange that an affliction which has no lesser limit than the boundaries of the country itself should in this body excite a deep feeling of grief among all its members. It is fitting, therefore, that a sentiment so universal should find corresponding expression.

Nowhere is there a more profound sense of loss in his death than in the State of Massachusetts. He was familiar with all her activities, understood her people, and sympathized with her aspirations as fully as if he had been born and had lived upon her soil. When I entered Congress Mr. DINGLEY was the unquestioned leader of his party upon the floor of the House. The slow, steady, and laborious steps by which he attained that position have been described by others. I did not witness them. I did not see him ascending the hill. I saw him only after he had reached the summit. Yet the manner in which he conducted himself there left no uncertainty concerning the methods by which he had reached that place.

Without the arts or graces of the orator, or that indescribable quality which invokes enthusiasm and commands personal loyalty, he wielded undisputed sway through the more solid qualifications of wide and accurate knowledge, of the power of clear statement and cogent logic, and of purity of motive and character. He was a bold man who, on either side of the Chamber, dared to contest Mr. DINGLEY'S position upon any public question not involving differences of party politics. He was a foolhardy Republican who ventured to dispute his leadership on questions of party policy.

Early in his life he measured with accurate foresight the possibilities of his career, and with prophetic vision foretold to himself the things which the future had in store for him. His life presents one of the few instances in our history of men who, having deliberately prepared themselves for the problems of practical statesmanship, have found the opportunity of dealing with them upon a magnificent scale; who, having accumulated an abundant store of knowledge, have been given a chance to use it all in the service of the people. He pursued the study of the law and obtained admission to the bar with no thought of practicing the profession, but with the purpose of thus best disciplining his mind and preparing himself for the activities of the life which he so clearly foresaw. The training of his profession of journalism he constantly utilized as a preparation for the public life which he entered early and followed till the end.

The sense of personal grief which oppresses us all, great as it is, is overshadowed by the conviction that his untimely death was a public calamity the extent of which can not be measured now by words, but will be felt with increasing force for many years to come. As the new problems, born of our changed conditions, come, one by one, to face us, who is there who does not miss the kindly counsel, the sagacious speech, the wise and conservative leadership of NELSON DINGLEY? For what he has done his place in our history is secure. But the need of the present and the future for him, and the void which his death has caused, can be understood alone by those who have served with him in the councils of the nation and whose undying respect and affection he had won.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I can claim no very intimate individual relationship with the lamented deceased or any knowledge of his private life except as I gathered the same from proximate circumstances surrounding his sphere of public duty. I have frequently walked with him from the House to his hotel, and learned something, in a small way it is true, of his general customs of life. I also went with his associates to assist in paying the last tribute of respect to his mortal remains at his home at Lewiston, and saw something of the adoration with which his neighbors cherished him as a citizen, neighbor, and statesman.

From the different standpoints from which I have viewed him I would say the distinguished deceased was what the world would call a phlegmatic temperament—that is, he regarded life as a chain of serious connecting links, which demanded his incessant and sincere attention.

He lived after a fixed régime. He did not poison his blood or brain with intoxicants or narcotics, avoided the gluttony of club life and the blasts of inclement weather and the coarser dissipations common to the contemporaries of his generation, and yet I am inclined to the belief that he became a martyr to his official duties, that through constant and unyielding application of his mental powers to his official duties his nervous system was seized with a blight that invited the fatal disease that caused his untimely death, an overlooked but fatal dissipation, but an unselfish one.

His temperament was of that species which had no side tracks of diversion; he possessed no visible mirthful strain to fertilize and rejuvenate his wasting powers as his daily task proceeded. The world will not record him as one of its oratorical specimens, and yet he possessed some of the highest qualities of oratory, traits without which no one can be an orator. He had the remarkable and most choice gift of thinking clearly and logically, and therefore his statements were rare gems of concentrated clearness and specific directness of purpose. Whenever a great question was pending, all desired to hear him, a true criterion of real oratory.

He had none of the condiments or ornaments of oratory. He was not gifted with satire, a ludicrous descriptive power, or the keen shafts of repartee. He was not an actor or resonant declaimer, and therefore was not an entertainer, except as unvarnished and incisive wisdom and clear information on current topics entertained his fellows.

In many things he stands as a rare example for emulation among statesmen. He led his great party on the floor of the House without seeking to lead it. He received the designation as the most fit among his colleagues from his distinguished colleague of his own State, the Speaker, probably without request and probably without any desire on his part, but because of preeminent fitness. None envied him; none were jealous of him by reason of an acknowledged superior fitness to which all of his associates gracefully bowed.

To his exemplary temperament, persistent industry, loyalty to duty, and integrity of purpose his eminent standing was but a necessary resultant. No one claimed for him any distinctive superiority by nature over the generality of his colleagues. Nature had given him the ordinary capacity usually dealt out in in a well-distributed form, and it was he that so developed and husbanded his resources that he found himself well in advance of the general procession of those inheriting like capacities and opportunities when death overtook him. He laid down his burdens after his long and laborious journey in this House with everyone of his associates a sincere and sympathetic friend and all acknowledging that in his death the nation suffered a great loss.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, representing in part the great metropolis of the nation, I would be false to my nobler impulses and to the people I have the honor to represent if I did not on this sad occasion place on record my poor tribute of esteem, of respect, of affection, and of admiration for the late NELSON DINGLEY. His death has left a void in the House of Representatives which can never be filled, and the announcement of his unexpected demise fell like a pall on the people of the Republic. His loss is a national calamity, and the country has lost a useful, an honest, a faithful, and a conscientious public servant. We miss him now, but we shall miss him more and more as the weeks and months come and go. No one can take his place.

There are many here who knew Mr. DINGLEY better and more intimately, but no one respected him more than I did. I became acquainted with him when I came to Congress four years ago. In a very short time I was impressed with his sincerity, his honesty, his courtesy, and his industry. He was an indefatigable worker, and he accomplished great results. He was patient, tireless, and methodical. He seemed to be the happiest when he was the busiest. He died a martyr to his fidelity—to public duty. He never evaded an obligation and he never shirked a responsibility.

In many respects Mr. DINGLEY was a great man, a great parliamentarian, and a great legislator. His name is connected with some of the greatest laws on our statute books, and the great legislative work he performed will live and redound to his credit as long as the Republic endures.

To those who knew him well he was a kindly, genial man. He was loved and admired on both sides of this Chamber, and his name was a household word throughout the country. I do not think he had an enemy in all the land. He had a lovable character.

Mr. DINGLEY was especially kind, considerate, and courteous to the new and younger members of the House. He made their acquaintance, and was always willing and anxious to aid, counsel, and assist them. No matter how weary or how busy he was, he never refused to listen to the inquiries of the new and inexperienced member, and he always gave him good advice and the benefit of his great knowledge, sound judgment, and vast information. Many here will never forget how kindly disposed he was to them when they first became members of this House. I do not believe he ever turned a deaf ear to any member seeking information on any subject, and this generous characteristic has left a lasting impression on us all and gives us a true insight into his noble nature.

The career of NELSON DINGLEY is one we can all be proud of, and illustrates the advantages and the opportunities of American institutions. By hard work, by industry, by sobriety, and by perseverance he rose from a poor boy to one of the most important, honorable, influential, and commanding positions in the nation. The story of his life has been truthfully and eloquently told here to-day, and demonstrates anew the possibilities of human effort and human progress in this land of equal opportunities. Every hopeful and ambitious schoolboy should read the story of his life and endeavor to emulate his shining example. It must always be a fruitful source of encouragement to every ambitious youth and struggling patriot.

Mr. DINGLEY came of sturdy New England stock, the first American Dingley having come to Massachusetts in 1638. His ancestors were nearly all traders and farmers. He was born at Durham, Me., February 15, 1832. At 17 he was a teacher of a school near his home. A little later he entered Waterville College, and subsequently Dartmouth, where he graduated in 1855 with high rank as a scholar, debater, and writer. After graduation he studied law, was admitted to the bar, but left the profession in 1856 to become the editor and proprietor of the Lewiston Journal, and up to the time of his death he maintained that connection. He was a member of the Maine State house of representatives in 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1868, and 1873.

In 1863, when only 31 years old, he was the speaker of the Maine legislature. He was governor of Maine in 1874 and 1875, and a delegate to the national Republican convention in 1876. He was first elected to the Forty-seventh Congress in 1881 to fill the vacancy caused by the election of Hon. William P. Frye to the United States Senate, and he was a member of Congress ever since. In 1894 he received the degree of LL. D. from Dartmouth College, and at the time of his death was a member of the Joint High Commission to adjust the differences between the United States and Canada. In the Fifty-fifth Congress he was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the leader of his party on the floor of the House. His name is best known to the country at large on account of its association with the tariff act, which he prepared, reported, and passed at the beginning of this Congress.

This briefly sums up his career. His life was a busy one, and to the student and investigator will always be an instructive one. He was a simple Christian gentleman, and his public and his private life is without a stain. He loved books and art and science. He was a great legislator and a great statistician. He had finance and taxation at his finger ends. He was familiar with every detail of government, and his capacious mind was a storehouse of useful information. He was a deep and thorough student, and he exhausted every subject he touched. He had a wonderful knowledge of men, and his grasp of details was marvelous. To him figures and facts were as keen tools to the skilled artisan.

Mr. Speaker, many of us frequently differed with Mr. DINGLEY in regard to political and economical propositions, but we all admired his ability, his learning, his tenacity of purpose, his deep conviction, and we all respected his sincerity of purpose, the purity of his patriotism, and the inherent honesty of his motives. He was a direct man, a positive man, a truthful man, and above all and beyond all he was an honest man. In the years to come he will take high rank as an American statesman. The great work he accomplished as an orator, a writer, a lawyer, a thinker, a legislator, and a statesman will ever be a monument to human effort, human endurance, individual tenacity of purpose, and marvelous industry and perseverance.

He devoted the last years of his life to the service of the people and his country, and they owe him a debt of gratitude that never can be paid. He wrote his name high in the American temple of fame, and history will give him an immortal page. The good he did will live and will ever be a bright and beneficent heritage to all the people of all the land.

NELSON DINGLEY is no more. He fought the good fight; his race is run. He has gone to his long rest. A great nation mourns his loss, and a mighty people, shocked by his sudden death in the zenith of his fame and the ripeness of his powers, put on the garb of sorrow, grieve with those who grieve, and with bowed and reverential heads say, Well done, thou good and faithful servant—hail and farewell.

Mourn not the dead whose lives declare
That they have nobly borne their part,
For victory's golden crown they wear,
Reserved for every faithful heart;
They rest with glory wrapped around,
Immortals on the scroll of fame;
Their works their praises shall resound,
Their name—an everlasting name.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, some eighteen years ago I had the fortune to be associated with NELSON DINGLEY on the Committee on Banking and Currency. This was in the Forty-seventh Congress. Both he and I entered Congress at that time. There are but few left in this Congress who were with us then. Indeed, there are not very many of the prominent ones living. Although in that Congress there were some of the most distinguished men of our country, yet there was not one man who made the impression upon me that was made by Governor DINGLEY.

It seems to me that almost the moment I became acquainted with him he struck me as being a superior man; surely not in his appearance, but there was such earnestness, sincerity, honesty, and conscientiousness in the man that impressed me with his greatness then, and this impression has grown from that day to this.

This was when the financial question was the all-absorbing issue of the day. I did not agree with him in his financial views upon general principles, yet the wisdom and knowledge he displayed would make any man respect him, while his logic was so clear and forcible that it would oft make his honest antagonist doubt and hesitate.

No question of any importance arose in committee that was not referred to Governor DINGLEY, and what astonished me most was that though there were older members on that committee, and while it was his debut in the House, yet the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury were in communication with Governor DINGLEY more than any other member of the committee. In fact, his advice was at once sought by the whole Administration on all questions of finance and revenue.

But his knowledge was not limited to finance alone, and what surprised me most was the general knowledge he had of statistics, political economy, and statesmanship.

There are many men who by laborious study can obtain a knowledge of general principles, and can master them very well; but I have never known a man who was so well versed in every detail, in the slightest minutia of every subject. On the duty to be levied upon imports, as well as internal revenue, he seemed to know the component parts of every article, the chemical composition, the cost, the price, quantity, use, and, in fact, all the most minute details.

Moreover his knowledge was not limited to the question of tariff and finance, but on the subject of the employment and the law that should govern the employment of sailors it seemed to me that Governor DINGLEY knew more about them than the sailors, shipowner, or commanders of vessels. In fact, our coastwise trade, merchant marine, ship building, commercial relations, finance, tariffs, and revenues, each seemed to be an open book to him. There was no man in my experience who had anything like the knowledge he possessed upon all these questions.

He was always so kind-hearted and patient, ever ready amid his great labors to give information. As he was when he entered Congress, so he was when he was stricken down.

It has been said that all men can stand adversity—because they simply must stand it—but it is a feature of greatness when a man can stand prosperity.

Surely Governor DINGLEY had reached a lofty elevation; he became the leader of this House in a sense perhaps never known before, and was looked upon as a safe adviser of all men; all paid homage to his judgment and counsel irrespective of party or faction. That made no difference to him. He was the same NELSON DINGLEY in the height of his prosperity that he was when he first entered this House.

It has been said of Him, who spake as never man spake, that He was so absorbed in the seriousness of His mission on this earth that He was never seen to smile. I will not say that of Governor DINGLEY. In his social relations he had a smile for everyone; but in his work so serious was he and so earnest that no frivolity could enter there. Often in the committee room he showed his aversion to witticism and sarcasm. He was a man too serious, too earnest in his work to be diverted for a moment from his path of duty.

In the death of Governor DINGLEY this House has lost its best adviser, our country its greatest political economist, humanity one of its best friends. Governor DINGLEY died as he lived, a martyr to duty.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I shall neither discuss the philosophy of life and death, nor shall I presume to estimate the just measure of this man's fame. His deservings in American history the wise years will decide, and a later day will give the true as also the dispassionate judgment of his work. To that criterion I am sure he would himself prefer to appeal. One simple word alone I feel like uttering upon this occasion, and that is a tribute to the kindly and helpful courtesy with which he met the requests and made easier the burdens of new members.

As a boy, when I went to college, I was surprised at the utter lack of consideration in the treatment accorded by the older students to the newcomers. All fared alike in this regard, however; and so in the democracy of rough usage none felt any cause of personal complaint. It so happened that after a course at college I went to Harvard University, and was gratified to note that there a different spirit prevailed. Courtesy and kindness welcomed at its portals new arrivals. And likewise, after four years of service here, among the pleasantest memories I have of the House of Representatives is the recollection of courtesies extended and kindnesses shown by men like Governor DINGLEY.

I was much struck this afternoon by the tribute paid to American homesteads by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. He said that the true census of a nation's greatness, the best hope of a republic's security, is not in the splendor of its wealth or the uncounted millions of its people, but in the virtues of which the dead statesman was so conspicuous an example. Governor DINGLEY'S ambition was to administer with integrity, as well as ability, the high places confided to his care.

Therefore, without knowing the late chairman of the Ways and means Committee well, observing him only as a young member will note an older and more experienced legislator, I was impressed with two qualities of his character, qualities that glorify all the other attributes ascribed to him in these eulogies to-day. One was his courtesy and the other his integrity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the sermon delivered by Rev. G. M. Howe, Mr. DINGLEY'S pastor, on the occasion of the obsequies at Lewiston, Me., be published in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The following is the sermon:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: This is not an uncommon scene, for, as some one has well said, "It is the common lot of man to be born, to live, to die, to be forgotten."

And so it comes to pass that a funeral service is one with which we are all familiar, and yet the occurrence is always a sad one.

"Three score and ten are the years of our life,
Or if our strength endure,
They may be four score years;
Yet at their best they are toil and emptiness,
For they pass swiftly and all fly away."

The shock of Mr. DINGLEY'S unlooked-for death came not alone to the members of his devoted family who had watched with tender solicitude by his bedside, but to the nation in whose council chambers he had for so many years been a conspicuous figure.

The deceased by the careful development of his native gifts, his close application to public duty, his kindly spirit and noble nature, won for himself a large place in the hearts of his townsmen and in the esteem of his countrymen.

It can truly be said that it has been the fortune of but few men in the history of this Republic to be so honored and trusted by their constituency as he. This is seen in his repeated reelections to the National House of Representatives. The able manner in which he met and discharged his public duties is familiar to all.

The press has given extended notices of his life and service, and has commented freely upon the eminence which he attained as a statesman and the high regard in which he was held by his associates in Congress.

It remains for me to speak of Mr. DINGLEY as he appeared to me, and I speak of him as a pastor and a personal friend.

I am conscious that men do not estimate alike the worth of a human life, simply because they regard it from different standpoints. It is a difficult task, indeed, to judge a man impartially, for the temptation is to estimate his life in the light of its influence upon our personal interest.

The traits which impress a close friend as beautiful or strong may be considered a blemish or a source of weakness by an enemy.

It is a happy thought, however, that we sometimes come to an occasion like this, when no word of doubt or anxiety is to be either spoken or suppressed, when we feel justified in saying of the departed what we should not have felt at liberty to say to them while they were with us, and what, perhaps, they in their modesty would have us leave unsaid.

It is a relief to the heart to speak as we feel of our loss and to express, in such words as we can command, our Christian sympathy for those whose hearts are broken by this sore bereavement, for the death of a friend beloved always brings a shadow with it.

At the same time we may always gladly recall the past and look forward with bright anticipations into the veiled future, as I am certain we all do this morning, as we engage in these solemn services.

As I stand here I can but feel that he who has been so unexpectedly taken from us has been a helper and teacher to me rather than I to him.

He loved the house of God, he delighted in its services and ordinances, and when present gave thoughtful attention to the instructions given and joined reverently in every prayer offered.

And by his own upright and consistent life he has given inspiration and help to me, even more abundantly than I to him.

I first met Mr. DINGLEY in the autumn of 1883, when, as the representative of this church, he conferred with me with reference to becoming its pastor. The acquaintance there formed, as time went on, ripened into a friendship the influence and helpfulness of which will remain with me as lifelong inspiration, and I shall ever regard him as a type of the noblest manhood.

In him was conspicuously apparent the compatibility of high attainments in the realm of politics with the most unimpeachable character. As a public man Mr. DINGLEY accomplished a great work. He was a man of remarkably clear vision, possessed the highest quality of statesmanship, and exhibited great wisdom in plan and action. But it will not be for this work and for these superior qualities that he will be held in grateful remembrance by his intimate friends and the nation at large, but for the integrity and nobility of his character.

"Character," as has been well said, "is a coin that passes current and at par value in all countries. It is like a gold monetary standard whose value is universally recognized. Posterity estimates men not so much by what they do as by what they were. It honors and reveres those who under some strain have maintained their integrity, whose devotion to principle is their legacy to man and their highest claim to perpetuity of fame."

These are true words, and may be fitly applied to him whose memory we revere and cherish to-day. Few men who for so many years have been in public life and actively engaged in national affairs have made such a notable record as he.

As we contemplate his remarkable career—beginning here in the city where he has made his home—extending throughout the country, covering the State which he so ably and honorably served as governor, and there enlarging until it extended over a nation of 70,000,000 people. Nor was his influence limited by the confines of the Republic. It swept beyond even these, commanding the respectful attention of the world's leading statesmen and affecting, directly or indirectly, the legislation of all the nation. While he was thus pressing his way upward to the high position which he filled his influence was deepening and broadening in the community where he began his eventful career. This commanding influence was not the result of fortune or adventitious circumstances, but was the legitimate outcome of a life "laid in deep and solid foundations and reared in harmonious and enduring proportions."

Such results could have been achieved by fidelity to duty and an unfaltering faith in the rectitude of his purposes. From the beginning of his active life he must have been dominated by the loftiest and noblest of moral ideals. It could not have been otherwise, for while it is possible to so order one's conduct as to deceive here and there an individual, it is impossible for a public servant to deceive millions of people for a generation. No craft how skillfully employed could, for so long a time, disguise the hypocrasy or hide the corruption.

How is this constantly increasing and enduring strength with the vast majority of our people to be accounted for? What enabled our distinguished citizen to pass, without a single stain upon his fair fame, through the varied experiences of a long and peculiarly trying public life?

It was not great intellectual ability, for his was not a preeminent endowment; it was not eloquence, for he had no special gifts as an orator. It was not the charm of a polished manner, for, while he was ever affable and courteous, he had not cultivated the "arts of grace as a means to an end."

What, then, was it that enabled him to attain unto and hold so long the position he occupied in the thought, esteem, and affection of his countrymen? The answer to these queries is found in his loyalty to principle, his devotion to truth, his thorough preparation, and conscientious work. Thus he was ever ready for, and equal to, the demands of the hour and the occasion. By his earnest application to the task in hand, and by his signal success in his chosen field of effort, he proved to the young men of this Republic that—

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

Wherein lay the secret of his character, the strength and beauty of which all recognize? Does not the secret lie in his implicit faith in Christ and His atonement?

From early manhood to the day of his death it was his cherished and avowed purpose not only to know but to do the will of his Divine Master. What a testimony his consecrated life has been all these years to the influence and power of the Lord Jesus Christ! How forcibly we are reminded this morning of the earnest words he used to speak with us concerning the renewing, sustaining, and sanctifying power of the gospel! How vividly we recall his loving exhortation to make the word of God the mass of our counsel and the light of our pathway.

Who of us that were accustomed to meet with him in the prayer and conference room will ever forget the deep feeling he exhibited on an occasion before returning to Congress when he asked the brethren present to remember him constantly at the throne of grace that he might have the strength to meet and discharge his obligations as a public man to the honor and glory of God? And then again, on the eve of his departure for Washington for the last time, how earnestly he exhorted us all, and especially the young men present, to avail themselves of every opportunity to promote the culture of their spiritual natures, and thus build themselves up in the most holy faith, and then added: "If it were my last word to you, I would say make it the business of your lives to build up noble Christian characters, and you will never regret it."

Though his lips are sealed in death, he still speaks to us in the abiding influence of his life—a life purified and sanctified, a life made rich in resources and potent for good through his love for and faith in the crucified Redeemer.

He will be greatly missed in this community, where he was universally esteemed as a friend and a citizen. How he will be missed in religious circles, in our local and State conferences, and especially in our church home, where he loved so much to be, and which he served so loyally! How you who have been accustomed to confer with him concerning questions of state and international problems will miss him!

"His voice is silent in your council hall
Forever; and whatever tempests lower,
Forever silent. Even if they broke
In thunder, silent; yet remember all
He spoke among you, and the man who Spoke,
Who never sold the truth to serve the hour,
Nor paltered with eternal God for power."

He will be missed in the home where, as husband and father, he was greatly beloved. The sorrow of his bereaved family is too poignant and sacred for us to intrude upon it. We can only humbly pray that the sweet comfort of faith may fall with healing grace upon each of these sorrowing hearts. The revolving years may bring to them some "surcease of sorrow," but no compensation for the bereavement which they have experienced. Out of this home to which he contributed so much of light and joy our friend and brother has passed to the untried experiences of the unseen world, there to learn the lesson of immortal being. We leave him there in the presence of the glorified Saviour, whom he loved so devotedly and served so faithfully, and before whom we, too, shall stand at no distant day. Farewell, brother beloved!

The world is lonelier and poorer for thy departure from it, but heaven is richer. The Saviour's diadem is made resplendent with such jewels as thou art. We did not realize that the harvest season was so near. Thou hast gathered thy sheaves, and great were the rejoicings in heaven at thy coming. "The song that thou heardest was the seraphim's song," a song mingled with the glad greetings of the loved ones gone before. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." May it be our portion to join him in the Father's many-mansioned house when the Master shall call!

Sleep thy last sleep
Free from care and sorrow;
Rest where none weep
Till the eternal morrow.
Though dark waves roll
O'er the silent river,
Thy fainting soul
Jesus can deliver.

Life's dreams are past,
All its sins, its sadness;
Brightly at last
Dawns a day of gladness.
Under thy sod,
Earth, remains our treasure,
To rest in God.
Waiting all His pleasure.

Though we may mourn
Those in life the dearest,
They shall return,
Christ, when Thou appearest.
Soon shall Thy voice
Comfort those now weeping,
Bidding rejoice
All in Jesus sleeping. Amen.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I heard the request that the funeral discourse pronounced by his pastor at Lewiston might go into the RECORD. I heard a funeral discourse in this presence upon the day of his obsequies in this House that was brief and excellent and worthy of a place in the history of this country. I ask unanimous consent that those remarks of Rev. Dr. Newman, made in this Chamber, may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. DALZELL]. It has already been printed.

Subsequently,

Mr. COUSINS said: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the consent which was granted that the funeral discourse of Rev. Dr. Newman be printed in the RECORD did not extend to the memorial volume which will commemorate these proceedings. I therefore ask consent that that address be so printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, as the proceedings of this House on the occasion referred to were brief, might it not be proper that the prayer of the Chaplain of the House as well as the discourse referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] be included in the memorial volume?

Mr. STEELE. If my colleague [Mr. FARIS] will allow me, I ask that both the prayers delivered on that occasion be printed in the volume referred to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be entirely appropriate that those entire proceedings of the House, attended as they were by the President of the United States and his Cabinet, by members of the diplomatic corps, by the justices of the Supreme Court, and other distinguished persons, as well as by the Senate of the United States, be printed in the memorial volume. I make that request.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that under the practice of the House that will be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], I ask consent that all members of the House may have leave to print in the RECORD their tributes to the character and public services of Mr. DINGLEY.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. In compliance with the resolutions already adopted by the House, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. DINGLEY, the House now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon Monday.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 13, 1899.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. FAIRBANKS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

RESERVOIRS FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, a report from the Director of the Geological Survey on the origin, character, and extent of the surveys of reservoir sites made by the United States Geological Survey, together with a brief memorandum as to present conditions of water storage, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Select Committee on the Geological Survey, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONNEL OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, estimates of the total annual cost of the personnel of the officers of the Navy under House bill No. 10403 as reported with amendments to the Senate from the Committee on Naval Affairs on February 8, compared with the cost of the personnel under existing laws and excluding any additional force employed during the late war; and also a like estimate of the cost of 22,500 seamen and apprentices, compared with the cost of the regular force of seamen and apprentices; and a further like estimate of the cost of the personnel, including the officers and men, of the Marine Corps under the bill, compared with the cost of such personnel under existing laws, excluding any temporary increase during the late war; which was read.

Mr. HALE. I move that the communication and accompanying statement be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Granite Cutters' National Union of Hallowell, Me., praying for the passage of the eight-hour bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of I. G. McLarren and 56 other citizens of Eastport, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor in canteens of the Army and Navy and of Soldiers' Homes, and in immigrant stations and Government buildings; to prohibit the interstate transmission of pictures and descriptions of prize fights; for the maintenance of the prohibition law in the Territory of Alaska; to provide against the election of polygamists to the Congress of the United States; and to prohibit the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the desecration of the national flag; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Fenimore Chatterton, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled house joint resolution No. 5 of the Fifth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 7th day of February, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.] FENIMORE CHATTERTON,
Secretary of State.

FIFTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Enrolled house joint resolution No. 5, State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the Fifth legislative assembly of Wyoming (the Senate concurring):

1. That it is the sense of this legislature that the bill entitled "A bill to prevent the desecration of the national flag," which bill is now pending in the United States Congress, should become a law.

2. That the Senators and Representative from Wyoming in the Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to lend their utmost aid in securing the passage of such bill.

GEORGE H. GOBLE,
Vice-President of Senate.
LEVI R. DAVIS,
Speaker of House.

Approved February 3, 1899.

I, Fenimore Chatterton, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of senate joint memorial No. 2, Fifth legislature of the State of Wyoming, concerning the letting of star-route mail contracts.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.] FENIMORE CHATTERTON,
Secretary of State.

FIFTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Senate joint memorial No. 2, senate, State of Wyoming. A memorial relating to the letting of star-route mail contracts.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Wyoming, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas the present system of letting star-route mail contracts permits a single contractor to bid on and have awarded to him a very large number of different contracts located in various portions of the country, concerning which such contractor has no knowledge whatever; and

Whereas as a general rule such foreign contractors make their bids upon star routes with no knowledge whatever of the character of the country over which said routes pass or of the difficulty of feeding the horses used thereon or of any of the other difficulties which will confront a contractor in carrying said route; and

Whereas such contractors endeavor to sublet such contracts and to make profit thereon, when, owing to their lack of knowledge concerning the country traversed by said route, they are entirely unable to pay a sum sufficient to warrant a responsible party in subletting said contract, and, in the great majority of such cases, such contracts are sublet to parties of no responsibility whatever; and

Whereas by reason of these facts the service upon such routes is very uncertain and unsatisfactory to the patrons of the several offices located thereon, and such service appears to be growing more and more uncertain and unsatisfactory with each letting of contracts on said routes: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, memorialized for the passage of an act providing that no contract for the carrying of mail upon any star route in the United States shall be, under any circumstances, sublet, but the same shall in all cases be carried by or under the supervision of the original contractor with the Government; and that in no case shall any contract for the carrying of a star route be let to any person who is not at the time such contract is entered into an actual resident of the State or one of the States through which the said star route passes; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, properly authenticated, be, by the secretary of state, transmitted to Hon. CLARENCE D. CLARK and Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senators in Congress, and Hon. JOHN E. OSBORNE, member of the House of Representatives, and Hon. Frank W. Mondell, member of the House of Representatives elect, and to the Postmaster-General.

GEORGE H. GOBLE,
Vice-President of the Senate.
LEVI R. DAVIS,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 8, 1899.

DE FOREST RICHARDS, Governor.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying for the appointment of a commission to treat with the Indians for the purchase of unoccupied lands upon the Shoshone Reservation, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Fenimore Chatterton, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 1, a joint memorial to Congress from the Fifth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 7th day of February, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.] FENIMORE CHATTERTON,
Secretary of State.

FIFTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

House joint memorial No. 1. Joint memorial to Congress.

Your memorialists, the Fifth Legislature of the State of Wyoming:

First. The attention of Congress is respectfully called to the fact that the treaty with the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians, upon the Wind River Reservation, will, within a few months, expire.

Second. That under said treaty the last annuities have been issued to the Arapahoes, and that in the early fall of the year 1899 the thirtieth and last annual installment of their annuities will be issued to the Shoshones.

Third. That these Indians are not in any sense self-supporting and have but limited means of support, and unless relief is provided will soon be in a starving condition.

Fourth. That your memorialists very gravely apprehend the results of such a condition among these Indians.

Fifth. Your memorialists respectfully call attention to the fact that upon said reservation there is a large tract of land which is not used by the Indians and which is valuable; that the Indians are willing to treat with the United States for the sale of the same.

Sixth. That the allotments of lands to the Indians on said reservation are nearly completed and can be so completed during the early spring and summer of the year 1899, and we especially urge that the allotments of said lands be pushed along to completion immediately.

Seventh. Your memorialists very seriously urge that the Congress of the United States do, at the present session, make provision for a commission to treat with the Indians for the purchase of any or all unoccupied lands upon said Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, and thus make provision for the support of said Indians.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying that the rules and regulations governing the forest reserves in that State be so modified as to allow the unrestricted grazing of live stock on such reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIFTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Joint memorial No. 1. Senate of the State of Wyoming. In relation to the pasturing of sheep and other live stock upon the forest reserves within the State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Wyoming That the honorable the Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America be memoralized, as follows:

Whereas the present rules of the Department of the Interior relative to forest reserves prohibit the grazing of sheep and other live stock on the forest reserves in the Rocky Mountain districts of the country; and

Whereas there is great danger that heavy pecuniary loss will fall upon the residents, settlers, and flock masters residing in the vicinity of the various forest reserves in the State of Wyoming by reason of such regulations of the Department of the Interior and by reason of the enforcement thereof; and

Whereas the purposes for which the said forest reserves were established will not be any more successfully accomplished by the enforcement of the said regulations of the Department of the Interior, nor will the objects and purposes for which said reserves were established be thwarted and defeated by the abrogation of the said regulations; and

Whereas a large portion of the area covered by the forest reserves is above timber line, and therefore grass-bearing land without trees, and such portions as are below timber lines are frequently interspersed with grass-bearing parks of various areas; and

Whereas grazing of live stock upon such lands is the best possible protection from danger to the forests by fire by reason of the feeding down of the luxuriant grasses of the mountain meadows, so that fires originating in one portion of the reserve can not spread with rapidity across the grassy areas from one bunch of timber to another; and

Whereas the sheep and other live stock are not "bedded down" or held in the bunches of timber above referred to, but upon the grassy parks and meadows, and therefore do no damage to the young shoots starting up in the forests; and

Whereas fires very rarely start in said reserves from the camps of sheepmen or cattlemen, for the reason that the camp fires of cattlemen and sheepmen are universally made in stoves carried with them for that purpose, by the use of which there is no danger whatever of fires starting; and

Whereas the people of the State of Wyoming are greatly interested in the preservation of the forests of the State, and desire to cooperate with the General Government to the fullest extent in maintaining and increasing the forest area, for the reason that our present and future prosperity depends largely upon the continual supply of moisture in the mountains to supply the streams which irrigate our farms and ranges; and

Whereas the enforcement of the aforesaid regulations of the Department of the Interior will deprive the people of the State of Wyoming of the use of a very large area of the best pasture lands and leave the grasses thereon to go to waste, thereby reducing very materially the amount of live stock that can be carried upon the open range of our State; and

Whereas the reduction of the live stock of the open range deprives that portion of our people who are engaged in farming and grain raising of the best market which they now have for the sale of their produce among the sheep and stock men whose flocks and herds graze these pastures; and

Whereas this great loss to the people of our State will be incurred without in any manner, directly or indirectly, guaranteeing a better protection for our forests; and

Whereas no sheep or other live stock are ranged upon the Teton Forest Reserve, and, from the nature of the country, no sheep or other live stock from this State can be moved off and on said reserve, and the grasses thereon are fed down by the wild game from the National Park in the summer, as is done by the live stock upon the other reserves in this State: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the honorable the Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to so modify the rules and regulations governing the forest reserves in the State of Wyoming as to allow the unrestricted grazing of all sheep and other live stock in such reserves in the future as in the past, except the Teton Forest Reserves, for which no modification is asked; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the state be, and he is hereby, instructed to forthwith transmit copies of this memorial properly authenticated to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America and to Hon. CLARENCE D. CLARK and Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senators in Congress from the State of Wyoming.

JOHN McGILL, President of Senate.
LEVI R. DAVIS, Speaker of House.

Approved, February 7, 1899.

DE FOREST RICHARDS, Governor.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of Local Union No. 184, Typographical Union, of Cheyenne, Wyo.; of Local Division No. 138, Order of Railway Conductors, of Cheyenne, Wyo., and of Local Branch No. 591, Amalgamated Society of Engineers, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the eight-hour bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am directed by the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 321) for the relief of the Berdan Firearms Manufacturing Company, to report it without amendment and to submit a written report thereon. I move that Senate bill No. 672, being a bill on the same subject, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11247) to extend the anti-contract-labor laws of the United States to Hawaii, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6681) granting an increase of pension to Jere Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment proposing to appropriate $35,000 for the establishment at or near Point Arguello, about 12 miles northwest of Point Conception, California, a light-house and fog signal, submitted by Mr. PERKINS on the 4th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

ICE IN POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The joint resolution (S. R. 244) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to meet expenses that may be necessary for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice within the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. I do not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan whether the Commissioners have funds enough to meet the present blockaded condition of the streets in Washington.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will state to the Senator that we passed a joint resolution the other day increasing the amount appropriated by the House from $2,000 to $10,000, and that is all the Commissioners asked for that purpose. That appropriation is now being used. I presume they will require more, but no communication has come from them as yet.

Mr. HALE. The House has concurred in the amendment of the Senate to that joint resolution?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes; it has passed both Houses and the Commissioners are now using that money.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that is enough?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is enough for the present.. The Commissioners may call for more.

Mr. HALE. Of course, as everybody knows, there is an unprecedented condition here. The memory of man does not cover any such condition as Washington is in now.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Commissioners will undoubtedly require more for cleaning the streets of ice and snow.

Mr. HALE. If more money is needed, I hope the Senator will see that it is given in ample time, so that the work in removing the blockade may go on.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amount of $5,000 that it is now proposed to appropriate will enable the Commissioners to go on and break up the ice in the river.

Mr. HALE. I understand that.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11955) to amend sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it back favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Before the bill is read for information, I will make a statement about it. It seems that in codifying the statutes when the Revised Statutes were passed a provision removing the disability of persons who had borne arms against the United States in the civil war, so far as relates to grand jurors and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, was accidentally omitted, and this amendment of the statute is to remove that disability.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, codifying the act of June 17, 1862, which disqualify persons otherwise qualified from serving as grand or petit jurors in the courts of the United States who have taken up arms or joined in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, and prescribing an oath to be taken by talesmen challenged for such cause affirming that affiant had not joined in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, and provides that hereafter no person shall be disqualified for any service in any court or in any branch or department of the Government of the United States on account of participation in the civil war of 1861 to 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I have received a message from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], in which he requested me to give notice that he would ask leave to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, to address the Senate on the McEnery resolution.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5352) creating the office of admiral of the Navy, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I gave notice Saturday of my intention to address the Senate on the McEnery resolution. The notice given by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] will cut me off entirely. I want, before the resolution is voted upon, to have an opportunity to address the Senate. After I had given that notice I remained here two hours or more and supposed that the subject had all passed from consideration, and then unanimous consent was given for a vote on Tuesday. Now, if I am not to say a word but to vote, it seems to me the proceeding is unusual. I did not object to taking the resolution up, and I only want a reasonable time to submit some remarks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that he ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore given be set aside. I make that suggestion.

Mr. HALE. In the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine was recognized to make a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the regular order. The Senator from Nevada will be recognized later. The present consideration is asked of Senate bill 5352, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood that the Senator from Nevada was making some suggestions about what is called the unanimous-consent agreement which was obtained here in the Senate under very peculiar circumstances the other day.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to proceed with the regular order and get the bill through.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What the Senator terms the regular order interrupted the Senator from Nevada, as I understand it.

Mr. HALE. I had the floor and had submitted a report when the Senator from Nevada addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. It was interrupted by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HALE. I had not reported the bill when the Senator from Arkansas gave his notice.

Mr. BERRY (to Mr. HALE). No, you had not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Arkansas was recognized to give a notice, as I understood, at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BERRY. That is correct.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. He gave notice that the Senator from Georgia would desire to address the Senate on the McEnery resolution to-morrow at some hour.

Mr. BERRY. Immediately after the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That brings before the Senate the whole question whether the unanimous-consent agreement is to stand. I have no desire to say anything about it now except that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] gave notice that he should ask that it be set aside. My colleague has not been able to get here on account of the snow.

Mr. HALE. Let me say as to the matter of the order of business that after the Senator from Arkansas had given his notice I presented a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs and was recognized by the Chair, and the bill was laid before the Senate and the Secretary commenced reading it when the Senator from Nevada interrupted the reading. It is a bill nobody will object to, and I think it will be better that we have it put through, and then the Senate can discuss the other matter if it chooses.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say right here and now that this matter of obtaining the unanimous consent of the Senate I think ought not to be taken advantage of in a way that puts Senators in an unfortunate and a false position. It has come to be the only way in which to reach a vote in the Senate upon any subject. It has been recognized by all Senators as being of great value. But if it is to be hereafter sought as a snap judgment on the Senate, it will cease to have its value. That is all I desire to say about it now.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I wish to say right here that I was present when the unanimous consent was given. I have never known in my experience when such consent was given that it was attended with more deliberation and more solemnity than in that case. The Senator from Illinois made a speech of half an hour, in which he arrested the attention of the Senate. There was a full Senate at the end of his speech, and then most deliberately he asked unanimous consent that a vote be taken at half past 2 o'clock on Tuesday upon the McEnery resolution. The Chair submitted the request, and, as was proper, delayed and lingered and waited, and the whole Senate sat here, excepting a few who happened to be absent, and the agreement was made.

It is, as the Senator says, the only way that the Senate reaches conclusions. It is the only barrier the Senate has against the denunciation of the newspapers that it never does business, that after debate the body is always willing to give and always does give consent that at such a time a vote shall be taken; and there is no thing so sacred in the Senate as such an agreement. I have never known it sought to be interfered with because a Senator happened to be absent. I have never known anybody to undertake to interfere with such an agreement, except that occasionally a Senator will ask that it be extended that he may complete some remarks.

But, Mr. President, when this rule of the Senate, this unvaried practice of the Senate, is broken in upon because some Senator does not happen to be present, then the power of the Senate to do business is gone.

It can not be said that the agreement was made in any way by surprise. Senators know that when we have an important matter under consideration and are seeking to get a vote upon it the proposition is sometimes made a dozen times in one day before an agreement is reached. It is made and objected to; in half an hour it is made again and objected to; and in another half hour it is made again, and at last the good sense of the Senate prevails and the agreement is made.

I say again, moved by what the Senator from Connecticut has said, that in my experience in this body I have never known a unanimous-consent agreement reached that was attended by more formality and more carefulness and more notice and with more Senators present than in this case.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, there is no question that unanimous-consent agreements in the Senate facilitate the transaction of business. But there is no doubt either, Mr. President, that the unanimous-consent agreements which we have seen in the Senate at this session have been simply an object of manipulation and management to prevent the transaction of business wherein a majority of the Senate desired to participate.

We had a unanimous-consent agreement as to the time of voting upon the treaty. There were resolutions introduced which it was distinctly understood in the minds of almost everybody should be voted upon before the treaty itself came to be voted upon. But having given a unanimous consent to vote upon the treaty then the resolutions were so handled and managed that it was rendered utterly impossible that we should vote upon them until after the treaty was ratified.

The object of a unanimous-consent agreement is to ascertain and gather the views of Senators, and, if possible, secure a meeting of the minds of the members of the Senate, so as to reach a conclusion. If some of us who had uniformly and persistently and constantly objected to a unanimous-consent agreement had been here there would not have been any unanimous-consent agreement. It is of no personal importance to the Senate that I happened to be absent on that day, and yet it is also true that there were a number of Senators who would have as certainly objected to the unanimous consent as they are alive if they had been in the Chamber, who happened to be absent from the Chamber when the unanimous-consent agreement was obtained.

To what extent, Mr. President, we are bound by that unanimous-consent agreement I do not know, but if a unanimous-consent agreement is simply a method of getting agreements by those happening to be present against the wishes of those happening to be absent that we shall do a certain thing on a certain day, I have very serious doubt whether the business of the Senate is facilitated by such methods.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I desire to say one word somewhat in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

At the hour of 2 o'clock on Saturday the discussion which had been proceeding upon the resolutions ceased. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was taken up. The resolutions therefore were not under consideration, and every member of the Senate had a right to suppose that no agreement would be asked or entered into except when the resolutions were under consideration.

The Senator from Illinois, availing himself of a technical right, upon the consideration of the appropriation bill, proceeded to deliver a speech upon the resolution. At the commencement of his speech he asked for a unanimous-consent agreement that some or all of the resolutions should be voted upon at a particular time. It was objected to. It was objected to by my colleague, and a little colloquy occurred between my colleague and the Senator from Illinois, which showed conclusively to the Senate and to the Senator from Illinois that my colleague intended to persist in the objection at that time and at any future time until at least the resolutions were under consideration.

The Senator from Illinois proceeded to make a speech, in which he threatened the Senate in various ways, openly and by inference, that there would not be much business done until those resolutions were voted upon. My colleague was called from the Chamber upon business connected with the Military Affairs Committee, and left the Chamber without a suspicion that the request would be or could be renewed under the circumstances.

Now, I insist, Mr. President, that no unanimous-consent agreement was ever obtained in the Senate under similar circumstances. It was obtained under circumstances in which those who desired to object had a right to suppose that it would not be asked; and we shall have no more unanimous-consent agreements in the Senate to vote if this method of obtaining them is to be continued.

I do not say at this moment whether I myself shall feel bound by that agreement or not. If I had been present, I should have objected, both on account of my colleague and on account of myself. If Senators who desire to obtain unanimous consent for votes are permitted to look around this Chamber and to see that for the moment Senators they know will object do not happen to be in the Chamber, and interfere with other business to make their requests at such time, this practice, which has become very valuable to the Senate, will not be continued hereafter.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator from Connecticut means by a "snap judgment" or by any "methods by which this consent was obtained." I do know the fact that on successive days a unanimous-consent agreement was asked for. It is not the case with me, but I do know the fact also that there are Senators in this Chamber who would not have cast their votes in favor of the treaty if it had not been understood that there would be a vote on the McEnery resolution or some other of a similar character.

On Saturday the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and others debated the question for two or three hours, and finally the Senator from Illinois, in open session and before the whole Senate, made his remarkable speech. Before that objection had been made, but in a strong speech he led up to asking the consent of the Senate for a vote on the McEnery resolution, and if any Senator failed to be present it was his own fault, and not the fault, of the Senate or of the Senator who asked for the consent. What other object could there have been in the speech of the Senator except to secure a vote on this resolution? In his absence, I repel any imputation upon his motives, and I desire now to give notice that I shall object to any recision of the unanimous-consent agreement for a vote at half past 2 o'clock on Tuesday on the McEnery resolution.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois who is absent is amply competent to take care of himself.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to say one sentence before he proceeds?

Mr. HALE. I would rather finish, and then the Senator can go on, but I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator will be glad that I do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine yields to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. It is simply to state that I have received at this moment a message by telephone from the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] saying that he is ill and prohibited by his physician from coming here this morning, and that he would like very much to have the discussion about the unanimous-consent agreement postponed until to-morrow, when he will be here.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the unanimous-consent agreement which was asked for carries with it a unanimous consent that we shall not discuss this question without the presence of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not see what right—he has a right, of course, to say what he chooses, but I do not see why he addresses that question to me.

Mr WOLCOTT. Because——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, an absent Senator who is sick called me just now to the telephone and asked me to say something in his behalf to the Senate. I stated it as a mere message, repeating only what he had said and adding no comment, suggestion, or criticism of my own. I do not think that it is quite fair, and I do not think the Senator from Colorado will think it is quite fair, to call upon me either to defend or attack that message. I simply delivered it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; the Senator from Massachusetts will not misunderstand me. We have, I understand, a unanimous-consent agreement for taking the vote, given by those who were present in the Senate. We have had notice from the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that immediately after the morning business to-morrow the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is to address the Senate, and presumably to take the time until the unanimous-consent agreement becomes operative; and now we are met with the fact that the Senator from Illinois is ill, so that if we carry out the suggestion made there will be no opportunity of even discussing this matter in any way until the time comes when we are to vote upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not see why my honorable friend should challenge me on that subject.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I had no personal——

Mr. HALE. Let the Senators adjust their differences outside.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We have none, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. We are discussing the matter now, and undoubtedly will continue at some length to discuss it.

I only rose to say that when the Senator from Illinois comes here he can take care of himself against the intimation of the Senator from Connecticut that he watched for the absence of opponents upon the floor in order to make his proposition. I repeat that I was present, as the Senator from Connecticut was not, and I saw the proceedings. I saw how deliberate they were. One of the things the Senator from Illinois did was to call for a quorum that Senators might be present when he made his proposition, and a call of the Senate was made. I do not know who had it called. I know I was called in not long before, and 57 Senators answered to their names.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That was before the speech of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HALE. It was before the speech undoubtedly, but the Senate was here. I do not know but that the Senator from Illinois himself called for the quorum.

Mr. MCLAURIN. It was the Senator from Illinois who asked for a quorum.

Mr. HALE. I so understood. I was called in and found a full Senate, and the Senate remained full. It did not leave the Chamber while the Senator from Illinois was speaking.

As to the point that it was done pending the consideration of an appropriation bill, I will state I never had charge of an appropriation bill in this body—and I have had charge of a great many—when its consideration was not repeatedly interrupted by offers for unanimous consent. It is always considered, when we are running appropriation bills through, that the Senator in charge of the bill gives way for any proposition of that kind. I can recall several instances when agreements have been made on important subjects pending the consideration of appropriation bills. I know of one instance in which it was done when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was in charge of the bill, and I have have had it done when I have been in charge. So far from its being considered as a rude intrusion on the rights of Senators who are away, it is precisely the reverse.

I only have further to say that it is a remarkable thing, Mr. President. There has been talk about agreements being made for voting on these resolutions in order to get the treaty passed, and there has been talk about agreements being violated. I know nothing about those agreements. I was not likely to know anything about them. I knew nothing at the time. I observed what was going on.

But this is true, that when Senators who did know about it insist that a vote shall be taken, there is found a most obdurate resistance on the part of Senators against it; and when at last, acting as the Senate always has done, a unanimous-consent agreement has been given, moved by the representations of Senators who knew what the understanding was, to take a vote at a particular hour named, then again we discover the same obdurate resistance against what has been a settled practice of the Senate.

There is something to me, Mr. President, that has almost the element of mystery about this obduracy. What is it that Senators desire? Why is it that they refuse and resort to every method to put off and postpone and prevent a vote upon these resolutions after it has all been agreed upon? I never knew it to happen in the Senate before, when a unanimous-consent agreement has been made on a pending matter that has been discussed and tried and tried again, that Senators insist and intimate to us that they do not know whether they will be bound by it. I wish I did know the inside of this matter. Why is it that there is this constant, never ending objection to getting a vote on the resolutions?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have not objected to the consideration of the resolution. I made a request in the hearing of the Senator from Illinois, and he perfectly understood it, to have an opportunity of making some remarks on the general subject before I was called upon to vote. I said:

> I wish to say that, under the circumstances, before any resolution is voted upon, I desire to make a few remarks. I want my position understood with regard to this matter. A vote on any one of the resolutions might greatly misrepresent me if I voted for it in its present shape, and if I voted against it my vote might be misunderstood. So, being at liberty, since objection has been made, to be heard upon the subject, I will now give notice that when the resolutions come up, I shall submit some remarks upon the whole subject of the expansion of our territory.

I had given that notice so as not to be cut off from making any remarks. This morning the Senator from Arkansas has given notice that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will occupy the time to-morrow morning after the morning business. I gave notice first. I have had no opportunity to submit any remarks. If without controversy with the Senator from Georgia—I do not want that—I am entitled to the floor to-morrow morning under my notice, then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. While I think, perhaps, by the custom of the Senate the Senator from Nevada is entitled to take the floor when the joint resolution comes up, as the Senator from Georgia is not here to-day and probably will not be here and therefore will not be aware of the probable position of the Senate, I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that he make his speech to-day. Fortunately, we can make speeches on anything in the Senate, and, while the joint resolution is not before the Senate, it may be discussed on an appropriation bill or anything, I believe, that is before it, unless when eulogies are being delivered. I do not know that I remember ever seeing it done on such an occasion, but at every other time we discuss anything we see fit. Now, there is nothing to prevent the Senator from Nevada from making his speech to-day, and then we can vote to-morrow. I think if the Senator from Illinois were here there would be no difficulty in getting the consent of the Senate to postpone the vote for twenty-four hours. I would not like to ask unanimous consent for a postponement in his absence. So I think if I were to make a speech on the resolution, I would go on to-day.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Colorado with his permission. When the Senate adjourns, why not adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. TELLER. That would be entirely satisfactory to me. I think I myself want to take five minutes on the joint resolution, and I am going to take it some time to-day when there is something before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. HOAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. What Senator has the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HOAR. I will wait until he gets through. I was not aware that the Senator from Nevada had the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I will get through in a little time. I am perfectly willing to make the few remarks I have to make to-day, right off or at any time this morning, and get through with it. I desire to put on record my views in regard to this subject before there is any more voting on it, and I am willing to do so at any time. I think it reasonable that I should have that opportunity, and that is all I ask.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wish to enter for one my protest against the doctrine that a Senator is at liberty to speak on any subject he has a mind to, whether it be germane or not germane to a pending question. In my judgment it is a breach of parliamentary law to discuss any question which is not germane to the question then pending. It is true that the Senator speaking, and not the Chair, is the judge whether he be in order or not in that way, because neither the Chair nor the Senate can say whether the Senator may not conceive the argument he is making to be germane or pertinent to the pending matter. It is a privilege which has been sometimes, though very rarely, claimed, and I hope the Senators, instead of undertaking to insist on doing that—as was done Saturday—will obtain, as they always can obtain, the assent of the Senate if they wish to speak on what they themselves think and avow to be a matter not pertinent to the pending question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Illinois asked for permission.

Mr. HOAR. That is what he said. The Senator from Illinois on Saturday first asked for five minutes, or suggested that he wanted to take five minutes. Then I asked that he might be given five minutes by unanimous consent. Then he said he would prefer not to be limited to the five minutes, so that matter was dropped.

I myself have at this moment in my possession the material for a discussion of some of the aspects of this policy which we have apparently entered into by the treaty which it would take three or four hours to deliver. It has been the result of great labor, investigation, reflection, and study on my part. If that is to be the rule, I should like to take those three hours or four hours to do it, appropriation bill or no appropriation bill; but according to my notion of what is the convenient way I do not think I ought to do it, and I protest against anybody else doing it.

Mr. TELLER. I state what has been the rule of the Senate since I came into it nearly twenty-three years ago. When that question once was raised and I was on the floor, it was held here by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, that there was no limit; that there was no such question in this body as speaking germane to a bill, and never had been, as prevails in the House.

Mr. President, that has never been the rule. It is simply left to a Senator whether he will abuse that privilege or not. It is not a matter of any great concern, because I have never yet in my experience in the Senate heard a Senator rise and ask the consent of the Senate to make a speech on a question not before the Senate that he did not get it. I suppose he will always get such consent; but if there should be such a condition of affairs that somebody should object he would be strictly in order, notwithstanding the Senator from Massachusetts, and he would be strictly in line with the best precedents of the Senate for a hundred years if he should proceed to make his speech notwithstanding that objection. No one yet of all those who have ever presided over the Senate has called any Senator to order and been sustained on the ground that he was not speaking germane to the question before the Senate, and I prophesy there will not be a Senator called to order on that ground very soon.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the great Webster and Hayne debate was, according to the Senator from Massachusetts, absolutely out of order, and so have been some of the greatest debates that have ever taken place in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The Webster-Hayne debate was on Mr. Foot's resolution on the public lands.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. And a large part of that discussion turned upon the question whether the representatives of the East in the two Houses of Congress had treated the West unfairly in their votes and policies in regard to the administration of the public lands. It was the question of the right of dealing with the public lands for particular purposes. All that debate was germane. It is true that in the course of that debate, the parties thinking that it was applicable and germane, the question of the constitutional rights in regard to obedience or disobedience to the laws of the United States was discussed.

But the question between the Senator from Colorado and myself is not the question that he stated. I said distinctly, and nobody doubts, that neither the Chair nor the Senate would control a Senator in saying what he chose in order in debate, because neither the Chair nor the Senate can say that in the judgment of the Senator, which must prevail, what he is saying is germane. My proposition is that when the Senator, the judge of that question entirely, is himself of opinion that what he is saying is not germane to the question under discussion, he then ought not to say it; that it is a violation of a rule of order laid down in all the books of parliamentary law and of a rule of the Senate itself, which is governed by the general parliamentary law, to say anything on a subject which is not germane to it, and that it is none the less the duty of the Senator not to violate that rule, but rather more than his duty, because he is the sole judge himself of his application. That I stand by.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to say one word in answer to that. On the occasion to which I refer, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, said the Senator from Colorado would not be in order if in the Senate he were required to speak germane to the subject. I submitted the question then to the Senator. I said, "Am I in order?" The Senator replied, and the RECORD will show it, "The Senator from Colorado is in order, because there is no rule which requires a Senator in this body to speak germane to the question. The House rule does not here prevail."

Now, I want to say a word, Mr. President, about the Webster-Hayne debate. That went beyond all possibilities of being germane to the resolution of Mr. Foot, and such a debate could not have taken place in the House of Representatives at that time under their rules. It was considered legitimate then, and always has been considered legitimate. It has never been considered un-Senatorial or disrespectful or discourteous to the Senate to discuss any question that a Senator thought he ought to discuss on any bill at any time in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I was present on Saturday when this consent agreement was given, and I was present this morning when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] gave notice for the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that he would on to-morrow morning speak upon the joint resolution. It is well known and well understood on both sides of the Chamber that if these resolutions, including the joint resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], were to be debated and considered, it would take the remainder of the present session, there being now, I believe, but fifteen days in which to conclude the enormous unfinished business of the session. If there was anything in that unanimous-consent agreement which was understood and implied, it was that the vote should be taken without interruption of the necessary and pending business of this Chamber, and it was just as much implied that there should be no debate on the resolution as it was that the resolution itself should be voted upon.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to remind him of a fact?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], just before asking unanimous consent, said that he meant to address the Senate upon the resolution at greater length on Tuesday.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not hear the Senator make that statement.

Mr. HOAR. He stated that in my hearing.

Mr. ALLISON. One great objection I have had, and that other Senators have had as to this resolution and kindred resolutions, is that they occupy the time of the Senate without, as I conceive, any practical good. I was willing, and I am now willing, that a vote shall be taken upon this resolution when the hour of half-past 2 o'clock comes to-morrow.

Mr. MCLAURIN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I did not understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in the way the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] seems to have done. I understood the Senator from Illinois to mean that unless this unanimous consent was given——

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, unless it was given.

Mr. MCLAURIN. He would address the Senate at greater length on Tuesday, but having obtained the unanimous-consent agreement he was willing that there should be a vote on Tuesday at half-past 2. That was my understanding.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Illinois mentioned Tuesday.

Mr. HALE. I remember that.

Mr. ALLISON. What I rose for especially was to protest, at least as one Senator on this floor, that the usual notice which is given when Senators desire to address the Senate is rarely given during the closing hours of a session or of a Congress, and the Senator from Georgia ought not to give such a notice.

If this resolution is to be considered and debated prior to the hour of half past 2 o'clock to-morrow, there should be a motion to take it up, so as to see whether a majority of the Senate is in favor of opening the debate respecting this important question. The resolutions have been debated over and over again after unanimous consent was given to take a vote upon the treaty, such debate occupying two hours of the Senate every day during the intermediate time between the unanimous-consent agreement to take a vote on the treaty and the taking of that vote.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me one question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. Does not the Senator think, in view of the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is not present, that it would be better to defer comments on the propriety or the impropriety of what that Senator proposes to do until he is present?

Mr. ALLISON. Very well: perhaps it would. And I waive that. But the Senator from Georgia speaks here through another Senator.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. One moment. I give notice, Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the resolution to-morrow morning, unless a motion is made to take it up for consideration. I will abide by the unanimous-consent agreement, although I appreciate the difficulty of the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Connecticut. But if we are to open up this question for debate, let us test the sense of the Senate by a vote to take up the resolution, and let that be the business for to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. That will not interfere with the vote to-morrow, which is to be taken at half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. But the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]—and I will speak of that now—gives notice through the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that he will speak on this resolution immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, which will doubtless cut out every other thing from that time until half past 2 o'clock, leaving only the interval, certainly, of half an hour.

The appropriation bills, if we are to have them disposed of at this session of Congress, must proceed; but, acceding to the desire of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] and other Senators to have a vote on the resolution, I was willing that the vote should be taken. There was, however, no suggestion by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and no suggestion made at the time by any other Senator, that these resolutions were intended to be debated by and large in this Chamber.

Mr. STEWART. I had suggested that I wanted an opportunity to make a few remarks, as I had had no such opportunity previously.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that; but I mean at the time unanimous consent was given there was no such suggestion.

Mr. STEWART. At the time I addressed the Senate I supposed that matter was all over.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean at the time the unanimous consent was given. I am willing that the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana shall be taken up to-morrow morning; but I do not think that any one Senator on a resolution of this importance, which is to be voted on in an hour or two subsequently, ought to occupy the whole time in debating it. I will say that in the presence or in the absence of any Senator who has given notice of his intention to speak on the resolution. This debate must naturally and necessarily be limited to observations by Senators giving their reasons briefly for their vote for or against the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have carefully read during the debate this morning all the proceedings which appear in the RECORD before the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] made his speech, which has been withheld for revision. The notice that he would obstruct business, that he would talk on anything and everything, and thus block all appropriation bills and other legislation, as I understood him—and which, I think, will be conceded by Senators who heard him, was the impression he made—that statement does not appear in the RECORD, but I think it is in the speech which has been withheld, and which was made without interruption and almost without any colloquies. After he had asked unanimous consent, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggested that the Senator from Illinois be given the five minutes which he had requested, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] suggested that the Senator from Illinois go on and speak on the appropriation bill. It looks to me as though the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who have expressed a desire to speak on these resolutions, ought to have the opportunity to be heard before the vote is taken.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the meeting of the Senate to-morrow be at 11 o'clock instead of at 12 o'clock; that is, when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will that be for the purpose of taking up the resolution as soon as the morning business is over to-morrow, so as to let the resolution be discussed until half past 2 o'clock?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would prefer the Senator from Iowa would put it in the form of a motion, if he will. I think we have had enough unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will not at this moment make the motion, but will make it later.

Several SENATORS. Make it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there is any necessity for that. I think we can get along by meeting at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. In accordance with the suggestion of several Senators, I will move that the Senate meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate meets to-morrow it be at 11 instead of 12 o'clock. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is on condition that the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana shall be taken up and be the subject of discussion?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it so. That is what I propose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to understand what that understanding is of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. ALLISON. I will reach that later.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But now the motion of the Senator from Iowa is simply that we meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the present motion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But there is no understanding?

Mr. ALLISON. None that I know of as yet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I ask that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine business, the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] may be taken up for debate only, and that each Senator debating it shall have fifteen minutes.

Mr. BERRY. In the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I can not consent to any agreement of that kind. The Senator from Georgia sent me a telephone message simply asking me to give notice that to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the morning business he would ask the Senate to be heard on the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I have given that notice, and now I can not, of course, consent to any agreement which would interfere with that right of the Senator from Georgia, if it be a right, or, at least, with his purpose in the matter until he is himself present.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will modify my suggestion and leave it to the good sense of the Senator from Georgia. I modify my suggestion so that debate shall be confined to twenty minutes for each Senator on the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana until the hour of voting shall arrive.

Mr. BERRY. I will not consent to anything that will interfere with the right of the Senator from Georgia to speak to-morrow morning, he having sent me the message to which I have referred.

Mr. ALLISON. I exempted the Senator from Georgia from the operation of that rule.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Georgia is excepted, I have no objection.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I have just had a communication from my colleague [Mr. BACON], in which he says that he desires to make a statement to the Senate to-morrow morning giving his reasons why his resolution should be adopted in lieu of that of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. CLAY. In view of what I have stated, I feel it just that my colleague should have the privilege he desires before the resolution is voted upon. My colleague is necessarily detained from the Senate to-day and can not be present.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator from Iowa would state for the information of the Senate the condition of the appropriation bills—what appropriation bills are ready and when they will be presented for the action of the Senate. Some of us are interested in other measures. The naval personnel bill, which was reported a week or more ago, is now upon the Calendar. It is a matter of great importance to a great branch of the Government, and as soon as the Senator from Iowa, or other members of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of appropriation bills, get those bills out of the way which are now here I shall ask the Senate to proceed to consider the naval personnel bill. Senators know a great deal about it, perhaps all about it. I do not think it will take a long time. There are no great controversies in it. It is only a matter of perfecting details. But I shall ask the Senate to take that bill up as soon as the appropriation bills, which the Senator from Iowa is practically in charge of, are out of the way. If the Senator can indicate how long a time the present batch of appropriation bills—not those that are to come in hereafter—will take the Senate, I shall be obliged if he will state it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Agricultural appropriation bill was taken up on Saturday evening, and I hope the Senate will allow us to proceed with that bill now, and that its consideration will be concluded to-day. After that the West Point Military Academy appropriation bill will be taken up. It is now on the table ready to be acted upon. The Post-Office appropriation bill will be ready to be taken up for consideration on Wednesday morning, certainly not later than Thursday morning. So these three appropriation bills can be disposed of at a very early day. These are the only bills thus far which have come from the House of Representatives which have not been considered by the Senate or by the Committee on Appropriations of this body.

Mr. HALE. What are the other bills, some of them very great bills and of great importance, which are still untouched by the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. The naval appropriation bill, the Army appropriation bill, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the general deficiency appropriation bill are still in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BERRY. And the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. And the river and harbor bill, which is, of course, a bill of importance; at least, it will take time.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill is now pending in the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; that bill is in the Committee on Commerce, and I suppose will be reported within a few days. But it is manifest that the bills now ready, or to be ready within a brief period, will occupy a good deal of the time of the Senate. It is for that reason that I have protested, and do protest, against the consumption of time on matters of mere statements, for that is all that is involved in these resolutions.

The Army reorganization bill is an important bill, and I suppose it will be reported soon. Those having it in charge will probably ask for its early consideration. All these subjects will take time, and I hope that every Senator will see the importance of utilizing all the time we have remaining in the consideration of these questions, which must be disposed of if we are to have an adjournment which is not to be followed by an extra session.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that I had given notice that I should move an executive session at 2 o'clock to-day, but on consultation with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], his colleague [Mr. BUTLER] being absent, I will take the responsibility of not making that motion to-day, and give notice that I will make it after the vote, if one be had, to-morrow on this other subject, which will probably be a little later than half past 2 o'clock. I have thought it proper that the Senator from Iowa should know that now.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope the morning business will be proceeded with.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a question of order also, which is the regular order.

Mr. HALE. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. My point of order is that the regular morning business is alone in order, which is the bill (S. 5352) creating the office of admiral of the Navy, reported by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a question of privilege, of which I gave notice on Saturday last. I wish to make my point, and then to go to the Committee on Military Affairs on other business.

Unanimous consent was asked for the taking of the vote on a certain resolution to-morrow (Tuesday) afternoon. I objected firmly and two or three other Senators objected with equal vigor. I went back on public business to my committee room, and was surprised to hear not long afterwards that unanimous consent had been again asked for and granted. It so happened that all three of us who had objected to a unanimous-consent agreement were out of the Chamber when that request was made the second time.

I feel that that unanimous-consent agreement ought to be vacated if there be any process in the world by which it can be done; and if not, it ought to be quietly ignored. I do not wish to characterize the performance; I do not charge any bad faith in it at all, but it is most unfortunate and most unfair, I may say, and makes a very bad precedent indeed. I think it will be difficult hereafter to get a unanimous-consent agreement for anything except an adjournment.

ADMIRAL OF THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill reported by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], for which he asked unanimous consent for present consideration, will be read for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was the bill reported this morning?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine reported the bill this morning and asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that the bill had better lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Of course, if the Senator insists on his objection, the bill will go over. I should like, however, to have it passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill lie over for the present until I can have time to examine it.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: In regard to the bill (S. 5352) creating the office of admiral of the Navy, I have examined it and withdraw any objection to it.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5352) creating the office of admiral of the Navy. It authorizes the President to appoint, by selection and promotion, an admiral of the Navy, who shall not be placed upon the retired list except upon his own application; and provides that whenever such office shall be vacated by death or otherwise the office shall cease to exist.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Maine whether, under the language of the bill, confirmation by the Senate will be required?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR PARK PURPOSES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11455) granting to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, certain lands for park purposes and for the preservation of the native trees on said lands, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city of Boulder, a municipal corporation, in the county of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, for park purposes and for the use and benefit of said city, subject to all valid entries made prior to the passage hereof, the following-described lands, to wit:

The SW. ¼ sec. 26, and the W. ½ of the SE. ¼ sec. 26, and the SE. ¼ of the SE. ¼ sec. 26; also the W. ½ sec. 35, and the N. ½ of the NE. ¼ and the S. ½ of the SE. ¼ sec. 35, T. 1 N., R. 71 W. of the sixth principal meridian; also the NW. ¼ of the NW. ¼ sec. 2, and the S. ½ of the N. ½ sec. 2, and the S. ½ sec. 2; also the SW. ¼ of the NW. ¼ and the W. ½ of the SW. ¼ sec. 1; also the N. ½ of the N. ½ sec. 11; also the W. ½ of the NW. ¼ of sec. 12; also the SW. ¼ sec. 12, T. 1 S., R. 71 W. of the sixth principal meridian, containing 1,800 acres, more or less; subject, however, to any lawful rights or claims to any part or parts of said lands which may have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That said city shall never alienate any part of said lands, and shall, within twelve months after the passage of this act, distinctly mark the boundaries of said lands, and shall, as far as practicable, protect and preserve all the native trees now growing on said lands, and protect other trees thereon.

SEC. 3. That upon proper proofs in the United States land office at Denver, Colo., that said boundaries have been distinctly marked by said city, as hereinbefore stated, and that said city by its corporate authorities accepts the aforementioned grant on the conditions aforestated, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to issue to said city of Boulder a patent of said lands, in which patent shall be recited the above-stated purposes, conditions, and limitations.

SEC. 4. That said lands shall be forfeited to the United States if within three years from the passage hereof the said city has not begun to use them for the purposes granted, or if at any time the city shall for a period of three years cease to use the same for such purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Committee on Public Lands has reported an amendment adding two new sections to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the committee propose to strike out anything?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; nothing is stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following as new sections:

SEC. 5. That the following-described tract of land, situate in the county of Rolette, State of North Dakota, namely, the south half of northwest quarter of section 30, township 162 north, range 72 west, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the Lake Schutte Cemetery Corporation, of Dunseith, N. Dak., to have and to hold said lands to its use and behoof forever for cemetery purposes.

SEC. 6. That the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 30, township 17 north, range 3 east, Black Hills meridian, is hereby granted to the Nashville Presbyterian Church, of Nashville, S. Dak., for cemetery purposes; and the trustees of said church, and their successors in office, are hereby authorized and empowered to sell or convey lots to any person at such price as they shall fix for the same for burial purposes: Provided, That there was no prior legal claimant upon said land at the time it was first used for cemetery purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota what quantity of land is given to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. About 1,800 acres of land, which is totally useless for any other purpose. The land stands almost perpendicularly; and the city of Boulder, Colo., desires to use the land for park purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It does not give title in fee to the land.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It does not give the land outright. It is not a grant in fee. The land which is proposed to be granted for cemetery purposes in North Dakota by the amendment inserting section 5 is of a similar character to that referred to in the original bill; that is, it is worthless, it is useless for other purposes, and amounts to but 80 acres.

Mr. TELLER. Is $1.25 an acre to be paid for it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. The land is given.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Section 6 provides for a grant of 40 acres in South Dakota for cemetery purposes. The land is not good for any other purpose.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is arid land.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a town at the place where the grant is proposed to be made in South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; there is no town; it is simply a church there on the prairie, around which some people have been buried, and the land only covers 40 acres.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HANSBROUGH, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, certain lands for park purposes and for the preservation of the native trees on said lands, and for other purposes."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 5496) for the relief of Sallie Bailey, administratrix of the estate of Richard Griffith, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 5497) granting an increase of pension to William Dunn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5498) granting a pension to Mary R. Dean; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 out of moneys, arrears of pay, and bounty which are due the estates of deceased colored soldiers who served in the late civil war, and which were in the hands of the commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and have been repaid into the Treasury, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

EMMA A. PORCH.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That Emma A. Porch have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers filed with the bill (S. 5288) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma A. Porch.

JOHN M. PALMER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5342) granting a pension to John M. Palmer, which were, in line 4, after the words "pension roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that bill may lie on the table until some member of the Committee on Pensions is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid over in the absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 11815.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, which has heretofore been read twice by its title. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I presume the parliamentary situation with reference to this bill is pretty generally understood throughout the Chamber. On the 8th of June last, after very full and thorough discussion in the Senate, and in the Committee on Census preceding that time, the census bill was finally passed by the Senate and transmitted in regular order to the other branch of Congress. It seems that through some inadvertence the bill—its essential features preserved—was not acted upon as a Senate bill, but was incorporated and made a distinct House bill. There is but one radical difference between the Senate bill as it passed and the bill as passed by the House. It will be remembered that by the Senate bill the Census Bureau was to be made a subordinate part of the Interior Department, subject to the control of the Secretary. The House bill provides that the Census Bureau shall constitute a separate and distinct Bureau, independent of all Departments. Throughout the bill numerous minor amendments are made to make the text conform to the change of theory in the construction of the Bureau.

It is manifest that if the bill is now referred to the committee at this late day in the session and discussed anew, section by section, and finally thrown into conference, after a long debate in the Senate, it will be very late in the session when the bill passes, and perchance it may fail altogether. In order to relieve the Congress from the embarrassments of this parliamentary situation, with the consent of the various members of the Committee on the Census, I ask that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out and that the bill as passed by the Senate be substituted therefor. I ask that this may be done without reading the proposed substitute, which has been three times read in the Senate and carefully discussed section by section.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Montana then propose to ask for a conference?

Mr. CARTER. I shall ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it a matter of justice to the House that its bill should be read. We are all familiar with what the Senate bill is, but certainly we ought not to strike out an entire bill coming from a coordinate branch without giving it the courtesy of a reading.

Mr. HALE and Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be read.

Mr. CARTER. Let the House bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this bill having been read, I now ask that it lie on the table until to-morrow morning, in deference to the request of certain Senators in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHANDLER. Before that action is taken, which I have no doubt is wisely taken, I wish to say a word on the subject of the necessities of expediting this bill.

Mr. President, a census bill should have been passed nearly a year ago. The census is to be taken in June or July of next year, but the census will be not merely an enumeration of the inhabitants at that time. It will include certain statistics of agriculture and manufactures pertaining to this very calendar year, 1899. As I said a year ago, I say now, it is of great importance that the circulars of the Census Office, which tell the people what kind of information is wanted, in addition to the bare enumeration of inhabitants, should be issued at the earliest possible date, so that people may make preparation to answer, so that they may keep their memorandum books and their books of account in such form as to give the result of their year's work.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who I see is listening to me, will remember that I made that point a year ago. I make it more earnestly now. Some of the most useful information obtained by the census pertains to the previous calendar year, in which there have been products of agriculture and manufacture in the country, and the persons who are to furnish that information to the enumerators and to the other agents of the census when it is called for ought to have the amplest possible notice.

Mr. President, I can think of no bill, outside of the Army bill and the appropriation bills, which it is of more importance to the country to have passed at an early day. I therefore appeal to Senators that to-morrow they will expedite this bill and manage to give it a substantial advance toward becoming a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from Montana to designate the main differences between the Senate and House bills.

Mr. CARTER. The one radical difference between the two bills rests in the provision inserted in the House bill looking to the establishment of the Census Office as an independent bureau. It will be remembered that the question was presented to the Senate as to whether this Bureau should be independent or should be a subordinate division of the Interior Department. The Senate determined in favor of the subordinate division. The bill of the House takes the opposite view. Certain amendments were of necessity inserted in the bill to make it conform throughout to that view.

The salary of the Director of the Census was fixed by the Senate at $5,000. It is fixed by the House bill at $6,000 per annum. In other particulars the bills are practically identical, except that they are framed upon different theories with reference to the independence or the subordinate character of the bureau that is to be formed.

Mr. COCKRELL. As to what subjects must the census contain statistics?

Mr. CARTER. In that particular the bills do not differ except in one minor detail. The inquiries provided for the decennial census by both bills relate to population, the numeration of the people, agriculture, manufacturing, and the vital statistics, it being the theory of both bodies that the inquiries should be limited as strictly as possible as to those questions concerning which it is necessary to make a house-to-house canvass in order to acquire the desired information. All matters of detail that can be acquired by correspondence can still be secured in that way from year to year, without encumbering the decennial census with the great cumbersome inquiries that have heretofore been adopted.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Montana will allow me, I thought, in examining the bill, that the feature which seemed to me so valuable and which the Senate insisted upon—of its being a limited census, not clogged with these outside matters that would prolong the work and prolong the publication—had been adopted by the House.

Mr. CARTER. It has been adopted.

Mr. HALE. Without that I should certainly not be willing to consent to any amendment or change or proposition, because if this census goes as the others have gone on for the last twenty years we will never complete it and we will never hear from it afterwards.

Mr. TELLER rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. COCKRELL rose.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri if he desires to proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to make a further remark, but I will yield to the Senator from Colorado if he desires.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say one word.

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I notice in the House bill that the Census Bureau is to be independent of the control of any Department. That will add very materially to the expense; I do not know how much, but it can be determined. I hope that if the bills go into conference the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist that that feature of the Senate bill be retained that the census shall be under one of the Departments. I am not particular whether it is under the Agriculture Department or the Interior Department, but there must be lodged somewhere a control over it. We do not want to create any more of these independent bureaus. They are anomalous, expensive, unsatisfactory; we have enough of them, and I think it is our duty eventually to put all of them under the control of some Department. I shall feel very much like antagonizing the bill if it comes here in the form in which the House bill is.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in addition to the inquiries to be made by the enumerators in connection with the decennial census, it is provided that this Bureau shall from time to time, as directed by Congress, or when so required, procure information other than that embodied in the regular census reports, this information to be promulgated in the form of bulletins or supplemental reports connected with the census.

The enumeration is somewhat elaborate as to the matters which may be made the subject of inquiry. The House has added one subject to those contemplated by the Senate bill; that is, a line of inquiry concerning mines and mining, mineral productions, and mineral resources. That, however, is an item, as, indeed, all these supplemental items are, which will be under the direction of Congress and subject to be acted upon or not as Congress may in the future determine.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the theory of the bill of the House, would there be a more complete statement of our mining interests than is given in the Mineral Resources of the United States, published annually by the Geological Survey?

Mr. CARTER. I will say in that behalf to the Senator from Missouri that it is my impression that the duplication of work by the Government is extravagant and unsatisfactory. A book has been published under the direction of the Geological Survey for many years, known as the Mineral Resources of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. It is a very excellent and satisfactory publication. Again, the Director of the Mint annually collects statistics relative to the production of the precious metals, and under the direction of Congress they are published in a volume each year. I can not conceive how the census can with any degree of profit to the Government supplement that work or duplicate it. I think the work should be consolidated either in the Bureau of the Mint or in the Geological Survey, and that it is not necessary that it shall be made a part of the census work at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose that the report of the Secretary of Agriculture to some extent gives an estimate of the agricultural resources and productions of the country.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state, for the information of my two legal friends here, that for a farmer that information is not worth much as the basis of official investigation. It is pure guessing. The information is derived from a correspondent in each Congressional district or in each county, who merely guesses at what his county produces. The figures given in the annual reports, though valuable as guesses made by experienced and intelligent men, are not of sufficient accuracy to be of use in comparison with a census report.

While I am on my feet I will state further, for the information of the Senator from Missouri, who has taken an interest in this matter, that while I have just been appointed on the committee and have not had time to do more than give a cursory examination of the subject, there is one feature of difference between the House bill and the Senate bill which may or may not be considered essential. The Senate bill provided that not more than two-thirds of the enumerators and supervisors should belong to any given party, which by inference would mean that the other parties in the country would have one-third. But it seems to me if there is anything in the world that we do want and ought to fight for here it is a nonpartisan census, an absolutely impartial and honest enumeration of the matters which the census is to deal with, and to have as little politics in it as in the nature of the case can be had.

Mr. CARTER. It is true that the feature of the Senate bill relating to the matter referred to by the Senator from South Carolina has been omitted from the House bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state further that the Senate bill simply recognizes partisanship. Is it essential, or would the Senator from Montana consider it essential, that that feature should be retained?

Mr. CARTER. I regretted the adoption of that amendment in the Senate, because I think now, as I thought then, that Congress, by virtue of the amendment, necessarily imported partisanship into the census work. It would be necessary for the Director or his supervisors to inquire as to the politics of the men appointed, and I thought that was an importation by Congressional action into the question of taking of the census of the very element that all desired to exclude as far as possible from the census work.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I think he is right about that; that in a sense it is introducing it by the provision; but I think the provision is a good one. I think it will work well. I believe in certain parts of the country it will work very much better than if we do not have it in. I am in favor of keeping it in.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state further what is of course known to those who have examined the Senate bill, that the only provision in either bill for any examination whatever is one under the direction and supervision of the Director of the Census himself. In other words, our great nonpartisan Civil Service Commission, which was supposed to give us public servants representing intelligence and fitness rather than party, and all that sort of thing, is ignored absolutely.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that that is a dreadfully overworked body of men.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am afraid they are very much overworked because they were required to do what they have not been able to do.

Mr. HALE. We ought not to put upon them any burden which will make their life more miserable than it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The bill goes over in accordance with the request of the Senator from Montana.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask that the Agricultural appropriation bill be taken up for consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator from Iowa would yield to me for a moment. There is a very short bill that I should like to have considered, by request of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. After the appropriation bill is taken up I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota if it does not take time or debate.

Mr. NELSON. It will not take any time. If it does, I will withdraw the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the Agricultural appropriation bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11266) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill may be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments may be first considered. I hope there will be no objection to this course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered by the Senate. The committee amendments will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. And before any other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And before any other amendments are received.

Mr. ALLISON. I have promised to yield to two or three Senators for business that it is said will require no time or lead to no debate. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

SHIPPING LAWS FOR HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11186) to extend the law relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant seamen over the Hawaiian Islands, ceded to the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that bill will not be taken up today. It may not take much time in the future, but there are some other matters in connection with it that I want to consider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

CARL F. W. STOLLE.

Mr. MITCHELL. By the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1798) to remove the charge of desertion against Carl F. W. Stolle, of Iron Ridge, Wis.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "discharged," to strike out "at the date of the muster out of his company" and insert "as of date of the expiration of furlough;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Carl F. W. Stolle, late of Company K of the Third Regiment of Cavalry of Wisconsin Volunteers, and correct the record so that it may show that said Carl F. W. Stolle was mustered out and honorably discharged as of date of the expiration of furlough: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Florida if the matter leads to no debate.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the Senate bill 2675 be now considered. It has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; it has their unanimous report; and it is important if any action be taken upon it that it should be passed by the Senate at an early day.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2675) authorizing the exchange of lot 6, of square 10, known as the old custom-house lot, in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for lands adjoining that part of the United States military reservation in said city designated as the powder-house lot, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "belonging," to strike out "Provided" and insert:

But the conveyance of the said lands belonging to the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be subject to the rights of Henry M. Flagler in and to a lease of the same heretofore made to him by the Treasury Department: Provided, however, That the exchange of lands herein authorized shall not take effect until the governor of the State of Florida shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the said lands to be conveyed by the said Charles F. Hamblen, with exemption from State, county, and municipal taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY LONGLEY HENDRICKS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of bill (S. 4984) granting a pension to Mary Longley Hendricks.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill seems to be brief and to the point, and I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4984) granting a pension to Mary Longley Hendricks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the name "Hendricks," to strike out "of Lebanon, Ind.:" in line 8, after the word "pay," to strike out "to;" in the same line, after the word "her," to strike out "the sum" and insert "a pension at the rate;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Longley Hendricks, widow of John H. Hendricks, late commissary sergeant, Company G, Fifty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the Agricultural appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11266) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Office of the Secretary," on page 1, line 14, to increase the compensation of the private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture from $2,000 to $2,250; and on page 2, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for the office of the Secretary from $87,900 to $88,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 4, page 3.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that bill, by unanimous consent, may be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business, by unanimous consent, will be informally laid aside, retaining its place as unfinished business.

CHAUNCEY A. BRADLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4630) granting an increase of pension to Chauncey A. Bradley, which was, in line 8, after the word "pension," to insert "at the rate."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AMANDA F. JUMPER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4982) granting an increase of pension to Amanda F. Jumper, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LETITIA TYLER SEMPLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1776) to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple, which was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY subsequently said: I did not observe at the time that the amendment of the House to the bill to pension Mrs. Semple was concurred in. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider with a view to a nonconcurrence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote whereby the Senate concurred in the amendment of the House to the bill will be reconsidered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest that it will be necessary to have a conference committee appointed in that case.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is. That is what I desire.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope that course will be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, and that a conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SHOUP, Mr. HANNA, and Mr. LINDSAY were appointed.

FLORA STANTON KALK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4775) granting a pension to Flora Stanton Kalk; which were, in line 6, to strike out "and infant children," and in line 8, after "Infantry," to insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN M. PALMER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5342) granting a pension to John M. Palmer; which were, in line 4, after the word "roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the House amendments and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, which is of very great importance just now, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read for information, so that we may learn what it is.

The joint resolution (S. R. 245) to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for the following object, namely:

For cleaning snow and ice from the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia, $20,000, one half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan to have inserted in the RECORD the letter which he has received from the president of the Board of District Commissioners.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I present a letter, signed by the president of the Board of District Commissioners, which explains the necessity for the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter referred to by the Senator from Michigan will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 15, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to bring to the attention of your committee the fact that the appropriation heretofore made for the removal of snow and ice, under the requirements of the act approved March 2, 1895, is wholly inadequate for the purposes intended. A fall of more than 2 feet of snow has covered the streets and avenues of the District. In some parts of the city the deposits thrown from the railroad tracks and sidewalks have entirely obstructed the remainder of the streets, so that the passage of vehicles in many parts of the city is almost impossible.

Of the appropriation of $10,000 recently made but $5,100 remains, yet to-day almost every trace of the efficient work done thereunder has been obliterated. The business of the District is almost entirely suspended by the present situation. Teams hauling coal and other necessities of life have the greatest difficulty in delivering the same to residences and places of business. It will be almost impossible, until the present deposits of snow are removed, for the fire engines and truck companies to reach the vicinity of an alarm of fire.

Under these circumstances the Commissioners deem it their duty to ask for an appropriation of $20,000, to be immediately available, for the purpose named, to be used as soon as the present storm has abated; and they herewith transmit a draft of a joint resolution for which they ask the favorable consideration of your committee.

The Commissioners have not, in the joint resolution submitted, confined the appropriation to crosswalks and gutters, as was done in the act recently passed by Congress, for the reason that in order to prepare the streets for the transaction of public business the snow must be removed from other parts of the said streets and from some of the sidewalks of the District in front of premises where the owners neglect or refuse to remove the same as required by law.

It may be well, also, to state that the making of the appropriation herewith requested may obviate the necessity of calling upon Congress for a large appropriation to be expended in charitable work, which will otherwise undoubtedly be demanded.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. WIGHT,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11266) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "One," to strike out "editor, who shall be;" and in line 9, before the word "clerks," to strike out "editorial;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of Publications: One chief of division, $2,500; assistant chief of division, $1,800; one editorial clerk, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each, $2,800; two clerks, at $1,000 each (one of whom shall be a stenographer), $2,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one assistant entomologist or clerk, $1,200," and insert "two assistant entomologists or clerks, at $1,200 each," and in line 22 to increase the total appropriation for the Division of Entomology from $9,500 to $10,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 7, line 15, to increase the compensation of one chief of Pathological Division from $2,250 to $2,500; in line 20, to increase the compensation of one chief of Biochemic Division from $2,250 to $2,500; on page 8, line 2, to increase the compensation of one zoologist from $2,000 to $2,250; in line 9, before the word "clerk," to strike out "editorial;" and in line 22, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry, from $81,280 to $82,030.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 23, to strike out the following clause:

Total amount for salaries, $334,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for vegetable pathological investigations, Division of Vegetable Physiology and Pathology, from $20,000 to $22,500.

Mr. ALLISON. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee I move to insert "$32,500," after the word "investigation," in line 19, on page 11.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$22,500," in line 19, on page 11, and inserting "$32,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also offer an amendment to come in at that point after the word "dollars," in line 20, on page 11.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 20, on page 11, it is proposed to insert:

Of which sum $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the investigation of the disease known as little peach, and $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the investigation and experimentation with fertilizers and fungicides, or the causes of blight in Sea Island cotton and in watermelons, and the remedies for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Laboratory, Department of Agriculture, Division of Chemistry: Chemical apparatus, chemicals, laboratory, fixtures, and supplies, repairs to engine and apparatus; gas and electric current, purchase of samples and necessary expenses in conducting special investigations, including necessary traveling and other expenses, labor, and expert work in such investigations, $4,000; for the equipment of the new laboratory, $2,500, to be immediately available; for rent of laboratory building, $1,200; in all, $7,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 10, after the word "mentioned," to insert "giving notice to the owner or consignee of such articles who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony;" in line 12, before the word "the," to strike out "And" and insert "and;" in line 13, after the word "discretion," to insert "and with the approval of the President;" in line 17, after the word "health," to insert:

And said goods shall be proceeded against as provided in sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved August 30, 1890.

On page 14, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifteen thousand two" and insert "seventeen thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

To investigate the adulteration of foods, drugs, and liquors, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable; and the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that articles are being imported from foreign countries which are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States, shall make a request upon the Secretary of the Treasury for samples from original packages of such articles for inspection and analysis, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to open such original packages and deliver specimens to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose mentioned, giving notice to the owner or consignee of such articles who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony; and the Secretary of the Treasury may in his discretion, and with the approval of the President, refuse delivery to the consignee of any goods which the Secretary of Agriculture reports to him have been inspected and analyzed and found to be adulterated or otherwise dangerous to health, and said goods shall be proceeded against as provided in sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved August 30, 1890; employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purpose named; preparing, illustrating, and publishing reports and exhibiting the results of such investigations, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue an investigation relative to the various typical soils of the United States to determine their chemical characteristics, and especially the nature of the nitrifying organisms contained therein; the preparation of reports thereon; apparatus and materials required in conducting such investigations; employment of the necessary investigators; freight and express charges and necessary traveling expenses, $10,000; in all, for Division of Chemistry, $17,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for "grass and forage-plant investigations, Division of Agrostology," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "sixty-eight;" and in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-three;" so as to read:

Agricultural experiment stations, Office of Experiment Stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $768,000, $33,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of said act of March 2, 1887, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 9, after the word "waters," to strike out "in the United States and other countries;" so as to read:

Irrigation investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the laws and institutions relating to irrigation and upon the use of irrigation waters, with special suggestions of better methods for the utilization of irrigation waters in agriculture than those in common use, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 19, in line 20, to increase the appropriation for "irrigation investigations" from $20,000 to $25,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought there was to be another amendment made there.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention was diverted for a moment. In line 20, on page 19, instead of the "$25,000" recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, I move to insert "$35,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the clause making appropriations for "irrigation investigations," on page 19, line 20, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read "thirty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is not now in the Chamber, but I hope will be in his seat in a moment, to give us some information in regard to irrigation and the plans proposed to carry it out. They are familiar with and understand the subject. The question is an exceedingly important one. I should like to know what has been done with the appropriations heretofore made and what is proposed to be done by this appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I will state that the Senator from Wyoming, who is temporarily absent, engaged upon duties in the Committee on Military Affairs, has given this subject-matter a great deal of thought and consideration.

As is well known to the Senator from Missouri, in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, California, and in many of the other States of the central and southern portion of our country, there is a vast area of arid lands belonging to the Government which are entirely useless for cultivation or even for grazing purposes, because there is no water upon them, and the rainfall being so very light, there is not sufficient moisture to furnish irrigation.

The Secretary of Agriculture, through his corps of assistants at the different agricultural stations throughout the States and his agents representing the Agricultural Department, has given the subject-matter much thought, consideration, and investigation. Last year the Senate inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill $27,500 for this purpose. The conference committee, however, not realizing the importance of this investigation, or not having given it that consideration which the committee in the Senate had done, reduced the amount to $10,000. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before our Committee on Appropriations and reported—and the bulletins issued by him will verify the statement—that the investigation had proven of great value and of great benefit to the respective States where it had been prosecuted.

He reports that there is in almost all of these States a sufficient volume of water, which, if properly distributed would irrigate these vast arid districts. Many communications have been sent to the Department from representatives of the arid districts and States commending the Secretary for his bulletins sent out upon this subject-matter, and he was so deeply impressed with its importance that this year he asked Congress to appropriate $50,000, so that he might continue his investigations and give the results of those investigations to Congress in his next annual report.

The Committee on Appropriations, however, realizing the great demands which are being made upon the Treasury at this time, declined to accede to the full amount asked for, and recommended an appropriation of $25,000, or 50 per cent of what the Secretary of Agriculture had asked for. Later, upon investigating the subject more thoroughly, the majority of the Committee on Appropriations consented that this amount should be increased to $35,000.

I therefore hope the Senator from Missouri will consent to this amendment. It affects all of the great States west of the Missouri River, for all of them have a vast area of land which is now arid and neither useful for pasture nor for cultivation. I believe there is no money in this bill appropriated which will bring back better returns for the investment than that which is appropriated for irrigation investigations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, recurring to the amendment in relation to irrigation, I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is now here, make a statement. I think it is important that a statement from him should go upon the record. There is a large area of country there, and it is of vast importance, not only to the people residing there, but to the whole people of the United States, that, if possible, it should be reclaimed. It is a question with a great many whether it can be successfully done. This appropriation is in the line of experimentation to see what can be done; and I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming explain what has been done and what is proposed to be done by this increased appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, responding to the desire of the Senator from Missouri, while I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, I do consider this appropriation the most important carried in the entire bill.

This is not a local proposition nor a local want in a narrow sense, nor is it narrow in any sense. It is a very broad subject and a burning one with many people and localities. It is fallacious to think it applies to only the strictly arid region. Irrigation will benefit all parts of the country, each and every State in the Union, if only a knowledge of its application and benefits be properly disseminated. I do not think I overstate its value when I say that irrigation and reclamation of land is the most important economic subject or problem that we have before us to-day and capable of yielding the largest returns to us as a people for the expense of providing for and prosecuting vigorously this Department work. It is a national want more than a State or individual one, the nation at large being the great beneficiary from every point of view.

Mr. President, Congress provided that the Agricultural Department should carry a division, or a bureau at one time, for irrigation; but the amounts appropriated were intermittent, some years large and some years small. At a former time, I think, I myself moved to cut out the appropriation for that purpose until we could get on a better basis. Last year the friends of irrigation urged an increased appropriation, and the Committee on Irrigation of this body reported an amendment providing for $27,500. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate consented to $20,000. That amount was cut down in conference to $10,000. With that $10,000 the Secretary of Agriculture commenced this work. He became so much interested in it, as did others who gave it attention, that he estimated for and requested this year $50,000 for this purpose, $10,000 to be made immediately available.

The House of Representatives cut the amount down to $20,000. Fifty thousand dollars has been reported in this body from the Committee on Irrigation, but in the nature of a compromise $35,000 has been agreed upon, with the intention that $10,000 of it shall be immediately available to complete the work of the present fiscal year—that is, the fiscal year 1898. So the appropriation will really stand $30,000 for the fiscal year 1899 and $25,000 for 1900.

The United States owns, exclusive of Alaska, about 700,000,000 acres of public land, about 550,000,000 of which is arid and practically useless except as to some portions which furnish very thin grazing. To apply the waters of the streams to the lands and to impound and use the storm waters intelligently upon these arid wastes is practically to create land, and that of the most fertile and valuable character.

Even in the arid portion of the country that portion most easily and cheaply reached with water has been appropriated, so that the best knowledge and effort alone can establish further homestead settlement and utilization of the waste plains.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just there, as to the investigation of the water supply, I wish to say that I do hope the Secretary of Agriculture will have the Geological Survey cooperate with him, so as not to duplicate the work the Geological Survey has done in ascertaining the flow of water, the quantity of water, and all that, in various parts of the country.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the honorable Senator from Missouri, and that is the intention. For instance, the measurement of streams is yet carried on by the Geological Bureau. That covers not only the measurement for irrigation purposes in the arid region, but also measurements in the humid region—water power, overflow, navigation, and so forth. Gauging of streams furnishes information useful for a great many purposes. Immigration hereafter must naturally be from our large cities into new country for those wishing to engage in agricultural pursuits. We have very little ground left that can be occupied except by irrigation. If there could be information for a would-be farmer which could be laid before him as to what amount of water is necessary to raise a certain crop, it would be very valuable. Much of the settlement made and work done along these lines have been primitive, and generally wasteful as to the appropriation and use of water, and with but little more than an experimental knowledge of the kind of crops to grow, the amount of water necessary, and the most beneficial time and manner to apply it.

The value of irrigable and irrigated lands and irrigation water depends upon wise laws governing the ownership and distribution of water, a knowledge of the best assimilation of land and water, and its power and adaptability with reference to the different agricultural crops. The Secretary of Agriculture says, in speaking of irrigation, in his last annual report:

Unfortunately, the accurate information on which alone intelligent reforms can be based is almost wholly lacking. As the problems which confront these communities are, in a general way, the same, and in many particulars affect the national as well as local interests, it is highly appropriate that the National Government should undertake investigations to aid in the solution of the problems of irrigation. As many of these problems are directly connected with those in other agricultural lines in which this Department and the experiment stations are working, it is my judgment that this Department should be put in a position to efficiently organize and conduct important investigations in this line.

A noted and most competent expert in irrigation, Prof. Elwood Mead, State engineer of Wyoming, in speaking of this Department work, says:

It is the purpose of this investigation to aid the State irrigation authorities in their work of framing and enforcing laws for the distribution and beneficial use of the rivers of the arid region; to help farmers in their efforts to secure the conservation and best use of that supply, and to collect and arrange the facts which will tend to promote wise legislation by Congress for the reclamation or disposal of the remainder of the public domain.

The same author further says:

The history of all irrigated countries shows that wise laws do more for the prosperity of their farmers than a fertile soil or abundant water supply. The settlement of the arid West, the separation of single drainage areas into different political divisions, and the necessity of framing laws to meet emergencies before experience or study had shown what those laws should embrace have created industrial and legal complications which threaten the stability and value of the irrigated farm, and whose solution will require all the wisdom and patience of our ablest minds. The investigation of institutions inaugurated by the Department is destined, I am confident, to mark a new and better era of irrigation development for the arid States.

Now, Mr. President, no other Department of the United States is equipped for work or working upon these problems. No one in any other Department is charged with the responsibility of furnishing information upon or answering the many practical questions, such as—

What amount of water is necessary to grow a crop of this, that, or the other product at a given altitude?

What soil under a ditch will best produce this, that, or the other crop, other particulars being given?

What fall, side slope, etc., are most serviceable in an irrigation ditch, other particulars as to location, drainage, etc., being furnished?

How shall the ground be graded and prepared to accept the water and give the best results?

Shall the irrigation be by flooding or by graded seepage or by surface overflow?

Shall water be applied between harvest and seed time or only while crops are growing?

What kind of grasses, what forest or shade trees are best adapted to this or that condition of irrigation?

And I might go on submitting innumerable inquiries, all pertinent and all of vital importance to freshmen or sophomores in the school of irrigation farming.

So, Mr. President, as to our unoccupied agricultural domain, or very nearly all of it, knowledge of irrigation is indispensable, if we would thrive and grow agriculturally. Nor is this valuable alone to the irrigation or the would-be irrigation farmer, but its value extends to the nation at large. As the able governor of a powerful Eastern State (a State in no sense arid) once expressed it:

In improved methods of intensive culture with irrigation and in agricultural education lies the key to the establishment of agricultural prosperity on a firm and permanent basis and to the solution of the most serious social and political problems which arise from the congestion of population in our great cities.

In this same strain we find a resolution adopted by the National Irrigation Congress in 1897 and readopted in its congress of 1898:

We urge upon the American people the profound importance of the social, political, and philanthropic features of the great irrigation movement, its ultimate aim being that we may become a nation of rural homes rather than a nation of great cities.

But what of irrigation in the East and the more humid region? Who has not seen and remarked upon the difference in favor of the lawn or grass plot which is carefully sprinkled, i. e., irrigated, over the one that takes its chances with the moisture that falls in rain or dew? The one is green and beautiful always, and the other green and brown alternately, beautiful or commonplace, according to the season or different periods of the season.

I contend, and I am not alone on the contention, that in every State and upon most all lands knowledge of the power and effect of water applied in extra quantity or taken from in drainage is important and vital to successful farming. The great increase in productiveness of lands in the East by irrigation has been demonstrated and been commented upon by many experienced farmers as well as experimenters.

As witness to this I might mention Professor Vorhees, of the United States Agricultural Stations in New Jersey; Professor King, of the State University of Wisconsin; Dr. Clark Gapin, of the Illinois State Hospital, at Kankakee, Ill., and others all along across the continent. We all realize the difference in size between the strawberries we used to gather growing wild in pasture and meadow and the product of the gardens of to-day, and yet this comparison does not nearly express the difference in production between irrigated and unirrigated land even in the East.

The rice fields of the South are capable of an almost unlimited development with a better understanding of the methods of irrigation. In 1890 only 162,000 acres of rice were grown in the United States. For over two centuries South Carolina has remained preeminent in the quality of its production, and it is estimated that 2,000,000 acres of land in that State alone are eminently adapted to the growth of this product. In other words, the State where this product attains a perfection not possible elsewhere in the world can be made to produce more than ten times the total present output of the whole country.

Recent studies of this question have shown that more efficient methods and complete organization in the care of dikes and other works necessary will, of itself, not only greatly extend the area cultivated, but also increase the returns from these acres as well.

The cane fields of Louisiana afford another illustration of the profitable use of irrigation. The cane planters recognize the value of improved methods, and have already appealed to those in charge of this investigation for suggestions and advice.

I hope the $35,000 will stand, not only here but in conference, as every cent of the amount is needed, and its expenditure will bring useful and profitable results to the nation.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriation was, on page 21, line 2, to increase the appropriation for the library, Department of Agriculture, from $4,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 16, after the word "bulletin," to strike out "and also of any other publication of the Department of Agriculture not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House;" and in line 22, after the word "therein," to insert:

And shall also notify Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of any other publication of the Department of Agriculture not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House, and the title and character of such publication.

So as to read:

Publications, Department of Agriculture, Division of Publications: * * * Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify Senators and Representatives of the title and character of each such bulletin, with the total number to which each Senator, Representative, and Delegate may be entitled for distribution; and on the face of the envelope inclosing said bulletins shall be printed the title of each bulletin contained therein; and shall also notify Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of any other publication of the Department of Agriculture not sent to the folding rooms of the Senate and House, and the title and character of such publication.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 21, to insert:

That hereafter section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered in the Department of Agriculture when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Tea culture: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report on the cost of making tea and the best methods of cultivating and preparing the same for market, so as to demonstrate whether it is practicable to introduce its culture in the Southern States as a profitable industry, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. TELLER. I meant to take advantage of the fact that the Agricultural appropriation bill was before the Senate to say a few words, but I will do so now. I wish to say a word or two about the joint resolution which is to be voted upon to-morrow. I intend to vote for the measure known as the McEnery resolution. I do not myself know of any agreement or pledge that has been made to vote for it. It is in accordance with the declaration that I made on the 20th of December last with reference to these islands and as to my idea of what our policy should be. I stated then that we could not lay down any hard and fast rule; that we would have to determine what we would do largely by the conditions which should exist when we came to act.

I desire to say now that this joint resolution reflects my views as I then expressed them and as the condition now exists; and I am in hope that these views can be carried out and crystallized ultimately into law. I shall therefore vote for the joint resolution when it is before the Senate. I shall not vote for some amendments which will probably be proposed, not because I am particularly hostile to the amendments——

Mr. ALLISON. No amendments can be proposed under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether that is the understanding?

Mr. STEWART. That is certain.

Mr. TELLER. If that is true, I need not say anything about amendments. I was about to state that I should probably vote against some amendments which might express my views very largely. What I rose to say is that I shall vote for the joint resolution. I do not mean by that to be committed absolutely to any policy if conditions, when we come to act on this question, as we must act in the course of a year or so, should be very different from what they are now or very different from what I hope they may be. I shall be governed, as I have a right to be, by the conditions and circumstances then presented. I shall regret very much if we can not carry out the principle of the joint resolution, and I declare for that, as I hope we may be able to do, and yet I shall not consider that I am inconsistent with that if conditions should require me to vote for a different plan of government or a different condition.

ISOM GIBSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4854) granting a pension to Isom Gibson, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out the word "twelve" and insert "eight."

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH F. MOLLERE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I was requested by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4681) to increase the pension of Joseph F. Mollere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Was the bill reported by the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; it was so reported and has been pending here for some time.

Mr. ALLISON. I simply wish to say that the Senate is pretty thin, and I do not think we ought to take up any very important matters at this hour of the day. But I do not object to pension matters.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph F. Mollere, late first-class boy, United States ship Cumberland, and Maynard's Navy Battery, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Mollere."

NANCY M. LINDSEY.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3766) granting an increase of pension to Nancy M. Lindsey.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy M. Lindsey, widow of William Lindsey, late of Company C, Santa Fe Battalion Mounted Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPORTATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10997) to amend section 3287 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the drawing off, gauging, marking, and removal of spirits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

Mr. BURROWS subsequently said: I understand the Senator from South Dakota withdraws his objection to House bill 10997, and I should like to have it considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 3287 of the Revised Statutes by adding at the end thereof the following:

Provided, however, That upon the application of the distiller, and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, distilled spirits may be drawn into wooden packages, each containing two or more metallic cans, which cans shall have each a capacity of not less than 5 gallons, wine measure, such packages to be filled and used only for exportation from the United States. And there shall be charged for each of said packages or cases, for the expense of providing and affixing stamps, 5 cents instead of 10 cents as now required by law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from Michigan to explain what change the bill proposes to make in existing law.

Mr. BURROWS. Under existing law the spirits from the reservoirs are drawn off in packages or barrels of 10 or 20 gallons. The bill proposes to change it so that the packages may be reduced to 5 gallons each, and that the spirits may be put in tin cans instead of wood for exportation, in order to conform to the trade abroad—in China and Japan. It makes no change in the revenue, and is recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH H. M'GEE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10013) to increase the pension of Joseph H. McGee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Joseph H. McGee, late major, First Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY LUELLA STEELE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to take up at this time the bill (H. R. 6810) granting a pension to Mary Luella Steele.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary Luella Steele, the permanently helpless and dependent daughter of James H. Steele, late orderly sergeant of Company B, Forty-eighth Missouri Infantry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF BRITISH SHIP FOSCOLIA.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5900) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to submit the claim of the owners of the British steamship Foscolia, sunk by collision with the U. S. S. Columbia on the evening of May 28, 1898, near Fire Island light-ship, for and on account of the loss of the vessel and cargo, to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of the court sitting as a court of admiralty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. TAYLOR.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10158) granting a pension to Mary A. Taylor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary A. Taylor, widow of Robert B. Taylor, late a captain in Thirty-second Kentucky Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., AT POINT ARGUELLO.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withhold his motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I am constrained to yield to the Senator from California, and then I will insist upon my motion.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 2683. While the Secretary is finding the bill I will state that a similar bill passed the Senate several weeks ago. By a mistake a separate bill was passed by the House instead of the Senate bill. Therefore, by passing this bill the matter will be disposed of instead of waiting for the House to act on the Senate bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be glad to hear the bill read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 2683) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Point Arguello, California, and there being no objection it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to establish at or near Point Arguello, about 12 miles northwest of Point Conception, California, a light-house and fog signal, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator from California to state that a similar bill has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. It has.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest, to prevent any possibility of confusion, that the Senator enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the Senate bill, and ask the House to return it, and then that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1527) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Point Arguello, California, which passed the Senate and is now pending in the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill indicated by him.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is wholly unnecessary, but I do not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has occurred here a number of times when we have passed two bills of a similar nature.

Mr. ALLISON. It has?

Mr. COCKRELL. To my certain knowledge, and that is the reason why I want to prevent it again, for there was a very severe criticism, and a very proper one, on the methods of doing business in the Senate and the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 14, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 13, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock.

The CLERK (Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL). In the absence of the Speaker, it will be necessary to elect a Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. PAYNE. It is evident there can not be a quorum to-day on account of the storm. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Clerk announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY and others. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 44.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Clerk, I move that the Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE be elected Speaker pro tempore.

The question was taken; and the Clerk announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 0. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The Chaplain will offer the prayer.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CLEARING THE POTOMAC RIVER OF ICE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the following bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SULZER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12004) making an appropriation for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to meet expenses that may be necessary for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice, within the District of Columbia, there is hereby appropriated, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts, and to be immediately available, the sum of $5,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear a few words of explanation in regard to the bill.

Mr. CANNON. The bill explains itself. It is to try to keep the city from being overflowed when the ice breaks up in the Potomac.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and, pending that, the gentleman from Kansas has something that he thinks will lose its rights if it goes over.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, being the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11868) to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes, go over until to-morrow morning, and that it do not lose its status as unfinished business.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was that a special order?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that it go over until to-morrow without losing its status as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill H. R. 11868 go over until to-morrow without losing its status as unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask that because the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman from Illinois expect to conclude the consideratioh of the sundry civil appropriation bill to day?

Mr. CANNON. I should be very glad if I could; but if I were going to turn prophet, I should say we will have no such good luck.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suggest that the gentleman from Kansas can get the same consent to-morrow if it should be desired. I doubt very much whether he would lose his right by not calling it up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is District day, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations seems anxious to conclude the sundry civil bill, and I ask unanimous consent that next Thursday be set aside as District day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; subject to the rights of appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I would like to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a little bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am sorry I can not yield, because there are twenty other gentlemen in the same position, and I can not yield to one without yielding to all.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was then agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair, for the further consideration of House bill 12008, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill. General debate has been closed, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I want to ask unanimous consent that he may after to-day, to-morrow or at any time during the pendency of this bill, offer an amendment of which he gave notice a day or two ago, at such point in the reading of the bill that he may desire. In other words, if the gentleman desires a full House, I have no objection, and I ask unanimous consent that he may offer it at such time as he desires.

Mr. HENDERSON. That does not waive points of order?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not at all; subject to all points of order.

Mr. RAY of New York. Pending that request, may I ask what the amendment is?

Mr. HEPBURN. It was printed in the RECORD of Monday.

Mr. RAY of New York. What does it relate to; what is the subject-matter?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is in relation to the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. DOCKERY. All points of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RAY of New York. Pending that request, Mr. Chairman, I desire an explanation, if it is permissible. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa if the amendment he proposes to offer is some bill on that subject that has been recommended by a committee, or is it a personal amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a substitute by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the Senate bill.

Mr. SULZER. I could not exactly hear.

Mr. HEPBURN. I say it is a substitute for the Senate bill, recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to object to this request. I am in favor of the measure, but I want a similar privilege to offer for the consideration of the House an amendment embracing authority to construct a Pacific cable, such as was discussed on the floor on the 12th of January.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan object?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

For immigrant station at Ellis Island, N. Y.: For contingencies, $47,010; in all, $390,850, to be paid out of the immigrant fund.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

In line 2, page 3, strike out "to be paid out of the immigrant fund" and insert in lieu thereof, after the word "dollars," "to be immediately available; and the said sum shall be reimbursed from the immigrant fund, as follows: $190,850 on the 1st day of July, 1899, and the remainder in four equal annual installments thereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill read as follows:

Heating apparatus for public buildings: For heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, and repairs to the same, for all public buildings, including marine hospitals and quarantine stations, under control of the Treasury Department, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $125,000; but of this amount not exceeding $15,000 may be expended for personal services of mechanics employed from time to time for casual repairs only.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this is not an increase over the expenditures of last year; and if so, why the increase?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it is an increase of $25,000. I will say to the gentleman that on investigation we find that for the current year there is an appropriation of $100,000, and later on in the deficiency bill we shall have to recommend probably $40,000 appropriation, or at least as much as $25,000, for the current year. The increase in the appropriation for the repair of the public buildings comes from the increased needs of repair.

Mr. STEELE. The public buildings throughout the country?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; the public buildings throughout the country.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill read as follows:

Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings: For vaults, safes, and locks, and repairs to the same, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $25,000; but of this amount not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for personal services of mechanics employed from time to time for casual repairs only.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, the whole country was startled and amazed the other day by the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. What he then said has challenged the sober sense and arrested the judgment of the people of this country. I doubt not his figures are correct and his facts beyond successful contradiction. With him I agree it is time to call a halt. If this Congress continues its wild and indefensible appropriations from now until its adjournment, there is no doubt, in my judgment, but what the country will again be obliged to sell bonds. Many here and elsewhere, no doubt, desire that. But every friend of the people must view the situation with alarm. I believe the gentleman from Illinois is anxious to prevent the issue of more bonds, and is averse to any further mortgaging of posterity in the interest of the bankers of the country. I believe he is anxious to prevent any further spoliation of the National Treasury.

This Congress will go into history as the most profligate and prodigal Congress that has ever sat in this country. Already we have appropriated nearly a billion and a half dollars, and if it goes on I doubt not that before we finally adjourn it will be, not a billion-dollar Congress, but a two-billion-dollar Congress. We have appropriated in this Congress more money than any other two great powers in the world. Extravagance has been the order of the day in every department of the Government, and the doors of the Treasury swing outward to every corrupt scheme that the ingenuity of fertile but perverted minds can devise and conceive. How much longer can this go on ere the crash comes? And what have we to show for it?

One thing that the gentleman from Illinois said which struck me forcibly was his remarks in regard to the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill. That is a bill for the spoliation of the Treasury. It is a bill which violates the fundamental principles and the time-honored traditions of the Republican party. It is contrary to every tenet of the Democratic party. It is a bill which violates the solemn pledge made by the Republican party to the people of the country in its last national platform. It is a bill which bids defiance to most of your followers, makes them dupes, and your Chief Magistrate's letter of acceptance a sham and a hollow mockery. I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has had the courage and the manhood to stand up here in the face of his party and his Republican colleagues and say that this Hanna-Payne subsidy bill to loot the Treasury shall not pass this session of Congress if he can prevent it. All honor to him, I say, for his honesty and fearlessness.

The Republican party in convention assembled at St. Louis in 1896 said:

MERCHANT MARINE.

We favor restoring the American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American ships—the product of American labor employed in American shipyards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes, and manned, officered, and owned by Americans—may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

And President McKinley in his letter of acceptance said:

OUR MERCHANT MARINE AND NAVY.

The declaration of the Republican platform in favor of the upbuilding of our merchant marine has my hearty approval. The policy of discriminating duties in favor of our shipping, which prevailed in the early years of our history, should be again promptly adopted by Congress and vigorously supported until our prestige and supremacy on the seas is fully attained.

There is not a word in that declaration or in that letter about subsidies or bounties. On the contrary, it favors discriminating duties as the proper policy to build up and reestablish our merchant marine and our shipping industries.

The first day of this session I introduced a bill to do that, and I could not even get a hearing on it. The Hanna-Payne syndicate subsidy bill will rob the people of $300,000,000 and enrich the syndicate to just that extent, and I intend to prove it.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter, with a table of statistics prepared by one of the best-known authorities in the country on the American merchant marine, showing exactly how much money the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill will take out of the Treasury every year for the next twenty years if it should become a law. This table has been very carefully prepared by one of the best statisticians in the country—an expert in regard to our shipping and merchant marine. I ask to have this letter, with the accompanying table of statistics, printed in the RECORD for the benefit of members of the House.

A MEMBER (to Mr. SULZER). You have that right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that some tables and figures relating to a bill on the Calendar of the House not now under consideration shall be printed, as part of his remarks, in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is this a letter recently published on this question from Mr. Croker, of New York?

Mr. SULZER. No, sir. This is a letter from Hon. William W. Bate, the author of Our American Merchant Marine, and a table of statistics which he has compiled.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He is the author of the whole American merchant marine!

Mr. SULZER. He is the author of the most celebrated work on the American merchant marine—a standard authority.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman know anybody who ever read it?

Mr. SULZER. I do not know whether the gentleman has ever read it. I have, and I know many others who have also. I commend it to the gentleman, and if he reads it he will not vote for the Hanna-Payne syndicate subsidy bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have had it a long time, but have never read it.

Mr. SULZER. There are lots of books the gentleman has never read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wanted to find out whether the gentleman would not include in his request the interview with Mr. Croker, of New York, on this subject.

Mr. CARMACK. The gentleman from Ohio can put that in.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Ohio can not speak for Mr. Croker, who is my friend, and has no right to misrepresent him here or elsewhere. The gentleman has all he can do to defend MARK HANNA and the Republican party.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not addressing the committee now.

Mr. SULZER. We understand the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether the table to which he refers is the same which has been carried around here for several days by the gentleman from New York, illustrating the alleged expense of the so-called Hanna-Payne bill?

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that I do not think so, because I received this letter with the accompanying table of statistics on last Saturday afternoon, and it has never been shown since to anyone. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the purpose of the statistics?

Mr. PAYNE. I hope that no one will object to the publication of this paper in the RECORD——

Mr. CARMACK. The gentleman from New York has the right to print it without special leave.

Mr. PAYNE. No; I do not so understand.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; I have that right under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from New York has the right to print the paper without consent, as his remarks are out of order upon this bill at this time.

Mr. SULZER. I believe I have the floor, and I am in order.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope no one will object to the gentleman from New York publishing the papers he has indicated, although they are not entirely germane to the gentleman's motion or to the paragraph of the bill under consideration. But I want to see presented here in opposition to this shipping bill all the arguments that anyone and everyone has to offer, whether they embrace misstatements or not, because some day we shall have that bill up here for discussion, and at the proper time the friends of the bill will show what is to be said in favor of it, and will submit it with confidence to the House and with greater confidence to the country.

And while I am on my feet I want to state another thing. The appropriate time will come—it has not come yet—when all the great appropriation bills have been reported to the House, and when we shall have, not merely the estimates transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the actual legislation and appropriations by the House on which to form estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. Then we shall be able to get within one hundred millions—and some gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee have got no nearer than that—of the probable expenses of that fiscal year. And certainly no one will then be misled, as my colleague from New York has been, into misstating the estimates put out by the Treasury Department, and furnished to Congress in the Book of Estimates, as the actual appropriations to be made by this Congress. And then the truth can be known.

I think the country can wait until that time—I notice there has been no revolution since the remarks that were made last week—and we shall have something accurate upon these subjects. In other words, I think perhaps it would be just as well if the course usually taken were followed in this case, and these estimates were put out when the general deficiency bill is reported. Actual facts might then be stated, rather than misstatements founded upon the estimates of the Treasury Department. If this course had been pursued, my colleague from New York would not have been misled into making the extravagant statements he has made this morning about the expenditures of this Congress.

But so far as the shipping bill is concerned, I am in favor of putting everything into the RECORD that any gentleman wishes to offer who does not take the time of the House.

Mr. SULZER. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. BRUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], that he be permitted to print in the RECORD the statistics and figures which he presents. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Has not leave been already granted to print on the pending bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. It has.

Mr. SULZER. Of course it has; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I object to the unanimous consent being granted.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; it makes no difference.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will not object in this case.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Minnesota objects, the gentleman from New York can print under the leave heretofore granted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not want the gentleman from New York cut out. If there is no doubt about it, that is all right.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not printed by unanimous consent in that case.

Mr. SULZER. I understand from the Speaker's clerk that I have the right to print this letter and these statistics in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. There can be no question about it under the general rule adopted and cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the Chair is not familiar with the matter. The understanding of the Chair is that the gentleman's remarks were entirely out of order and that his speech and his statistics would not have been permissible had the objection been made. The rule is that under the five-minute rule gentlemen must in their observations confine themselves to the pending bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. He is presumed to have done that unless the point of order is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair makes that statement in answer to the question of the gentleman as to the printing of the statistics.

Mr. SULZER. Under the rule as adopted in regard to this matter I believe I have the right to print these statistics and this letter as a part of my remarks. And, sir, I shall do so.

Mr. STEELE. I think the leave to print pertained to the general debate and not to the five-minute debate.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman thinks he has that right, he can exercise it, and the question will be for the House to determine later.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to make this statement here and now; I do not intend to be taken off my feet. The Chair has said that my remarks were out of order; I challenge that statement. My remarks are in order, and are in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The CHAIRMAN. One moment; the time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in his opening remarks on the sundry civil bill now under consideration, commented adversely on this Hanna-Payne subsidy bill, and said if the bill should become a law there would not be sufficient money in the Treasury for the next fiscal year to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman from New York has not been recognized to make any motion or to speak to any amendment.

Mr. SULZER. "The gentleman" has been recognized, and I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state——

Mr. SULZER. I believe I have the floor, and I do not consent to yield it at present to anyone.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] stated, in answer to an expression of the Chair that his time had expired, that he desired to offer an amendment to strike out the last word, and on that motion the Chair recognizes him for five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from New York may be permitted to conclude his remarks, and then I trust we may get on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I hope I will not be interrupted again. I have no desire to delay this bill. I am trying to help my friend. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] commented upon this Hanna-Payne subsidy bill in opening the debate upon this bill. Now, sir, is it out of order for me to answer the gentleman from Illinois, and to say to him that I entirely concur in what he said in regard to that Hanna-Payne subsidy bill, and in regard to its contemplated passage at this session of Congress?

In order to prove conclusively that the gentleman from Illinois was right in what he said regarding the subsidy bill, I want to print in the RECORD the statement of one of the greatest authorities in this land on the shipping interests of the country and on the American merchant marine, a man who has devoted his life to the study of this question, who has written, according to the best authorities, the standard work on the subject. He has, at great expense to himself, after great trouble and labor, prepared this table of statistics showing exactly how much money will go into the pockets of this syndicate of shipowners who drafted the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill, who brought it from Philadelphia here, gave it to the chairman [Mr. PAYNE] of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of this House, and gave it to Mr. HANNA in the Senate. They held hearings on that bill, but not on mine, and reported it without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

It is the syndicate's bill, and if it should by any chance become a law it would enrich a few men in the syndicate to the extent of from $40,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year, and every dollar of that money will come out of the pockets of the toiling masses of our country. I concur in what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said in regard to the subsidy bill, and I now ask unanimous consent to print this letter and this table of statistics, and I hope the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will not object. But if he does, it will make no difference, as I have the right under the rule to print the letter and the statistics as a part of my remarks:

38 WEST SECOND AVENUE, DENVER, COLO., February 7, 1899.

DEAR SIR: Yesterday I mailed you a table of estimated cost of the H. P. bill and said I would write further to-day.

The table in question is based upon arrivals and departures of vessels in our foreign trade. The Bureau of Statistics has advised me as follows: "Total tonnage entered in foreign trade at seaports, 21,443,738; cleared in same trade, 21,890,781;" in both movements, 43,334,519 tons last year (1898).

Going back twenty-five years to find a fair average of increase in tonnage that we may apply to the future as a ratio, I find it has been 6½ per cent. Therefore we may look for 6½ per cent annual increase of tonnage movement in future. The opening of the Nicaragua Canal will increase the ratio, if anything. Having the tonnage of arrivals and departures, what we next need to know is the length of the average voyage in our trade abroad. From careful calculations I have fixed this at 3,756 miles. Next we want the average "compensation" per ton. I have fixed this at 82.62 cents for a voyage of the average length, allowing for a due proportion of compensation under "b" to be added to "a," section 1. The first year of the bill will be A. D. 1900.

We must add to tonnage movement 12.5 per cent of that in 1898 (being two years' growth). Take that amount of tonnage and multiply it by the average distance in hundreds of miles, and the product multiply by the (82.62 cents) compensation per hundred miles, and we have the "compensation" per year of the entire fleet in A. D. 1900 to start with. Then the columns set out different percentages of the entire fleet "compensation" in tens—90, 80, and so down to 20—and then 12½ and 8 per cent, where our present share of carriage may be to start with. The second year it should advance to 12.5 per cent; the third year to 20 per cent, and so on to 80 per cent, as the figures in black type show.

You will note that in the first year, A. D. 1900, under the bill, if American shipping carried all our foreign commerce, the "compensation" would be forty millions or more, and that at the rate of 6½ per cent annual increase (the rate of the last twenty-five years) this sum will double every sixteen years. Starting at forty millions in 1900, the amount would be fifty millions in 1904, sixty millions in 1908, seventy millions in 1912, eighty millions in 1916, ninety millions in 1920, one hundred millions in 1924, and so on.

At this figure of cost for the whole marine needed in our trade, the question is pertinent, How much of a marine will our people want? They pay their money and will one day make their choice. We now have, or may have to start with, 8 per cent. In eight to ten years, if the law shall prove good for anything, we should have 80 per cent—at least 50 per cent of the carriage in trade with shipping nations, and the balance of 30 per cent with nations and communities having few, if any, vessels. That is to say, such a share of transportation as will cost us fifty millions in 1909. [See table.]

Now, when the people perceive that we might and should have such statesmanship in Congress as to attain to 80 per cent of our foreign trade carriage at no cost at all they will feel justified in repudiating such a measure as the bill in question and the party that presumed to pass it, and they may go so far in their indignation as to curse the sea and all its ships and refuse to do anything for an interest that could find it in its heart to impose upon their patriotism. Right-minded men will be fortunate if they can then persuade the people to insist upon proper measures—just regulations of their foreign trade and transportation—which will do for the country what good statesmanship would do for it now—pass the "Sulzer bill."

In conclusion let me say, you may split the figures of my table in two and still show the impracticability of the Hanna-Payne bill. It is a gross fraud to say the bill will only cost a few millions a year. If that is all it will cost—what the Commissioner of Navigation has stated—then the law is not expected to be good for anything. Indeed, "it presents a strong dilemma in a desperate case."

All this matter I have foreseen for years. That has set my judgment against a bounty law. There is only one policy, that of the fathers, good for the evil of a decayed marine. The treaty talk in opposition is only fit to be indulged in by spoilsmen and simple folk. What a great opportunity Mr. HANDY has missed, with his free-ship rot! He could have put his guns on solid rock, but has preferred a bog, where they will soon sink out of sight.

Very truly, yours,

WM. W. BATES.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

NOTE.—If the law works well, the best that can be expected from it is to make a track through the table as designated by the black figures, but if the law is abortive the track made may never advance beyond the 20 per cent column.

The average increase of our fleet in foreign carrying the past twenty-five years is 6½ per cent, allowed for here.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do insist upon the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have seen that same statement, and it is full of error from beginning to end.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from New York has the right to print under the order heretofore made.

Mr. CANNON. As objection has been made, I desire recognition for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to proceed with this bill.

Mr. SULZER. My five minutes have not quite expired, and I just wish to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that I understand I have a right to print this letter and this table of statistics under the rule already adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a matter for the House to determine hereafter.

Mr. SULZER. And I desire now to serve notice on the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that as long as I am a member of this House he will never get unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. All right.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make progress with this bill. What I stated in general debate on Thursday last speaks for itself. I am willing to stand by every word that I uttered at that time. Nor can I be driven from what I said then, or switched off into immaterial discussion here by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] on the other side, who misinterprets my remarks and seeks, in his zeal, to gain a supposed partisan advantage thereby.

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the country has not misinterpreted his remarks.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the country is all right, and the statement is all right, and it is strong enough and true enough to withstand the partisan misrepresentation that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] on the other side desires to make, and it is strong enough to stand the deprecating remarks of the gentleman [Mr. PAYNE] upon this side of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I am willing to stand on that statement, and having said that much, and the statement speaking for itself, I ask that the Clerk may proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just one word. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to impeach the accuracy of the Treasury exhibits made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there can be any doubt about what I said. I suggested to gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations on both sides of the House that they ought to wait until the House had acted upon the appropriation bills, and not take the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury. I only want to make one illustration, Mr. Chairman, of the inaccuracy of this course of procedure. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] estimated the appropriations for the Army at $145,000,000 and again at $42,000,000. That was an addition. It is a matter of public notoriety, has been stated in the press—and I do not know but the bill has been reported—that the Army bill carries $79,000,000 instead of $145,000,000. The truth is that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury was based on an army of 150,000 men.

Mr. COX. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE. On an army of 150,000 men, and the bill is based on an estimate of 100,000 men, and the amount it carries is $79,000,000. There is no man in this House who believes that we will have an army exceeding 100,000 men, or that will exceed 75,000 men in the year 1900. That is the reason why I have made this suggestion. There is a very important cutting down of the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, and every member of this House knows as well as the gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Appropriations that we seldom, if ever, come up to the estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury in our appropriations.

Mr. MARSH. I should just like to say to my friend from New York that the estimate of $79,000,000 that the Army appropriation bill will carry is based upon an army of 90,000 men.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to be judged, touching all I have said, by the sense of the majority of this House. The gentleman from New York in his wisdom deprecated the fact that, exercising my function in charge of this bill, I saw proper to speak of the expenditures of the Government. I submit to the lecture that the gentleman from New York gives; but, after submitting, I say again that if to-day was last Thursday, under the same conditions I would repeat every word I said then. And I say again that the statement made as to the aggregate of the expenditures that will be made for the Army in this fiscal year I have no doubt is short of the fact. I believe, from the best inquiry that I am able to make, that the statement made as to the expenditures of the coming fiscal year will not exceed the fact when they come to be made.

So much for that. The gentleman says that much of this is estimate, and that the estimates are always too large. That is the general rule under normal conditions, but we passed a deficiency bill for the support of the Army just before the holidays for the last half of the fiscal year, if I recollect aright, of about $70,000,000; and yet, with that Army being decreased from that time to this, and less than was expected when the estimates were submitted for which the appropriations were made, there is over $10,000,000 again submitted that the general deficiency bill will carry for the Army for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Now, all I aimed to do in my remarks upon Thursday last was to call the attention of this House to the fact that in my judgment, with the present revenue laws upon the statute books, we could not hope to meet the expenditures of the current year and the coming fiscal year for the support of the Army and Navy and for the whole public service substantially as it is without incurring a deficiency, and to insist, if new lines of expenditure were to be authorized that are not now authorized, that hand in hand with the authorization of the expenditure should go provisions for the payment thereof. That is all. I do not desire to make that speech again, and have no apology to make for it. I trust, without misrepresentation from a partisan standpoint upon the other side, or through mistake upon this side, we may progress with the bill.

Mr. BERRY. May I ask the gentleman a question? The gentleman seems to be very conversant with all appropriations made in this body. Can he give us an estimate of what the Payne-Hanna bill will cost? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The Payne-Hanna bill is not before this committee, and, I apprehend, will not be before this House during the consideration of this bill. [Applause.] I have no desire to discuss it at this time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, of course I am not lecturing——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate upon the amendment offered by the gentlemen from New York is exhausted.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that point is well taken. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course, I do not assume to lecture the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or to criticise the times or seasons of making his remarks. I should have said the same thing in reference to his estimates for 1900, whether he had attacked the Nicaragua Canal bill or the shipping bill or not. In the course of his remarks the other day it did appear a little interesting to me to know that the gentleman from Illinois had not a word to say on the two days that we spent trying to appropriate eight milions and a half dollars for public buildings throughout the country, and that he should not have had any criticism to make about that and raise his warning voice against a deficiency in 1900; but he was drawn into a criticism of two great public measures which in the year 1900, if both were enacted into law, would not call upon the Treasury for one-half the amount that the House was seeking to vote out of the Treasury for public buildings. I was a little surprised about it.

The gentleman says the estimates for the Army for this year, ending July 1, 1899, are greater than the appropriation bill; that one deficiency bill of seventy millions has already passed, and that another deficiency of ten millions is asked for. The gentleman knows, and no member of the House expected that if we were going to carry on war and had war with Spain these first estimates and first appropriations would pay the expenses of the Army during that war. We all expected heavy deficiency bills. Now, we have a treaty of peace ratified by the Senate——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. I have only a moment.

Conditions have changed, and no one expects we are going to have 200,000 men in the field during the next year, or 100,000, or even 90,000, men provided for in the Army appropriation bill. Therefore I say that this fact ought to be called to the attention of the country, and instead of an expenditure of $145,000,000 for 150,000 men it should be stated to the country that we do not expect—that the Military Committee do not expect—more than 90,000 men, and they appropriate $79,000,000 instead of $145,000,000, thus decreasing the amount in the deficiency reported and wiping it out by $66,000,000.

It was simply my purpose to call the attention of the House and the attention of the country to the fact that the enormous estimate probably would not be met by appropriations by at least $66,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to add just one word at this point, and then I am done. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] seeks to muddy the waters by switching off upon the proposed enactment of certain bills authorizing the erection of public buildings, and seems to think that the "member from Illinois" was not performing his duty because he was not opposing these bills.

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. Let me say to my friend from New York that perhaps I did not perform my duty, and I am willing to take the discipline of my constituency if I fail to perform it. Many times I have failed to perform my duty.

It is bad for me, but after all it does not affect much the whole people. I have learned from observation, I will say to the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, that men die, go out of this House, come into it, pass away, and still everything and everybody survives. It is of but little importance whether I failed in my duty in not opposing the public building bills; but if an answer was necessary, where was the clarion voice of the gentleman from New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow an answer right there?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. "The gentleman from New York" appeared and objected to a bill which proposed to erect a public building in a little town of 2,500 inhabitants, and was voted down by a vote of 85 to 15.

Mr. CANNON. And then the gentleman from New York retired. But, Mr. Chairman, I will not be switched off to a discussion on public buildings. Let it be said that if it be unwise to pass them, do not pass them. And still the gentleman says that my estimates are unreliable, because the Army bill is only to carry $79,000,000. If the Army bill only provides for $79,000,000 for a year's support of 90,000 men, a portion of those men to be used in the Philippines, in Cuba, and Porto Rico, it is at least $45,000,000 short, in my judgment, and will have to be made up by deficiency.

I am not criticising an army of 90,000 men; I am for an army of 50,000 as a minimum and an army of 100,000 for a maximum. I am for every man and every dollar that is necessary, at home and abroad, in outlying territories, whether it be much or little, and realizing this fact, this being my position, for I stood when the Army bill was being considered making the best battle I could for a sufficient army, as I shall stand in the future, and as these expenditures are absolutely necessary, I want the House and the country to understand what they are, and then the House and the country will be willing to make them.

But I do not want them minimized for any general purpose or purposes touching the legislative good of the public service, unless such proposition not only be worthy, and unless they go hand in hand with provisions to pay the expenses that are necessary to carry them out. That is all I said, in substance, and it is all I say now.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to correct a statement made by my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH], who stated that the military appropriation bill provided for only 90,000 men. It provides for 100,000 men; it provides for what is known as the Hull bill, and it is about $79,500,000, and, as was well pointed out by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the appropriation was so pared down and various items were so much cut that it will be necessary in the Fifty-sixth Congress next December to include in the deficiency bill as much as $45,000,000, if not more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason they do not put it in this bill?

Mr. HAY. Because they do not want it to go to the country that the Army is going to cost $125,000,000 or $130,000,000. That is the reason of it, and that is the reason the bill was cut down in committee. Everybody understood it, everybody knew it, and every thinking and intelligent man must so understand it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] was not present perhaps at some of the hearings, but it was stated by the gentleman who prepared these statistics for the bill that he prepared them entirely upon the estimates made for the men in the Hull bill, and the Hull bill provides for 100,518 men. That is the truth of the matter so far as the military appropriation bill is concerned.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, it is rather pleasant on this cool morning, when the blood is not circulating actively, to find the leaders on the other side pulling each other's hair. [Laughter.] The distinguished gentleman from New York claims credit for attacking, along with my distinguished friend from Missouri, the appropriation of seven or eight million dollars for public buildings in different parts of this country, when there has not been a public-building bill passed in this House, except in a case of extreme necessity, since the Fifty-third Congress, and that bill contemplated the expenditure of only eight or nine million dollars.

Yet the gentleman stands here with a bill representing the great "merchant marine" of this country, or a snydicate, or whatever you please to call it—a bill framed probably in the city of New York—which has in advance of it an argument written by the attorney of the shipping interests of this country, and an argument appended to it, with the bill squeezed in between, for the purpose of taking from the Treasury of the United States probably $300,000,000 in the next ten or fifteen years. Yet he rose when a bill was presented here for a public building at Carrollton, Ky., to cost $25,000, and made objection.

I suppose the reason he objected was that he wanted a little more in the way of shipping subsidies for the benefit of the "merchant marine" of the country. And there is the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who so earnestly led the fight here the other day—a gentleman coming from a State that has only three or four more Congressmen than the State of Kentucky and with territory proportionately no larger—that gentleman claims to be a "watch dog of the Treasury," too, self-constituted; yet his State of Missouri has drawn $10,000,000 from the United States Treasury for public buildings, and his virtue on this question comes at the "eleventh hour," when the Treasury has been looted for the benefit of his State.

And there is the distinguished Speaker of this body, who objects so much to appropriations for public buildings. I looked over the list of these bills the other day, and I found that a town in the State of Maine of 940 people has a public building costing $40,000. And while my distinguished friend from Maine, the late Mr. Milliken, for whom I had the highest regard and whom we were all glad to hear complimented when he had passed away, while he was at the head of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds there was hardly a town in the State of Maine of eight or nine hundred inhabitants that did not get a public building of some kind. That State, with only four Representatives on this floor, has had 12 public buildings——

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Eighteen.

Mr. BERRY. Eighteen! Great heavens! I am astonished more than ever. I hardly deemed that possible. Yet these gentlemen stand here to defend the public Treasury! I might refer also to my friend from Delaware, who is not present this morning. I understand his State is probably going to elect Mr. Gray United States Senator to-day, because enough Republicans will be providentially kept away to-day to make the next Senator from Delaware a Democrat. And I hope it may be so—from a Democratic standpoint.

A MEMBER. He is not a Democrat.

Mr. BERRY. And there is my distinguished friend from the State of California—I do not see him here to-day—who presented himself here the other day as defending the public Treasury. He appeared before the River and Harbor Committee asking an appropriation to improve the channel leading into the Golden Gate, which we have time and again heard men from the Western seaboard boast of as being the greatest harbor on the face of the earth. He asked that, because there is a ferryboat running across that harbor from Oakland, there should be an appropriation to blow up two rocks lying in that channel.

We proposed to put a light on the rocks to keep ships off that part of the channel. We proposed to put a bell buoy there that would roll with the waves and by its ringing give notice of the dangerous rocks. But nothing of that kind would do; and the gentleman got an appropriation of $100,000 incorporated in the river and harbor bill for present expenditure, with $525,000 more to be spent under contract, so as to have those two rocks removed. Yet that gentleman comes here and announces: "I am the defender of the public Treasury. Do not dare to take a dollar out for a public building." [Laughter.] We have such gentlemen all over this House.

I do not want to be held up before this House as one who has endeavored to loot the public Treasury. I represent in part a State that pays every year into the Treasury $27,000,000 as internal revenue on tobacco and whisky. Republicans here say that that tax is paid by the consumer. That would not be a singular suggestion to come from a Democrat; but I never heard such a suggestion in any other case from a Republican, because they have been claiming all their lives that the consumer does not pay the tax. If gentlemen want to do something for the benefit of our American shipping, let them remove the present high duties; let them give us free ships; let us navigate the ocean as God Almighty intended, upon an equal basis with other nations, and then we shall not have occasion to call for any subsidies for our shipping.

It is the high protective duties that have encumbered our merchant marine and given occasion for it to be said, as was said by our deceased friend, Mr. Dingley, "It is a sad spectacle to observe the deterioration of our merchant marine." [Applause.]

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs takes issue with the statement which I made a few minutes ago, during the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], when I stated that the Army appropriation bill, which will be reported to this House to-day or to-morrow, will carry something over $79,000,000 for the coming fiscal year for the support of the United States Army, and that that appropriation is upon such a basis as not to cover on the average more than 90,000 troops in the service during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MARSH. One minute. We find, by going back over our history, that when the Army was limited to 25,000 men its average was a little over 23,000, if I recollect right, and we estimate that with a limit of 100,000 men there will not be at any one time on an average exceeding 90,000 men in the Army.

Mr. STEELE. And there will not be, either.

Mr. MARSH. You are right. There will not, because under the law they can not enlist beyond the number which is provided, and they can not hit it exactly, and the result of experience is that where you have a maximum limit of the number of troops in the Army you will on an average fail by about 10 per cent in reaching that limit. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], if he does not know it now, will know it later, that that appropriation is based upon an average of 90,000 troops in the Army instead of 100,000.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. You undoubtedly have ciphered it out how much it costs per head to keep standing armies, and I should like to know that.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty about that sort of ciphering, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will readily see it, is that it will cost more with an army of thirty or forty or fifty thousand men, more or less, in our trans-Pacific and West Indian possessions—it will cost more to keep them there than it would to keep them within the present boundaries of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know is this——

Mr. MARSH. The cost of transportation is a large item.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MARSH. No; not now. The cost of transportation is a large item. How often it will become necessary to transport the troops from those islands on account of sickness, on account of their health, and to supply their places with other troops—how often those trips will have to be made is a matter that no man can determine. If they must be relieved every six months, the expense will be more than if they must be relieved only every twelve months or only every eighteen months. So the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] can readily see the difficulty of estimating just what the Army will cost.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you this question: How much does it cost per head to keep the Army here at home?

Mr. MARSH. It is impossible to determine that, but on an average——

Mr. COX. The Adjutant-General says about a thousand dollars per head.

Mr. MARSH. When you take into consideration the building of fortifications, the construction of barracks, the construction of buildings for the care of troops and animals, and all that sort of thing, it will be not far from $900 per head in the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When you come to consider these trans-Pacific and transoceanic journeys, you have got to add to that the cost of taking them over there and the cost of bringing them back to keep them from dying, have you not?

Mr. MARSH. That is what I have said.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And then they get additional pay for service outside of the United States.

Mr. MARSH. That is an item that the gentleman from Missouri must know can not be arrived at exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, let me ask one more question. I do not want to bother you——

Mr. MARSH. No; you do not bother me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They get 25 per cent additional, do they not, when they serve outside of the United States?

A MEMBER. That provision was stricken out.

Mr. MARSH. They only do that during the period of war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Under our system, we are preparing for a perpetual state of war, are we not?

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that if instead of making a speech he will confine himself to the question he will see that the 25 per cent only applies during war, and that provision was stricken out of the bill that passed the House the other day.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to close debate upon this paragraph in five minutes, and in asking it I want to say to the gentleman, and all gentlemen, that the Army appropriation bill will be under consideration in a day or two. We have troubles enough of our own on the sundry civil bill, and I trust that the Military Committee will discuss army matters on the Army appropriation bill and that other members will discuss the postal subsidy when that bill comes up. I want to say that to friends and enemies both.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that I would not have said a word had it not been that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] injected the Army bill into this debate.

Mr. CANNON. I think the injection started with the Committee on Military Affairs and with the gentleman from New York. Now I ask unanimous consent that debate may be closed in five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he can not amend his request to make it ten minutes. I would like to have about four or five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, I will amend it and make it ten minutes.

Mr. BRUCKER. I will ask the gentleman if he can not further amend his request and make it twenty minutes? The bigbugs of the House have been recognized in this squabble, and I now ask that the small fry may have a chance.

Mr. CANNON. The big fry and the medium fry and the small fry, the upper crust, the under crust, and the stuffing between the two crusts can all debate the Army bill when it comes up in two or three days.

Mr. BRUCKER. The trouble is the upper crust have exhausted the subject, so far as they are concerned. We ought to be permitted to have an opportunity.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I object.

Mr. CANNON. Then I move that debate on this paragraph be closed in ten minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri for five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Which one?

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The Chair desires to say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is entitled under the rules to first consideration, and after he is recognized the Chair will endeavor to recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. DOCKERY. I will take five minutes later to reply to the gentleman.

[Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have been much touched this morning by the little differences between the two solons in the council who, on the floor of this House, control the policy of the other side. [Laughter.] Perhaps it is the "first fruit" of Eastern empire. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I wish to call attention to a few more "first fruits" of eastern empire disclosed by the speech made the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and the speech made this morning by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. The gentleman from New York differs with the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as to the estimate of army expenditures, and he bases his difference upon the fact that our past expenses have been due to the war with Spain. I wanted to interrupt him and ask the question, how much less the war with the Philippines would cost than the war with Spain has cost—per day, per week, or per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we were told when the Senate was urged to ratify the treaty the other day without amendment of the Philippine clause that it would bring us several great and good things. One was peace. Every sensible man in the United States knew that it would bring us war; every sensible man knew that we were at peace with Spain, a peace which Spain dared not disturb, but that the moment we undertook to take possession of the Philippines without any assurance either from the Senate or from the President of the temporary character of our occupancy that it would bring us war with the Filipinos, 7,000 miles away from our shore, certainly a bloody, probably a long, and probably a very expensive war. The very anticipation of the unamended ratification brought us war. So the picture was drawn of peace, and when the consummation came it was war.

Another picture drawn as a fruit of annexation was that of great "commercial expansion" that was going to come to our people by our possession of the Philippines. What do we learn? We learn by the speech of the gentleman from Illinois the other day that again the picture drawn to our imagination had been blotted out and a new picture of obstruction to commercial expansion has been presented in its place. Why? Because he tells us that our Eastern empire, our "new conditions," will cost so much money for military and naval operations that we can not afford to construct the one great work that practically looks toward genuine commercial expansion, and that is the Nicaragua Canal. Speaking for my own people, the construction of the Nicaragua Canal will do more to furnish them new markets for their products than the possession of all the Philippine Islands, and three or four provinces of China thrown in, with the canal unconstructed, can or will furnish.

I desired to say this right here because I thought it followed in its right place after what has just been said. It is well that we should consider these two pictures, the first picture that was promised, of "peace and commercial expansion," and the second, the picture that is really presented to us—"war with a half-naked, breech-clouted, helpless people armed with bows and arrows, whom we must shoot down because we want to subjugate their own country and subdue them to our ends." It is well, because when we consider the two pictures the last picture of the two cries to the American people, cries to the American Congress in a voice that is absolutely unmistakable, "Your Eastern empire is all folly; it is already a failure, a cruel failure; halt in your career before you continue it further." [Applause.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Depot for the Tenth light-house district: For repairing and enlarging the light-house depot at Buffalo, N. Y., $50,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 6, insert "Point Hueneme light station, California: For right of way to public road, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After amendment last adopted insert:
"For expenses for construction of a telephone line from United States light-house at Point Trinidad, California, to connect with the general telephone system at Trinidad, in Humboldt County, Cal., $250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service: For pay of captains, lieutenants, captain of engineers, chief engineers and assistant engineers, cadets, and pilots employed, and for rations for the same; for pay of a constructor, Revenue-Cutter Service; for pay of petty officers, buglers, seamen, oilers, firemen, coal heavers, stewards, cooks, and boys, and for rations for the same; for fuel for vessels, and repairs and outfits for the same; ship chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; traveling expenses of officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; commutation of quarters; for protection of the seal fisheries in Bering Sea and the other waters of Alaska, and the interest of the Government on the seal islands and the sea otter hunting grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; for enforcing the provisions of the acts relating to the anchorage of vessels in the ports of New York and Chicago, approved May 16, 1888, and February 6, 1893, and an act relating to the anchorage and movement of vessels in St. Marys River, approved March 6, 1896; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and miscellaneous expenses which can not be included under special heads, $1,100,000.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the Chicago Tribune, in discussing proposed reforms, said:

There is an abundance of money to be saved by a just and searching revision of the pension rolls without doing any wrong or injustice to a single deserving pensioner. There is enough money being squandered annually on undeserved pensions to put and keep all our seaports in a state of ample defense and complete protection. The Regular Army could at the same time be recruited up to the new 100,000 maximum and paid an increased wage for colonial garrison work simply out of the present wastage that is going on to please demagogues and to enrich claim agents. Let this ruinous leakage be cut off and turned into national defenses, and the next war alarm will not find us as unprepared as the last one did.

The Washington Post said:

There can be no reasonable doubt that under the act of 1890 there has been an unjustifiable expansion of the pension roll. There is as little reason to doubt that a similar wrong has been committed by Congress in passing special pension bills in cases that ought to have been rejected.

I do not subscribe to either the sentiment or the conclusion reached by either article. I do not believe there is any money being squandered by reason of the administration of the Pension Bureau. There may be some soldiers drawing pensions that are unjust; but if so, I have been unable to find them. They do not live in my district. Upon the other hand, many old soldiers in my district are deserving much larger pensions than they get under the law as it is administered. There are many more soldiers all over the land who are unable to get the pension justly due them than there are who get a pension that does not justly belong to them.

I am equally confident that the Fifty-fifth Congress has not passed special pension bills in cases that should have been rejected. The Invalid Pensions Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, has been most careful in its recommendations, owing to the fact that the Treasury is nearly empty by reason of large appropriations already made and to be made. I am heartily tired of these and other great journals of the country casting their insinuations against that greatest roll of honor, the pension roll. If they know of, or can learn of, any case or cases, they should point to it or them, and not make the insinuation that reflects on the whole. The men who sacrificed and endured so much are entitled to better treatment by the press, the Pension Bureau, and by Congress. If it were not for their sacrifices and heroism, we would not be boasting of a great Republic and would not be able to extend a helping hand to suffering humanity.

The spirit of the founders would have long since been stifled, instead of our presenting the grand spectacle of a Christian, God-fearing people sending the flower and pick of their young men to battle and die for humanity and liberty, with as pure and unselfish motive as the lowly Nazarene in giving His life for the eternal liberty and salvation of us all. The country is tired of these constant attacks on the greatest and most unselfish heroes that ever lived. I would direct the attention of these great journals and of Congress to the great combines and trusts and extravagant appropriations that are sapping the life of the Republic and thwarting the will of the fathers. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the survey of the coasts of the United States and of coasts under the jurisdiction of the United States, including the survey of rivers to the head of tide water or ship navigation; deep-sea soundings, temperature and current observations along the coast and throughout the Gulf Stream and Japan Stream flowing off the said coasts; tidal observations; the necessary resurveys; the preparation of the Coast Pilot; continuing researches and other work relating to physical hydrography and terrestrial magnetism, and the magnetic maps of the United States and adjacent waters, and the tables of magnetic declination, dip, and intensity usually accompanying them; astronomical and gravity observations; and including compensation not otherwise appropriated for of persons employed in the field work, in conformity with the regulations for the government of the Coast and Geodetic Survey adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury; for special examinations that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority, and including traveling expenses of officers and men of the Navy on duty; for commutation to officers of the field force while on field duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $2.50 per day each; outfit, equipment, and care of vessels used in the Survey, and also the repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels; to be expended in accordance with the regulations relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey from time to time prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and under the following heads: Provided, That no advance of money to chiefs of field parties under this appropriation shall be made unless to a commissioned officer or to a civilian officer, who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr Chairman, I have sought the floor to say a few words in reply to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] as to the appropriations that have been made for the State of Missouri on account of public buildings. I find on examining the table referred to by the gentleman that Hannibal, Jefferson City, Kansas City, St. Joseph, St. Louis, Sedalia, and Springfield have all been provided with public buildings; that there have also been erected at St. Louis an appraiser's store building, at a cost of $588,000, and a marine hospital, at a cost of $456,000. It is proper for me to say briefly (because I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House on so unimportant a matter for any length of time) that there is not a single public building in my Congressional district, and that nearly all of the public buildings, costing $9,713,594.71, were authorized before I was elected to Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has there been no public building authorized in the State of Missouri since the gentleman has been a member of the House?

Mr. DOCKERY. There has been. I was about to state the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he supported the bills providing for the erection of those buildings?

Mr. DOCKERY. I did; and my judgment has been vindicated by subsequent events. Jefferson City has a population of 6,742, and is the capital of the State, with a Federal court. The public building there was authorized after I came to Congress. At Kansas City, with a population of 132,716, a public building was authorized after I came to Congress. At St. Joseph, with a population of 52,324, a public building was authorized since I came here; likewise a building for Sedalia, with a population of 14,068, and for Springfield, with a population of 21,850.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman, I believe, did not state the population of Jefferson City.

Mr. DOCKERY. Sixty-seven hundred and forty-two. As I was about to say, of the $9,713,594.71 expended in Missouri for public buildings, $6,097,000 was expended for a public building at St. Louis long before my entrance into the House, and for an appraiser's store, $588,000, and a marine hospital, $456,000—both of these latter buildings being connected with the general public service and not at all local in their uses.

Looking over this list of buildings, I am prepared to say that in my judgment every one of them was a proper object of public expenditure. There can be no suspicion, as I look at the matter, of any lack of merit on the part of either of these propositions. No one of these buildings is in my district. I did not introduce a bill for either of them. The building at Jefferson City was constructed in pursuance of a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. BLAND]; the one at Kansas City was erected under the authority of a bill introduced by the then Representative from our State, Mr. Tarsney; Colonel Burnes introduced the bill for the erection of the public building at St. Joseph; Hon. John T. Heard, the one authorizing the construction of the building at Sedalia, and Hon. W. H. Wade introduced the bill authorizing the public building at Springfield.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that one building in St. Louis cost something over $6,000,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; and constructed as it was, just after the close of the civil war, I assume that private enterprise could have constructed it at very much less cost. My own opinion is that there were perhaps some elements of extravagance in the expenditure, but that was incident to the loose methods which prevailed at that time.

Mr. MAGUIRE. "Private enterprise" probably got a good deal out of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very probably.

So, Mr. Chairman, all these buildings, except those to which I have adverted—and they are small buildings—were authorized before I entered service here. All of them, in my opinion, are meritorious. If propositions for their construction were pending to-day, I would, if the Treasury situation warranted, vote for each one of them. And I will vote for any meritorious public-building bill, provided always the condition of the public Treasury warrants the expenditure.

Mr. HEPBURN. And with the further condition that the building is located in the State of Missouri!

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, I do not think that my good friend from Iowa can fairly make that criticism. I do not believe that he is candid in the criticism.

Mr. HEPBURN. But is it not true that in Missouri you have had as much of expenditure of this kind as in all of the 78 bills which it was proposed to pass the other day, and against which you exercised all of the arts of the filibuster, put together?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is true that from the time the Government was established until now the Federal Government appropriated $9,713,000 for Missouri—during all of the years of our history—while you propose——

Mr. HEPBURN. For 10 buildings.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). While you proposed in one day, at a time when the Treasury was burdened with a deficiency and with great obligations imposed upon it by reason of the war, to add a burden of $10,923,900, and that cost included a building in a beautiful city in the district of my friend [Mr. HEPBURN], and the only information we could get about it was that the postal receipts were "something less than a quarter of a million of dollars."

Mr. HEPBURN. It was supposed that every intelligent gentleman, like the gentleman from Missouri, would know what the receipts were in so important a town as that.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is somewhat indefinite, but I presume it was sufficiently definite for the purposes of my friend from Iowa at that time. He knew that the building was going through, anyhow.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay and subsistence of professional seamen: For pay and subsistence of professional seamen serving as executive officers and mates on the vessels of the Survey, to be immediately available, $27,500.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I just want a very few minutes, not on this particular feature of the bill, but to call the attention of the committee to the Army appropriation bill. There has been much discussion about how much it will cost if the Army is fixed at 100,000 men. Now, let me explain the matter to you, and let us understand each other plainly and frankly. Whenever you increase the Army to 100,000 men, you are going to increase the expenditures for the army establishment, including pensions and the retired list, to $300,000,000 a year. I know very well it is not pertinent to the section now before the House; but I want this House to understand the matter. Upon a close examination of that whole subject—and I see members of the committee before me now—whenever you authorize the President to put your army establishment in the Regular Army at 100,000 men, in less than two years it will cost more than $300,000,000 a year.

Now, I do not propose here to make a speech, but just simply desire to call the attention of the House to it, and whatever may be your conclusions about the matter, without going into the facts about the necessity for it and argument of why it should be done, I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the matter, and I do not think in his honesty and sincerity he will deny it, that in less than two years, with authority to raise the Army to 100,000 men, it will cost the Government $300,000,000 a year. I mean taking the pension roll, taking your retired list, retired officers, and taking your discharged soldiers and transportation, and you are going to land in an appropriation sooner or later of $300,000,000 to maintain the Army. I call that to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he will be very much troubled to dispute it. That is all I desired to say about the matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nassau (N. H.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; two laborers, at $540 each; in all, $3,480.

Mr. MOODY. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is that for the Georgia station?

Mr. MOODY. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, after line 3, insert:

"Cold Springs (Ga.) station: Superintendent, $1,500 fish-culturist, $900; two laborers, at $540 each; in all, $3,480."

Mr. ADAMSON. My purpose, Mr. Chairman, in rising was to call the attention of the committee to this matter. I care to say nothing, Mr. Chairman, except that, not seeing the distinguished chairman of the committee. I rose to call attention to this amendment, which the committee had promised to make. It was omitted in the preparation of the bill, because the title had not at that time been perfected so that the work could be carried forward. The Fish Commissioner has, however, written the committee requesting that it be now inserted; that he is ready to proceed, and would need the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inquiry respecting food-fishes: For field and contingent expenses of the inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food-fishes in the lakes, rivers, and coast waters of the United States, and for the study of the waters of the interior in the interest of fish-culture; for the investigation of the fishing-grounds of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts with the view of determining their food resources, in the development of the commercial fisheries, including the expenses of necessary travel and preparation of reports, $15,000.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following after the word "dollars" in line 6, page 36:

"To enable the United States Fish Commission to make an examination of the different lakes, rivers, and other waters, with a view to the establishment of a branch fish-cultural station under the control of the Government in said State, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in my State there is a great deal of interest in the matter of food fishes. We have a great many streams there, many rivers, and a great many lakes where there are a great many food fishes, so that we need only to be able to care for them; and I think if this provision were made it would cultivate the interest in the matter very considerably in the State of Indiana. The Fish Commission say they would like to make such an investigation, but they have no means to do it, and if they could have an appropriation of perhaps a thousand dollars they would be glad to make the inquiry.

I believe it is an inquiry that ought to be made. Missouri, Tennessee, California, and some other States have these stations already established. It is a very small appropriation. As we are now in the matter of making investigations along the line of preserving the fish of the country, we would be very glad to have such an investigation made in Indiana. We have a pretty good fish law in the State, but it can not be enforced; and if we had the moral support of this law upon the statute books after the investigation I think the law would be better enforced. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I shall have to make the point of order which I reserved. I do not think there is any need to say anything in support of the point of order. It is clearly undertaking new work, not authorized by any law on the statute book with which I am familiar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not, except to say that it seems to me that it is not new matter and not new legislation, in view of the fact that a commission is already established for fish-culture in at least four States of the Union, and it is an appropriation that carries on the work of that commission; and for that purpose it seems to me it is brought within the limit, and that it is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the Fish Commissioner authority under existing law to establish a station at this place in Indiana?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think not. We have none in Indiana, but it is not different to any other place. We want a little appropriation, so that it can be put on a footing with other States.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it would be new legislation.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. It did not so strike me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order on the ground stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver coin, including fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $80,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman in charge of the bill how much was used last year for the transportation of silver coin.

Mr. MOODY. I will say that the whole of the appropriation of last year was used, and there is a deficiency coming estimated at $20,000.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read part of the following memorial introduced in the second session of the Seventh Congress of the United States on February 10, 1803, viz:

A memorial of sundry citizens of the city and State of New York and of the United States was presented to the House and read, praying that a "monument may be erected to perpetuate the memory of a number of American citizens who perished on board of the British prison ships, or who were slain in defense of their country during the Revolutionary war."

Again in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, and Fifty-second Congresses similar memorials were introduced; resolutions, too, of similar import have frequently been favorably reported by the Library Committee, and now, nearly one hundred years after the introduction of the original, I rise in this, the Fifty-fifth Congress, to uplift my voice in favor of another similar resolution reported favorably by the present Library Committee. The subject treated of by these resolutions has become a sort of legacy descending from generation to generation upon the Brooklyn members of this House. I am proud to accept the legacy and advocate the erection of a monument to the memory of the martyrs of the "prison ships of Wallabout Bay," and, as an American citizen, believe that money can not be appropriated by this great Government of ours for a purpose more just, more worthy, or more closely in alliance with the spirit of 1776.

Shortly after the disastrous battle of Long Island, the British, being unable or unwilling to establish prisons on shore for the incarceration of the soldiers and sailors taken in battle, anchored ten—some authorities say eighteen—old and rotten hulks in Wallabout Bay, in front of what is now the navy-yard, for this purpose. The names of six of these hulks, the Scorpion, Transport, Stromboli, Prince of Wales, Hunter, and Jersey (pseudonymed Hell), should be impressed on the minds of all Americans, young and old, in order that they may the more thoroughly understand the heroism, bravery, and suffering which accompanied our struggle for independence and attended the establishment of our Republic.

The sufferings of the people in the Black Hole of Calcutta, the inhumanities of the Inquisition, the cruelties of the Kurds to the Armenians, the barbarity of the Spaniards to the Cuban patriots are as naught and pale into insignificance when compared to the tortures and sufferings undergone by the martyrs of the prison ships—nothing but putrid water to drink, nothing but condemned supplies taken from the hog trough to eat, insufficient clothing to protect them from the icy blasts of winter, no ventilation to make more tolerant the heat of the summer's sun. With disease, pestilence, and insanity about them, is there wonder that they looked forward to but one relief and that relief death? Aye! their sufferings were indeed as those of the damned.

In 1781 Congress having heard of the atrocities on these ships appointed a committee of investigation, that committee consisting of Messrs. Clymer, Boudenot, and Sharp, submitted a very strong report, resolving among other resolutions:

That no circumstances of the enemy's particular situation can justify this outrage on humanity, it being contrary to the usage and custom of civilized nations thus deliberately to murder their captives in cold blood, as the enemy will not assert that prison ships equal to the number of prisoners can not be obtained so as to afford room sufficient for the necessary purposes of life. That therefore the Commander in Chief be, and is hereby instructed to remonstrate to the proper officer within the enemy's lines on the said unjustifiable treatment of our marine prisoners, and demand in the most express terms to know the reason of this unnecessary treatment toward them.

These resolutions were passed, and the Commander in Chief, our immortal Washington, wrote to the British officer in command.

Alas! all this availed naught, for no amelioration of the condition of the prisoners resulted, and to show the awful mortality let us compare the total killed and wounded of the entire Revolution with the deaths on the prison ships. The total killed in the Revolution was as follows:

Monmouth	362	Guilford, N. C	400
Bemis Heights	750	Briar Creek, Ga	400
Trenton	100	Long Island	400
Brandywine	1,000
Germantown	673	Total	4,085

Allow 1,000 more killed and wounded in skirmishes and we have a total of 5,085.

Now for the prison ships. Eleven thousand six hundred and forty-four paid the penalty of death on the Jersey alone, 300 more were incinerated at the destruction by fire of the transport, and Stiles and other historians figure that 20,000 is a low figure for the total mortality; thus nearly 15,000 more men gave up their lives on the prison ships than in the Revolution itself. Why was this awful punishment theirs? Simply because upon being taken prisoners they refused to take the oath of allegiance to the Crown; because they could not and would not recognize the right of the mother country to tax them without representation; for upon capture they were offered their freedom if they would become subjects of King George III; but be it recorded to their immortal honor that out of 30,000 prisoners taken less than 300 accepted this dishonorable proposition, the remainder preferring to take the risk of torture and death. After our defeat at Savannah the British used every means, both fair and foul, to compel 500 prisoners taken there to forswear their country, even threatening to burn their homes and starve their families. With these terrible threats ringing in their ears these noble Georgians and North and South Carolinians, swerving not one jot or tittle from the cause of liberty, answered with one voice, with one accord, "The prison ships and death; Washington and our country is our decision." [Applause.]

In conclusion, I trust that the following amendment, to be offered by my colleague [Mr. SULZER], to follow line 18, page 40 of the present bill under consideration, may not be declared out of order. This amendment is:

That $50,000 is hereby appropriated, provided a like amount is raised by the citizens of Greater New York, for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of the heroes and martyrs who died in British prison ships in Wallabout Bay, New York Harbor, during the Revolution.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, as a Representative from the city of Brooklyn and the State of New York, I desire to say a few words in favor of this appropriation, for there is not a fiber in my nature that does not vibrate the quicker when I contemplate the heroism and self-sacrifices of the prison-ship martyrs. The memory of these heroic men will ever be sacred to all lovers of their country who are familiar with its early history. They perished that a republic might be born whose influence and power would be felt by generations then unborn. They perished, but from their ashes has arisen the grandest and most glorious Republic the world has ever seen.

Mr. Chairman, through their self-sacrifices and heroism we sit in this place to-day in the full enjoyment of freedom's privilege, under a republican constitution—representatives of seventy-five million of the freest people on earth.

Ingratitude is of all things the most despicable. When a nation forgets its progenitors it is on the downward road to decay and dissolution. Each of the original States furnished its quota to this heroic band; their ashes belong to the nation. Let us, therefore, not only pass this appropriation, but erect to the memory of the prison-ship martyrs a monument commensurate with the grandeur and glory of the Republic, one that will reflect credit upon the intelligence and sterling heroism of the men of the Revolution. [Great applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill at this time—I will prepare it in a moment—that $50,000 be appropriated by the Government, provided a like amount is subscribed and paid by the citizens of Greater New York——

Mr. MOODY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SULZER (continuing). To build a suitable monument to the heroic and patriotic soldiers of the American Revolution who died in British prison ships in Wallabout Bay, New York Harbor, during the Revolution. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in charge of the bill whether he will object to this amendment?

Mr. MOODY. I do not object to it now, but I reserve the point of order against it. It is a matter entirely outside of the function of this committee at this time.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will not be so unpatriotic as to interpose an objection. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk, however, and ask to have it reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 18, page 40, "that $50,000 is hereby appropriated, provided a like amount is raised by the citizens of Greater New York, for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of the heroes and martyrs who died in British prison ships in Wallabout Bay, New York Harbor, during the Revolution."

Mr. MOODY. And against that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few simple words.

With all that has been so well, so truly, and so eloquently said by my distinguished colleagues from New York [Mr. DRIGGS and Mr. HOWE] I entirely concur. It is well known to every student of American history that about 20,000 American soldiers died, or were ruthlessly killed, in British prison ships during the Revolutionary war. That crime was the greatest tragedy of the Revolution.

I do not think there can be a man on the floor of this House to-day who is so unpatriotic as to object to this appropriation. The Republic must not forget these men who died in the cause of liberty and for her independence. The spirit of 1776 should be kept alive that freedom may survive. All that we ask is that the Government appropriate $50,000 provided the citizens of Greater New York subscribe a like amount to build a suitable monument to these heroes who sacrificed their lives that the Republic might be born, to erect to their memory a monument fitting and proper to commemorate their heroism, their tragical death, and the deep damnation of their taking off. No tongue can ever tell, no pen can ever picture their misery, their suffering, and their sad deaths.

Mr. Chairman, many, many years ago in the city of New York the Society of Tammany, or the Columbian Order, appropriated a large amount of money and appointed a committee of distinguished citizens for the purpose of gathering together the bones of these Revolutionary heroes, which were then whitening the beach along Wallabout Bay, and give them decent burial. After a great deal of trouble, expense, and time the bones of these Revolutionary soldiers were gathered together by the committee, and they were buried amid pomp and circumstance, and with military honors, in the beautiful mausoleum in old Trinity churchyard. That grateful and patriotic act is one of the grandest, one of the kindest, and one of the noblest acts in all the great achievements of the Tammany Society.

I am glad that this matter has been brought up in the House to-day. It is a matter of much personal gratification to me to tell of this incident in the history of Tammany—a society of which I am proud to be a member, and which has always been true to the Republic.

The Government of the United States should have erected a suitable monument to these heroes long ago.

To-day we are celebrating the martyrdom and the heroism of the sailors who went down in the Maine. It is eminently fitting and proper that we should do so. To-day the patriotic people of the Republic are contributing money to build a monument to those heroes.

Why not, sir, on this memorable occasion, inspired by the patriotism and the heroism of the soldiers and the sailors of the Republic, pass this little appropriation and build to the memory of the heroes who died in British prison ships during the war for independence a monument that will forever perpetuate their suffering, their heroism, their martyrdom, for the cause of freedom, and forever demonstrate that republics are not ungrateful. Gratitude is the fairest flower that sheds its perfume in the human heart. Let us be grateful. Let us remember the Maine. Let us remember the patriots who made the Union possible, who saved the Union, who vindicated the Union. Let us remember our soldiers and our sailors dead, and our soldiers and our sailors living. All honor to them. All glory to them.

Yes, I am glad of this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to speak in favor of this amendment. Coming from the great metropolis of the Republic, I am glad to say that the grand old political organization of Tammany Hall, ever true to its tenets and its principles, years and years ago, out of its own exchequer, inspired by its own love for freedom, for the Republic, for the Revolutionary heroes, for the martyrs to liberty, gathered together these sacred and patriotic bones and buried them under the great mausoleum in Trinity churchyard, where they now rest.

I hope and trust that there is no member on the floor of this House who will object to this amendment. If there is a spark of patriotic gratitude in the members of this House, it will pass unanimously. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is a bill pending before the appropriate committee to authorize the construction of a monument to which the gentlemen have alluded in their speeches, and I have no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations will gladly make the appropriation for that purpose when it is authorized by law; but at the present time it is not authorized, and I am constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that such a bill has been introduced in Congress every year for the last seventy-five years, and it seems to have about as much chance of passing this House as a camel has to get through the eye of a needle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection and administration of forest reserves: To meet the expenses of executing the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, for the care and administration of the forest reserves, to meet the expenses of forest inspectors and assistants, superintendents, supervisors, surveyors, rangers, and for the employment of foresters and other emergency help in the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for advertising dead and matured trees for sale within such reservations: Provided, That forestry agents, superintendents, and supervisors, and other persons employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior wholly with reference to their fitness and without regard for their political affiliations, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, $175,000.

Mr. MOODY. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this paragraph be postponed for a time, with the privilege of recurring to it hereafter. There are some amendments to it under consideration.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $325,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and, second, to surveying under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States, except railroad land grants and such indemnity lands as the several States may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, and other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture, and lines of reservations, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, and in cases of exceptional difficulties in the surveys, where the work can not be contracted for at these rates, compensation for surveys and resurveys may be allowed by the said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $15 for township, and $12 for section lines: Provided further, That in the States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, the Territory of Arizona, and the district of Alaska, there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township, and $20 for section lines: And provided further, That hereafter all standard, meander, township, and section lines of the public land surveys shall, as heretofore, be established under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whether the lands to be surveyed are within or without reservations, except that where the exterior boundaries of public forest reservations are required to be coincident with standard, township, or section lines such boundaries may, if not previously established in the ordinary course of the public-land surveys, be established and marked under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey whenever necessary to complete the survey of such exterior boundaries. And of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended such an amount as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may deem necessary for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts, by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States. And the system of public-land surveys is hereby extended to the district of Alaska.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 4, on page 56, insert the following:

"That when any railroad company claiming a grant of land under any act of Congress, desiring to secure the survey of any unsurveyed lands within the limits of its grant, shall file an application therefor in writing with the surveyor-general of the State in which the lands sought to be surveyed are situated, and deposit in a proper United States depository to the credit of the United States a sum sufficient to pay for such survey and for the examination thereof pursuant to law and the rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it shall thereupon be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the Director of the Geological Survey, as the case may be, to cause said lands to be surveyed

"For any deposits made by any railroad company hereunder certificates shall be issued, which may be used by such railroad company, its successors or assigns, to the same extent as cash is now allowed in payment of entries of public lands under existing law and regulations for any public lands of the United States in the States where the surveys were made, or for any survey or office fees due the United States from such railroad company on account of surveys of lands within its grant. The Secretary of the Interior shall provide such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the foregoing provisions."

Mr. CANNON. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the laws now in force in relation to surveys of railroad lands may be found scattered through various appropriation bills. From time to time a line has been dropped in here and a line there, but in no one place do we find legislation authorizing a land-grant railroad company to have surveys made upon advancing the funds for that purpose, and the practical operation of the present law has really nullified the power of the companies to advance money for this purpose. There is a permanent appropriation of $125,000 inserted in one of the appropriation acts, with authority on the part of the railroad companies having land grants to add to that appropriation from time to time, thus keeping the amount up to the sum of $125,000. It is also provided in another place that an advance for surveys may be used in commutation of other lands for settlers, etc. In actual practice it has been found, under the rulings of the Comptroller of the Treasury, that the money advanced by the railroad companies can be used only for actual surveys in the field; that no portion of it can be used for office fees and expenses of examining surveys to determine whether or not they have been properly made.

Therefore, this provision inserted in former appropriation bills has, in fact, proved of no utility, and is not being made use of. It is important that all these surveys should be made as speedily as possible. We have in this bill an appropriation of $325,000 for surveying purposes. Until surveys are made, railroad land grants are not subject to taxation. It is important to the sections of country through which these lines of railroad run that the surveys should be speedily made, to the end that the railroad lands may be listed for taxes and opened for settlement. It is important also that the alternate sections belonging to the Government should also be surveyed, in order that they may be opened to homestead entry.

The proposition I now submit amounts simply to this: That the railroad companies may at any time advance the money to have their land grants surveyed. Under this provision, when the money has been advanced, the Government will conduct the survey, paying back to the railroad companies one-half the amount advanced, because the companies own only one-half the lands surveyed, the other half being Government land.

It is important that a measure of this kind should be adopted, so that on these different lines of road—notably the Northern Pacific, where there is, I think, a greater demand for settlement than on other lines—that on the lines of these roads settlement may not be delayed through inability to purchase lands from the railroad companies. Most of these lands are sought to be bought for grazing purposes. Under existing law large tracts have to be purchased. This $325,000 can only be used in surveying lands where settlements have been made, to the exclusion of lands not settled and not susceptible of actual settlement in the ordinary sense, but susceptible of use for grazing purposes. Parties are desirous of acquiring those lands for this purpose and fencing and utilizing them. If we can get the railroad companies to advance money for the surveys, it is for their interest to do so, if they can sell the land; and it is for the interest of the Government that this should be done, if thereby the country can be settled up and the lands listed for taxation in the various States.

This amendment is simply the text of a bill with amendments now upon the Calendar reported by the Committee on Public Lands. It proposes to give, in connection with the $325,000 here appropriated as a survey fund, additional opportunity for surveys without any additional appropriation.

If the companies will advance the money for the surveys, there ought not to be any objection, and I trust my friend will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have so much confidence in the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] that if he were asking unanimous consent to pass this bill I certainly should not object, and would follow him in what seems to me, from his statement, to be very proper legislation; but it is a decisive amendment to existing law, and in the remaining days of this session, this bill having to go to the Senate, being possibly amended there with kindred or germane or possibly nongermane provisions, if we send this item there, the trouble is when you come to perhaps the last night session, in a committee of conference, on propositions to modify here and there, the Senate conferees, charged with the general appropriation bills, have not that technical knowledge that the Committee on Public Lands have.

We have had very great embarrassment heretofore on Senate amendments that have brought up questions touching the land laws, and from this standpoint I hope my friend will ask unanimous consent at the first opportunity to pass this bill, and I hope and believe it will be granted. But for these reasons, with the highest respect for the gentleman, I am constrained to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Examinations of desert lands: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to examine, under such regulations and at such compensation as he may prescribe, the desert lands selected by the States under the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, $3,000.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A good deal has been said about the appropriation for a post-office building at the city of Blair, Nebr.

The town is within what twenty-five years ago was the Third judicial district, over which I presided. I know the city very well, and I estimate the present population at about 4,000. I am unable to agree to the proposition stated by several members that all appropriations for post-office buildings shall be in the large cities.

The post-office system is for the benefit of the whole country. The rate of postage within the United States is uniform, and they charge the same upon all mail matter, whether it is collected and delivered by carriers, or the party carries his mail to the post-office and obtains what is addressed to him there. The cities are favored in the construction of elegant post-office buildings and prompt and inexpensive service. I do not complain of this, but the small cities and towns are entitled to consideration.

I believe every town of 2,000 inhabitants should have a post-office building of brick or stone, costing a reasonable sum, say $25,000. The people of these cities and towns contribute their full share to the support of the postal system, and are entitled in return to have reasonable conveniences for the handling and delivery of their mail. This in small part will give them some of the benefits enjoyed by their brethren in the large cities and lead at no distant day to general town and rural delivery; and a little economy on the part of Congress will save enough to pay all expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAXWELL] withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $300,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. STONE. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "hundred," in the fourth line of page 58, the words "and fifty;" so that it will read, "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 4, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifty."

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to restore the appropriation for the topographic survey to the amount at which it stood six or eight years ago.

In 1892 the appropriation was $250,000. The necessity of a topographic survey as the basis for any intelligent geological work is apparent to anyone. The necessity at this time for this increased appropriation arises from the fact that several years ago the General Government entered upon a policy of cooperation with the several States, arranging with any particular State that the General Government should pay one half the field expenses, together with the office expenses, while the State should pay the other half of the expenses for a topographic survey and map of that particular State. Under that policy this arrangement has been made, and the survey has been completed. It is in progress to-day in the States of New York and Iowa. Half a dozen other States are seeking to make this arrangement.

It is a desirable arrangement for the States themselves, because they are unable to undertake, in any economical and thorough way, the conduct of such a survey and the preparation of such a map. It is a desirable arrangement to the General Government, because it secures from the State one-half of the expense of this work, which the General Government will otherwise have to bear the whole expense of at some time.

If this appropriation stands as it stands in this bill, with the restrictions as to the use of the money which have heretofore prevailed, that a portion of it shall be expended in the semiarid regions of the two Dakotas, Kansas, Nebraska, etc., and that a third of the balance shall be expended west of the one hundred and third meridian, then there will not be enough left to carry on this cooperation with the half a dozen States that are seeking that cooperation to-day, or else there will be practically nothing left for the general work of the Geological Survey east of the one hundred and third meridian.

Now, there have been times when the Government would have been glad to make this arrangement for the cooperation of the States. When the States themselves are ready; when they are making the offer that they will pay one-half the money necessary to carry on this work, the General Government ought to be willing to avail itself of the opportunity.

Take, for instance, the State of Pennsylvania. We spent a million dollars in carrying on a great geological survey of that State, but we did it without any topographic survey and without any accurate map, and the result was that when the observations of the Geological Survey came to be applied to the location to which they were supposed to refer there were instances in which they were 6 or 8 miles away from the point at which certain geological developments were supposed to be. This proposition is simply to enable the Government to cooperate with the States, by the arrangements which the Geological Survey have, to do this work economically and thoroughly. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RAY of New York. I trust that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted, and I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] will favor it. This survey is of great importance and interest to the people of the State of New York, to the people of the State of Pennsylvania, and, in fact, the people of all the States of the Union. It is an important and a scientific work, and it does seem to me that, while the gentleman in charge of the bill and of the appropriations of the House has pointed out to us the necessity for the curtailment of expenses, he ought to see what I know he does see, that we can not afford to stop necessary internal improvements and scientific work in the United States. We are able to carry on the war, we are able to increase the Army, we are able to increase the Navy, and are also able as a nation to maintain ourselves in every other respect. Now, we have had appropriations in former years for this work, last year $170,000 for this work, in 1892 $250,000. It is apportioned among the different States; it is not all confined to one; and in the State of Pennsylvania they have appropriated a like amount to that expended by the United States Government for the same work. Is not that true?

Mr. STONE. About the same.

Mr. RAY of New York. In New York we have heretofore made appropriations and propose to do it hereafter. We want this good work, this magnificent work, to go on, and this matter of $50,000 is a bagatelle, so to speak. While it is a large amount in and of itself, in comparison with the wealth of the country it is a very small amount. I address this language particularly to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I am assured by gentlemen connected with the Geological Survey here at Washington that this work will be seriously crippled and its efficiency impaired if this increase in the appropriation is not granted. I therefore appeal to the House and to the chairman of the committee to favor this amendment and allow it to be adopted. The following figures are of interest:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TOPOGRAPHIC SURVEY.

For 1892 the appropriation was		$250,000
We ask that it be restored to that figure.
For 1897-98 the appropriation was		180,000
Of that there was required to be spent in the semiarid region	$35,000
Required west of the one hundredth meridian	48,000
Required administrative expenses	12,000
		95,000
Remainder left for topographic work in the Mississippi Valley and Eastern States		85,000
Needed for cooperation in Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama		75,000
Remainder for surveys in the great iron, coal, and oil regions of the Mississippi Valley and other Eastern States		10,000

If the $20,000 from the forest surveys is transferred to general topography, as recommended by the Appropriations Committee, this would make remainder available under this last line for work in Eastern States $20,000 instead of $10,000.

As showing the demand for this increased appropriation asked for, at least eight States (New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama) are now offering to cooperate with the Government Survey to the extent of paying one-half of all expenses connected with the work in each of these States, if Congress will only increase the appropriation as requested, in order to push this work more rapidly; and the question of similar cooperation is being agitated in other States. The amount needed to meet this demand is $70,000.

The Government Survey is unable to meet these offers unless the increase asked for is allowed. The work now in progress in other States and Territories can not justly be discontinued in order to meet this demand for cooperation in these new areas.

It will be seen that in this proposed cooperative work the surveys will cost the Government just one-half of what they would otherwise cost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to favor the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and call the attention of the House to some of the necessities for an increase in this appropriation. In the last few months we have appropriated very large sums of money for the civilization of the heathen in foreign countries, for standing armies, for fleets and navies; but we have done very little for the common people of this country. Whenever a great syndicate in this country wants to develop mineral resources, it has no difficulty in employing competent engineers to find out where the mineral resources of the country are; but when an ordinary citizen who desires to go into a development of that kind wishes information the only place he can get such information is from the Government of the United States, and that information is obtained by the carrying on of surveys of this kind.

In 1897 and 1898 I find that the entire appropriation allowed for this purpose was only $180,000. Of this there was spent in the arid regions of the United States $35,000. There was required west of the one hundredth meridian $48,000. There was required in administrative expenses here $12,000, making $95,000, the remainder, leaving for topographical work in the Mississippi Valley and the Eastern States, only $85,000. Now, there was needed for cooperation in Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Georgia, and Alabama $75,000, remaining for surveys of the great iron, steel, and oil regions of the Mississippi Valley and other Eastern States $10,000.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that it is absurd, if we propose to do anything at all along this line, if we propose to keep up this work at all, it is absurd to say that for an increased development in this survey $10,000 was a proper amount for this year. It is true that this bill does carry an increase from $180,000 to $200,000, but this $20,000 does not cover the necessities. The survey for the topographical map for the district that I represent is very important. I can say without contradiction on the floor of this House that there is not a manufacturing district in this country that has developed more rapidly; I can say that there are more manufacturing establishments being built in it to-day in proportion to its size and population and more coal mined in the district I represent than in any other; and yet that that survey has been largely made, and the State of Alabama has cooperated in the payment of the expense for it; but the Director of the Geological Survey tells me that unless this appropriation is increased to this extent he can not complete the topographical map, and the people of that district who are going forward in this development are deprived of this necessary information.

Now, if we are going to increase the tax upon the people of the country, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in his speech the other day, indicated we must, when he said that there would be a deficit of $159,000,000—if we are going to increase our armies and navies to a great extent—I say that the time has come when we ought to do some little for the masses of the people of this country to enable them to develop their industries at home and to make a living for themselves.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to join in the appeal of the gentleman from New York, especially to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to allow this amendment to prevail. I want to say that, coming from a State like West Virginia, that has 17,000 square miles of coal areas, there is no Government work in which our people are more deeply interested than that of the Geological Survey, and there is no branch of it that is of deeper interest to our people, or, in fact, to the people of the whole country, than the topographical part of it. It is the basis of all geological work.

It is the basis of all geological work, it is the basis of all forestry work, it is the basis of all irrigation work; it is simply the scientific determination of the location of streams, the mountains, and the general physical condition of the country, so that all engineer work that was done in the several States must have for its foundation the topographical map of the State. As a result, in a single city in this country, the city of Worcester, Mass., by reason of the survey made by the Geological Survey, its chief engineer reports that $3,000,000 was paid in a single instance, by reason of their ability to locate a proper and sufficient water supply by the aid of the United States topographical map.

In another city in Connecticut a striking illustration is presented where $15,000 had been spent for the purpose of locating a water supply, and a water supply sufficient for all purposes was ascertained and determined from a mere inspection of the topographical map for that State and in a place where it was wholly unexpected.

I want to say to every member of the House who has an earnest desire to see his own section of country developed that the Geological Survey is doing more to that end than anything else that we can conceive of. This is not expensive; it is not false economy in asking for this appropriation. Why? Because the Government has all its body of select and trained topographers, who ought to be kept at work all the time, but by reason of the smallness of the appropriation will not be able to do so.

The State of Maine, the State of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Georgia, and Alabama have already intimated their desire to cooperate with the United States Geological Survey in this work. By this cooperation one-half of the expense is saved. This can not be done unless this appropriation is increased, and therefore we must do the whole work, when otherwise only one-half of it would be paid by the several States. I say it can not be done unless we do an injustice to other sections of the country where the States have not taken this advance step. Under these circumstances, this work is urgently asked by the Geological Survey. It is earnestly sought by the States like my own, where we hope, in the development that is coming in the next quarter of a century, that West Virginia, by reason of its mineral resources which have so long lain dormant, will equal the district of my friend from Alabama. It will be a generous rivalry between us, but it will be in behalf of the South, which we both love.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I am not so familiar with the details of this expenditure, but I rise to support the motion to increase this appropriation, if it is possible, and I hope it may be for the interest of the committee to allow it to be done. The State of Ohio desired to join with the General Government in a contribution of money for this purpose. It has been well said that the Federal Government and State government can go hand in hand for a single expenditure just as well as for the General Government to make one survey and then the State another by itself.

One of the branches of the Ohio legislature made its appropriations at a recent session, but the war came on suddenly, and the State being called upon for a very large contribution, the bill was not called up in the other branch of the legislature. Of course, we are greatly interested in the geological survey of our State. We have very elaborate and extensive coal mines, as everybody knows, as well as other mineral deposits. We are anxious that this work shall go on, and upon the theory that has been presented to me by the Department that the work will be crippled and that they can not cooperate with the States that have already indicated their purpose to make appropriations, I am anxious that this amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. If the friends of this amendment are through presenting the matter, I will state to the committee the consideration that was given to this item by the committee that reported the bill, and then I am quite content to take the sense of the Committee of the Whole.

I hold in my hand the estimate for topography for the coming fiscal year, and it is $180,000.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I ask by whom that was made?

Mr. CANNON. It was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RAY of New York. And did not come from the Geological Survey proper; they did not adopt their figures?

Mr. CANNON. Let us see about that. Last year $175,000 was appropriated for the current year. Let me say to my friend, and I am not going to say anything unkind about the Director of the Geological Survey; he is a very efficient man, a very capable man; but it seems to me that if this matter is of such great merit and he had put in one-half as much time in convincing the Secretary of the Interior of its merits as he has evidently elsewhere, the estimate might have been larger.

Now, we gave this a pretty thorough examination. For topographical survey of the various parts of the United States, $200,000. That is $20,000 more than the estimate; and because there were quite a number of gentlemen, notably the gentleman from Alabama, notably gentlemen from other States, that were wonderfully anxious about it, some of them protesting about its provisions that the gentleman from Alabama spoke about, that has been in the act for a number of years, that $35,000 should be spent between the ninety-seventh and the one hundred and third meridian and one-third of the remainder west of the one hundred and third meridian, we strike that out, so as to give complete discretion to the Secretary of the Interior to make this expenditure without limitation, and we make the amount $20,000 more than the estimate.

Now, bear with me a moment while I show the amount of these appropriations for this Geological Survey. The amount recommended in this bill is $677,000; the amount appropriated for the current year is $657,000, being an increase in this bill of $20,000 beyond the appropriations for the current year. The amount appropriated for 1898 was $639,000; for 1897, $489,000; for 1896, $437,000; for 1895, $421,000; for 1894, $414,000; for 1893, $376,000; for 1892, $496,000. From the time our Democratic friends came in and began to make these appropriations under Mr. Cleveland to the present time this appropriation has been doubled; and the increase has been mostly within the last year or two. I have no doubt this Bureau does good work; but there is a wonderful difference, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, between the precepts for liberal appropriations and the example that was set when the appropriations were dominated by somebody else.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me a word? He recognizes, I am sure, the good work that is being done by this Bureau and the necessity for its development; and when the Director of the Survey states that the work has been almost completed, that it should be completed promptly, that the people are demanding its early completion, and that he can not complete it until he gets more money, does not the gentleman think it is time we gave it to him?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I want to occupy about five minutes more and I will move to strike out the last word. I say again, the appropriations have almost doubled from 1893 to the present time. This is a pretty rapidly growing service.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. When the gentleman says that these appropriations have doubled, I want to call his attention to the fact that the appropriation for topographic work in 1892 was $250,000; and the present proposition is simply to restore that sum.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the total expenses.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. This amendment applies only to topographic work.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will observe what I am saying——

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I have listened very attentively to every word that has dropped from the gentleman's lips.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is referring to the forestry reserve. That is another appropriation. I was discussing the total appropriations for geological work and topographic work by this Bureau. I say again, that from 1893 to the present time the appropriations for this Bureau have almost doubled. Now, what is topography? Making maps, getting levels. Why this great thirst to make maps? If there is to be a complete topographic survey of the United States and all our Territories, you can not do the work in one hundred years, if you expend two or three million dollars a year. Now, the only question is whether there is a necessity that this work should go on faster. One gentleman says, "I want this work done in my State;" another says, "I want it done in my State," and so on. I have been pressed from Illinois by letter and telegram within the last week or two. There have been "busy bees" around seeking to get this increase. We have had applications from college professors and college students. Reading between the lines, it would seem that some of them want to be utilized in this service during their vacation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is it not true that intellectual, scholarly men, connected with institutions of learning and desiring the progress of the United States, are everywhere appealing for the increase of this appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. It is true that no proposition touching science or touching the specialty of any of these people who are devoted to science can be broached without its appearing that this one subject dominates for the time the minds of that class of gentlemen, so that if they had their way about it that would be the "big I" and everything else would be small letters. Now, you can not make appropriations from that standpoint. As we have substantially doubled the appropriations for this Bureau since 1893, I believe that an increase now of $20,000 is quite enough.

I will confess that this proposition about making maps did not appeal to me very strongly. So far as regards northern and central Illinois, they are very level sections of country. What practical use is there in making maps of those portions of the country? We have got pretty good maps already. Why should you make your maps there, section by section and township by township, to get the exact elevations? For that is what topography is. This work would take a great number of employees for a great many years to do it—to make these surveys and these maps. We have fairly good maps. There are lots of other things to be done. This appropriation for topography of $200,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Director of this Bureau, is quite enough this year to do the most important work. I have no doubt there is some important work in Alabama, some in Arkansas, some in the Rocky Mountains, some in Alaska, and so on.

Now, I think I have said about all I want to say. When my friend from Ohio sat down, one gentleman after another rose up, showing to me the "busy bee" organization; so I call for "next." I do not know whether he is here or not.

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, he is.

Mr. CANNON. "Well, he is." Is there another one? If there is, let him stand up. [Laughter.]

Now, I undertake to say that I have had some familiarity with this matter. We put the survey of the forest reserves for irrigation purposes upon this survey, by legislation, away back in the eighties and the early nineties, and it broke it down. And I want to state to you here and now that under its present efficient management, in my judgment, it is going fast enough. You and I will be dead and forgotten before this work is one-hundredth part done. And we are spending as much money on it, in my opinion, in this year and the coming fiscal year as we ought to expend. Now, I am not going to say anything mean about it, because I hold the Director of this Survey in very high esteem. He is a very efficient man, but like every other specialist he sees through the glass of his own specialty, while we, caring for the public service, must look over the whole ground and all along the lines of the public service. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, if I am correctly informed, this appropriation in 1892 was $250,000. This amendment only seeks to restore it to what it was in 1892.

I understand, further, that every geologist in the Southern States and almost the entire Union favors this amendment. I am informed also that these topographic maps must serve and do serve as the basis of all geological work, all irrigation work, all forestry work, all investigations of rivers and water power, and plans for water supply and storage systems; in fact, in all of the industrial developments in all portions of the country. These developments are, directly or indirectly, in a large measure based on these maps. In fact, the industrial progress of the country is delayed and retarded by the sloth with which these matters are treated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make a speech, but I understand that this is an Administration of progress. I understand that this is an age of progress; and while we are expending millions for expansion, and while we are expanding in every other direction, why not come back to the appropriations of 1892 and permit that progress which is necessary for the development of the country?

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am heartily in favor of this amendment, and for this reason: The "busy bees" referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] did not seek me out; but I sought them out. Something over a year ago the people not only in my district but in one or two of the adjoining Congressional districts of my State discovered a large vein of bituminous coal. They did not know the extent of it nor the depth that they were required to go at different points in order to find it. So they requested me to go to the Geological Department and get, if possible, a survey and a topographical map. I went and found the chief or head of the Department, and I was informed by that official that it was impossible to make this survey and to furnish these maps, because the Department was short of funds and had not any money.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRUCKER. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How much of an appropriation would it take to supply maps for every district in the United States, so I could go and ask for the same maps, and any other member of this House could go and ask for the same maps? How much do you think it would take to supply such maps for each district in the United States?

Mr. BRUCKER. If the gentleman had been in the Chamber a few moments ago and listened to the statement on that very subject made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he would not have had to ask me that question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman secured the information, will he be kind enough to give it to me now?

Mr. BRUCKER. My recollection is that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations himself [Mr. CANNON] could not prophesy and could not even guess what that amount would be. But regardless of that question——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. BRUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do you think it feasible even now to undertake to increase this appropriation with a view to securing what you desire in your district?

Mr. BRUCKER. I certainly do. I think we ought to be looking out for our interests at home, developing our own interests, developing our own resources. The gentleman ought to ask himself that question when he is voting to appropriate large sums of money to develop and educate and civilize and Christianize millions of barbarians 7,000 miles away from this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am in favor of assisting in the development of our own resources. Here is a little sum asked by way of amendment which will assist and help out that Department and incidentally aid and assist my people in developing our own resources.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of members of the committee on this side of the House to what these increases of from two hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars on items of this kind will amount to. You have all recently heard the statement of probable appropriations as compared with the revenues of the country, and you can see how impracticable it is to make a sufficient appropriation to furnish maps for all the districts in the United States. Some States are to-day receiving the benefits of these surveys, while in other States we can not possibly have those benefits for a long time to come. The total amount of this appropriation for surveys has been increased during a Republican Administration to almost double what the appropriation was under a Democratic Administration.

Mr. RAY of New York. Do you mean to say that the appropriation for this purpose has been increased?

Mr. HEMENWAY. For the general purpose of surveys.

Mr. RAY of New York. Do you mean to say that the appropriation for this specific purpose covered by this amendment has been increased? Do you not know that instead of being increased it has been decreased?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman well understands what I mean.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will you answer my question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman understands without my answering the question. It has been discussed here and was answered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations awhile ago.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, my friend, will you not be fair?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I certainly am fair, and the gentleman is not fair, when the matter has been so thoroughly explained to the House and when he knows that I refer to the total sum appropriated for this general purpose and not for this particular purpose.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is it not true that for topographical surveys the appropriation of $200,000 is $50,000 less than it was in 1892?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the topographic surveys are all included in one item and that the other surveys here are not in a sense topographic surveys?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, in a sense they are; but for purely topographic surveys is it not true——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Are not the surveys for forest reserves topographic surveys?

Mr. RAY of New York. Last year it was divided up and transferred to the other fund.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; and they are topographic surveys the same as the others.

Mr. RAY of New York. But they are separated after all.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman can see for himself that here is a total appropriation for surveys which is almost double the amount appropriated in the Democratic Administration.

The gentleman understands that when this Congress adjourns and the appropriations are added up, the totals will go away up into the millions. He understands that, with Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and with all of these gentlemen who are at the head of these different Departments asking for large sums, great amounts will be appropriated. We must remember that this side of the House must be responsible for these large appropriations. And when gentlemen sit here and quietly vote away large sums of money without considering where the money is to come from, they are simply making a mistake. I want to call attention right here to the fact that if this continues and these appropriations are raised with such ease, without consideration as to where the money is coming from, we shall wake up to find we have appropriated sums very largely in excess of the money that will come into the Treasury with our present revenue laws.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I say a word right there? Is it not just as important for the people of the United States to take care of themselves here at home and educate and improve themselves as it is to appropriate millions of dollars for the benefit of Porto Rico and Cuba and the Philippine Islands? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; and the gentleman must know, because he is a man of intelligence, that the sum of $6,000,000, if appropriated for this particular purpose, would not take care of one-fourth of the States in these United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Give us the six millions.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And would not furnish maps for one-fourth of the United States. If we are to furnish all that was asked, it would not furnish maps, and nearly every State of the Union is performing this kind of work. The State of Indiana is performing this kind of work, and we are prepared in that State to furnish our own different counties and different districts with information in regard to the topographical condition of large districts, and it is unnecessary to make this appropriation. This appropriation is to be continued for the same amount, but it is unnecessary at this time.

If we had an overflowing Treasury, if we had a surplus that we could not expend, if we had plenty of money, this expenditure might well come in. But at this time, when we have spent large sums of money in excess of what we have been receiving, it is absolutely foolish for men on this floor to pursue a policy that appropriations shall be swelled and swelled so that when you come to add them all up there will be a record far in excess of any other Congress in the appropriation of large sums of money. You will not be able to charge it all to the war. The people of the United States are not going to be fooled in that way. They are going to figure out the expense of the war for themselves, and you can not charge all expenses to the war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I do not desire to discuss the propriety of our action in regard to Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, because I am in favor of what we did for the benefit of Cuba, and I am in favor of standing by the Administration in all that we have done; but I am not one of those who, because war is costly—and the increase of the Army and Navy is necessary and costly—would undertake to take that expense out of the institutions here in our own country, here at home, when we make appropriations for their necessary maintenance.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. RAY of New York. I certainly will.

Mr. CANNON. We claim that this increase of $20,000 for topographical work, that is to say, from $180,000 to $200,000, in addition to $150,000 for forest topography, is the largest that has been made for many, many years, and is ample without regard to the war to carry on this service, and I do not put my opposition to it upon the ground of war expenditures.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I was not speaking to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had said. I was speaking to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] had just said.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman pleases, right there.

Mr. RAY of New York. Do not take all my time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will not, and if I do, you shall have more. It is not only because of war expenditures, but here is an appropriation in excess of the estimates. The gentleman is aware of that fact.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not for this purpose.

Mr. HEMENWAY. For that purpose. Now, the Committee on Appropriations have absolutely appropriated $20,000 more than was asked from the committee.

Mr. DAYTON. Is it not a fact that the committee took that $20,000 from forestry and added it to topographical work?

Mr. HEMENWAY. We added $20,000 to it.

Mr. DAYTON. By robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. RAY of New York. You add that amount to one item, and leave the amount the same as last year, and you have left it $50,000 less than in 1892 for this purpose. Now, I stand here to appeal for the people of the United States of America between the Atlantic and the Pacific, the lakes and the Gulf.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Right there in your appeal——

Mr. RAY of New York. I appeal for the scientific institutions and for our own people, and I say to you that every dollar we appropriate for this purpose will come back to us within the next five years fivefold——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will you permit me a question?

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). And at the same time that I do this let me say we are prepared to look after every other thing and to take care of this Government wherever it reaches, even if it be around the globe.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In how many States of the Union can this survey be carried on if this appropriation were increased?

Mr. RAY of New York. Where is the map I had?

Mr. HEMENWAY. In how many States could this survey be carried on?

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, one gentleman stated we can not carry out this work in a lifetime. He is not familiar with the work.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In how many States would this work be carried on?

Mr. DAYTON. In seven.

Mr. RAY of New York. We could carry it out efficiently in the States where it is now in progress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In how many States?

Mr. RAY of New York. Look at that map.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Answer my question. In how many States?

Mr. RAY of New York. In five or six States of the Union.

Mr. HEMENWAY. For five or six States you appeal, and New York is one of them.

Mr. RAY of New York. I appeal for five or six States——

Mr. HEMENWAY. And not the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will appeal for every State, and the gentleman from Indiana in answering that appeal says that this work could not be finished in our lifetime. If he had been familiar with this work, he would not have said that. Look at this map. It shows what these gentlemen have been done in this line, and the work done has already covered nearly one-third of the Union. Of course, like sensible men, they work in three, four, or five States at a time and then they go to other States.

Now, the idea has been to extend the work through every section of the United States and into every State. That is the idea and purpose. The survey shows the sources of our rivers, it shows their courses, it shows the mountains and the regions where the minerals are, and furnishes more than a score of other important and valuable sources of information. That is why I appeal for it. Now, the gentleman from Illinois seemed to indicate that the gentlemen in connection with this Bureau in Washington have been pushing this matter with members of the House, and he intimated that it is improper for members of the House to talk with gentlemen who come to us. We have the same right to talk with the gentlemen of these various departments that the chairman of the committee has.

It is our duty, when we are appealed to by our constituents, to go to these heads of departments and learn for ourselves. And the gentleman from Illinois, with all his ability and zeal in attending to all the various interests scattered throughout the United States, I believe, goes to these various departments for information that will enable him to be ready to impart on the floor of this House necessary information as to all matters, even those that he does not have particularly in charge. I think he does; at least it is his duty to do that, and I know that he always performs his duty as he sees it right to do, and I appeal again to him and to the gentlemen of this House to give us the increased appropriation, because it is in the interest of all the people of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the laws of the last session, and it shows that there was appropriated $180,000, instead of $175,000, as the gentleman from Illinois states. In this bill they simply take $20,000 from the forestry reservation and put it onto this, making no increase in the topographical survey. It will be noticed in this bill, two pages back, that a part of the duty is imposed on the survey to rectify the line of the forest reservation by the Geological Survey, instead of having it done by the Land Department, as heretofore. In fact, the tendency is to put the topographical survey under the Geological Survey, instead of letting it under the contract system, which is inaccurate and expensive. I trust the time will come when all our topographical work will be done by the Geological Survey, and not by the contract system, which will be a great saving to the Government.

I want to say further that the State of Indiana may not have a survey. It is a fact that there has not been a thousand dollars to my knowledge spent for the survey of this great oil section extending from New York to Texas and from Pennsylvania to California—an industry that has sent out $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 every year to foreign ports; and not a dollar has been spent by the General Government for this purpose. The States have done it. Now, the proposition is simply that the General Government shall do one half if the States will do the other half. It is simply a proposition that the General Government shall pay one-half of it instead of paying the whole of it. There has been no increase in the topographical work. If there has been an increase in the other appropriations, then cut them down; but there has been no increase in the appropriation for topographical work. There is a decrease since 1892.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word, and then I am ready for a vote. The gentleman has shown great zeal for this appropriation, and it seems to me that he is not fortunate, nor quite fair, in his presentation of it. He says we take $20,000 from the forestry and put to this, making this increase of $20,000. That is true, but the forestry topography is confined to the forest reserves and it leaves $150,000 for topography for the forest reservations after we make the transfer to this.

Mr. STONE. It only leaves $130,000.

Mr. CANNON. You are right, $130,000.

Mr. STONE. I want to say that the work of the forest reservations is increasing instead of decreasing.

Mr. CANNON. We thought the forest topography would stand a cut of $20,000; but this is all for topography, and this appropriation for topography is the full estimate. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] says he has a right to go and consult the heads of bureaus. Certainly. Everybody has a right to go and consult everybody else; but in making this recommendation we follow the Secretary of the Interior, and we recommend the full estimate that he makes, and the gentleman comes here and seeks to overthrow that estimate and increase it. What for? Why, that you may get a topography for the oil territory in Pennsylvania. Great God! They know enough about levels to construct a pipe line down to Cleveland and the Atlantic coast, and it seems to me they understand levels pretty well. [Laughter.] I do not think the Standard Oil Company is suffering for levels. Now, on the other side they are talking about trusts and all that kind of thing. I think this appropriation is sufficient, and ought to stand, and I am ready for a vote.

Mr. MANN was recognized.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think the expression of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be replied to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor.

Mr. MANN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Appropriations Committee a question in regard to this matter. As I understand, this bill carries $200,000 for topographical survey?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And $130,000 for forestry topography, making a total of $330,000?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And I wish to ask the chairman whether there was an appropriation for forestry topography in the appropriation bill of 1892?

Mr. CANNON. Not a dollar.

Mr. MANN. So this is a great increase over the appropriation for 1892?

Mr. CANNON. A great increase. I thank the gentleman from Illinois, because I think his speech was better than mine. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STONE) there were—ayes 28, noes 36.

Mr. STONE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers; and only 14 gentlemen rising, tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, after line 21, insert:

"INDIAN AFFAIRS.

"For expenses under the act 'For the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1898, namely:
"For pay of employees in the Indian Territory, $8,000;
"For incidental and traveling expenses, $3,000;
"In all, $11,000."

Mr. DOCKERY. I should be glad if the chairman of the committee would explain this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment comes here upon an estimate which was delayed, so that the appropriation was not included in the bill as reported. It grows out of the Curtis legislation. The matter has been investigated by the committee, and the appropriation seems to be necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE VRIES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between lines 22 and 23, page 59, the following:
"Improvement of Yosemite National Park: For the protection of the Yosemite National Park and construction of bridges, fencing, and trails and improvement of roads other than toll roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000."

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from California [Mr. DE VRIES] will allow me, I would like to say a word. We had a contest here about this matter last year, and my friend prevailed. While in my judgment the general forestry appropriation is available for this purpose, the omission of this item in the bill was, I think, an oversight. The House having once, after full consideration, passed upon the matter, I am inclined to think the amendment ought to be adopted. I believe it is in its language the same as the provision for the current year.

Mr. DE VRIES. Just the same.

Mr. CANNON. I am ready for a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. It occurs to me that this amendment ought to be transferred to that part of the bill relating to parks.

Mr. DE VRIES. I think the gentleman is mistaken, because in the estimates of the Treasury Department this is included in the miscellaneous items for the Interior Department. It is now, I believe, in the right place.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the sundry civil bill, now under discussion in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, includes among its numerous items one of $20,000,000 for the purpose of enabling this country to carry out the treaty with Spain which has just been ratified by the Senate.

The ratification of that treaty by the Senate makes it under the Constitution a supreme law of the land and obligates us to pay the money. That is, if the treaty is one which the President could constitutionally make and which the Senate could constitutionally ratify.

But if this House should refuse to appropriate the $20,000,000 it would act within its constitutional authority. No one can compel us to appropriate the money. I take it that the Supreme Court could not by mandamus compel us to insert this item in any appropriation bill or to otherwise provide for its expenditure.

For the first time in the controversy as to the desirability of the annexation of the Philippine Islands we are offered an opportunity in this House of taking positive action upon the subject which can have effect. If Congress appropriate this $20,000,000, the final exchange of ratifications by the two Governments will probably be made, and the Philippine Islands will belong to the United States. If Congress refuse to make this appropriation, then probably Spain will refuse to carry the treaty into effect on her part, because of inability of the Executive of our country to carry it into effect on our part.

It is, Mr. Chairman, an apt and proper time to express our views in reference to the annexation of these islands and the effect which such annexation will have both as to our own country and as to the islands themselves.

To the discussion which is now going on in the country in reference to national expansion and our acquisition of the Philippine Islands, I wish, therefore, to contribute a few remarks. What I say I shall say with diffidence, because, as one of the new members of this House, without extended experience in national legislation, I do not feel at liberty upon ordinary occasions to obtrude my views upon the House. But, Mr. Chairman, this is no ordinary question. The extended experience of the older members of this House does not aid much in its solution. The question before the country is one of vast and vital importance.

According to the views of the anti-expansionists, the proposed expansion involves the danger of the destruction of our nation and our form of society. According to the views of the ardent expansionists, if we fail to accept the present opportunity, we will lose for our country the greatest commercial advantages ever offered to any nation by a single act.

According to the views of the anti-expansionists, the acquisition of the Philippine Islands involves the possible and probable immigration of the natives of those islands to our present shores in competition with the labor of our land, as well as the lowering of wages of labor and degradation of labor itself. According to the views of the expansionists, the acquisition of the Philippine Islands will be the obtaining of a strategic outpost which will some day enable our country more easily to succeed in the inevitable future conflict across the Pacific Ocean between the white and the yellow races, and enable us to keep out of our land the overflowing hordes of cheap Chinese laborers which, with the opening of China, will endeavor to spread out over the world.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard much in the course of the debate in this Capitol and in the course of the discussion now going on in the country about the Declaration of Independence, about how "the just powers of government depend upon the consent of the governed," and about the gross tyranny of our action in case we take possession of the Philippines without first obtaining the consent of the natives of those islands.

One of the very first questions which we ought to ask ourselves is whether, by the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, we shall be departing from the traditional policy of our country; whether we shall thereby make a byword of the Declaration of Independence, or whether the acquisition of those islands is consistent with the principles of freedom enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, consistent with the construction of the Constitution, and consistent with the historical and commercial policies of the United States.

It is my purpose to now present to the House, I trust in a modest way, some facts and acts indicating the construction placed upon the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States by the statesmen who had to do with the making of those great documents and the early ascertainment of their meaning.

I wish also to call the attention of the House to some matters connected with the history of prior acquisitions by our nation as indicating the policy of the country and the views of the men who were the leaders in our country. It is by their acts that men speak the loudest.

Let us revert to history. We have claimed the independence of our country for less than a century and a quarter. When Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence the extent of the territory claiming freedom under it was but little more than 400,000 square miles in area. Now our national sovereignty extends over nearly 4,000,000 square miles. Whence has come this increase? How have we acquired this territory? What is the history of this wonderful acquisition of national domain?

The school children of our land are taught with careful exactness the history of the discovery by Columbus; of the voyages of the Cabots; of the landing of De Soto; of the charter granted by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Walter Raleigh; of the story of the Pilgrim Fathers and their landing at Plymouth Rock; of Jamestown and the early settlements in Virginia; of the discovery and exploration of the Hudson River; of the patent of Maryland granted by Charles I to Lord Baltimore; of the founding of the city of Providence, in Rhode Island, by Roger Williams, and the settlement of Pennsylvania by the Quakers under the lead of William Penn, and their gentle amity with the Indians.

Every school history is full of information concerning the settlement and growth of the colonies which became the thirteen original States. We are all familiar with the story of the war of the Revolution. We have all recited the speech of Patrick Henry. We talk glibly about the principles declared by the Declaration of Independence and the provisions of the National Constitution. But what about the history of the growth of our country from an area of 400,000 to 4,000,000 square miles? And yet there is no more fascinating story in the world's history.

The little strip of territory along the Atlantic Ocean, with its sparse settlements, nowhere reaching the Gulf of Mexico, only touching the system of the Great Lakes, and barely crossing the Alleghany Mountains, has now expanded until it reaches from ocean to ocean, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico; until it has added to its charmed domain the great coast line of the Northern Pacific Ocean and the islands of Hawaii.

THE THIRTEEN ORIGINAL STATES.

The original thirteen States cover an area of 341,753 square miles. Included in the original thirteen States, however, and being at that time really a part thereof, were the present States of Vermont, Maine, and Kentucky, having an area together of 82,892 square miles, which, added to the area of the thirteen original States, aggregates 424,644 square miles. This was the real area of the colonies which revolted from Great Britain and adopted the Declaration of Independence.

The territory included within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Tennessee, that part of Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi River, and those parts of Alabama and Mississippi lying north of the thirty-first parallel of latitude were, by the treaty with Great Britain of 1783, acknowledged to belong to our country. Various parts of this territory were claimed by Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia under the colonial grants or patents from England, and by Virginia as discovered and conquered territory.

The various interests of these States were afterwards ceded to the General Government. New York was the first State to make a cession to the General Government, but her claim was an indefinite, undefined one of no merit, to the country lying west of Pennsylvania and north of the Ohio River. Massachusetts and Connecticut also claimed the territory lying west of Pennsylvania between their respective north and south boundary lines extended west to the Mississippi River. But it is now generally conceded that the State of Virginia was the State which had the best title to the territory lying north of the Ohio River, called the Northwest Territory and now embracing the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and that part of Minnesota east of the Mississippi River.

In the original charters and grants to the various colonies Massachusetts and Connecticut had each been granted lands running westerly to the Pacific Ocean, then known as the South Sea. It was under these grants that those States claimed the portions of the Northwest Territory lying between their north and south boundary lines, respectively, extended west to the Mississippi, which river had, prior to that time, been fixed as the boundary line between the British and the Spanish possessions. Virginia also claimed a large portion of the Northwest Territory by reason of a similar grant.

But prior to the war of the Revolution no settlements had been made by either of these colonies in this Northwest Territory, and, on the contrary, that territory had been taken possession of and settled by the French, and the rights of France had been, with the rest of Canada, surrendered to Great Britain by the treaty of 1763 in a way which made it free from the claims of the colonies.

Kentucky had been more or less settled by expeditions from Virginia, as well as Tennessee, to a certain extent, from North Carolina. South Carolina claimed a small strip of land a few miles wide running westerly from her western boundary through what is now the extreme north end of the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi to the Mississippi River. Georgia claimed the larger portion of what is now Alabama and Mississippi.

The different States interested ceded their interests in this western territory to the General Government. In 1781 New York ceded its indefinite claim, as well as some land now in Erie County, Pa., comprising 315 square miles. The cession by Virginia, made in 1784, including Kentucky, amounted to 256,562 square miles. The cession of Massachusetts, made in 1785, was for a claim covering about 54,000 square miles. Connecticut, by her acts of 1786 and 1800, ceded her claim covering about 40,000 square miles. The cession of South Carolina, in 1787 covered 4,900 square miles; that of North Carolina, in 1790, 45,600 square miles, and that of Georgia, in 1802, 88,578 square miles.

By virtue of the several acts of cession from these seven original States, as well as by virtue of its claims under the treaty of 1783, the National Government came into possession of all that territory lying south of the British domain, east of the Mississippi River, and north of the thirty-first parallel of latitude.

EXPANSION DURING REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

But the area thus ceded by the various States to the National Government, and embraced within the limits of the Northwest and Southwest Territories, did not constitute a part of the revolting colonies when the Declaration of Independence was adopted. A large share of this area had been once, constructively at least, a part of Florida. Subsequently it became a French possession and was considered a part of Louisiana and Canada. When, following the fall of Quebec, the French possessions in North America were surrendered by the treaty of 1763 to Great Britain, the forts and settlements in the Northwest Territory were governed as a part of Canada. The British had one fort at Detroit, one in Kaskaskia, in southern Illinois, and one at Vincennes, on the Wabash, in southern Indiana.

The story of how this Western territory east of the Mississippi River became a part of our country is one of the most dramatic and instructive lessons of our history. It is worth the reciting here somewhat in detail, because it illustrates the position taken by the founders of our nation at the time of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, and prior to and at the time of the reorganization of the National Government under the Constitution.

It was owing to the intrepidity of one man. He gained for the revolting colonies the right to claim the easterly half of the Mississippi Valley. That man was George Rogers Clark, who was born in Virginia, November 19, 1752. He became a surveyor, and in 1775 emigrated to Kentucky and was soon selected by his fellow-colonists to attend the Virginia legislature, to which, however, he was not admitted as a member.

When the Revolutionary war broke out no effort was made by the revolting colonies to gain any foothold in the far West or to capture any of the British forts in that region. But George Rogers Clark, traveling back and forth between Kentucky and Virginia, conceived the enterprise of adding to the revolting colonies, which he believed would surely win their struggle, the great British possessions lying east of the Mississippi and north and south of Kentucky. Those possessions were wild, almost a wilderness, but inhabited by numerous tribes of Indians.

Clark laid before Governor Patrick Henry, of Virginia, and the members of the governor's council, including Thomas Jefferson, his plan of capturing the British forts north of the Ohio River, and thereby acquiring for Virginia the immense domain north of that river. He was authorized by Governor Henry to raise seven companies of fifty men each to attack the British forces at Kaskaskia. Colonel Clark made his rendezvous at the Falls of Ohio, where now stands Louisville, and gathered together such men as he could readily obtain.

On June 24, 1778, his command, consisting of 153 men, broke camp at Louisville and started down the Ohio River in rowboats. Relays of oarsmen kept the boats moving during both night and day for four days and nights, when the command landed at a point on the Ohio River somewhat east of where Cairo, Ill., now is—a distance of about 120 miles southward from Kaskaskia. Kaskaskia was then a town of about 1,000 French inhabitants, located at or near where Chester, Ill., now is. There was no road between the Ohio River and Kaskaskia, and the way was a wilderness—much of it a very swampy or rough country.

Colonel Clark's command had no wagons or pack horses with which to carry their baggage, supplies, or ammunition. On the evening of July 4, 1778, the command had arrived within 3 miles of the town of Kaskaskia, but with the Kaskaskia River yet to cross to reach there. After dark some boats were obtained, the river crossed, the town surrounded, the fort broken into, the British governor and troops captured, and before daylight Colonel Clark had possession of the entire place. His command had been six days on the road from the Ohio River to Kaskaskia, moving at the rapid rate of 20 miles per day, and during the last two days almost without food.

Discovery by the British scouts or the Indians would probably have resulted in their annihilation; but this little band of less than 200 men, after rowing by turns for four days down the Ohio River and marching for six days through an unknown wilderness, without supplies, without a road, and without transportation facilities, had captured the military capital of the West, well provided with provisions, cannon, and soldiers, without the firing of a gun. Such a daring of purpose and celerity of execution has seldom been equaled in the world's history. Following the capture of Kaskaskia, the British post at Vincennes surrendered to an officer whom Clark sent there to demand its surrender.

The governor of Virginia was informed of the success, and in October, 1778, an act was passed by the legislature of Virginia organizing the county of Illinois, which included all the territory of the Commonwealth northwest of the Ohio River.

It is proper to add that the French settlers in the territory were not consulted by the Virginia legislature, nor was the question asked whether they consented to or desired the change of government.

But this new territory was not to be so easily won. Hamilton, who was the British governor of the territory and located at Detroit, heard of the success of Clark's invasion with surprise and indignation.

He hurriedly collected a force and on December 15, 1778, appeared before the fort at Vincennes with an army numbering five or six hundred and consisting mostly of Indians. There were only two American soldiers at the fort to defend it—a Captain Helm and a private by the name of Henry. They planted a cannon in the open gateway of the fort, and as Governor Hamilton and his command approached, Captain Helm cried out, "Halt!" standing by the cannon with a lighted match. The British officer demanded the surrender of the fort, whereupon Helm asked what terms of surrender would be given, and Hamilton replied that they might surrender with all the honors of war. The American garrison thereupon capitulated and Captain Helm and his force of one man marched out before the British command.

The fall of Vincennes was soon communicated to Colonel Clark at Kaskaskia, who was not in an easy position. He was without money, provisions, or supplies, and so far away from Virginia that he could not even get word there in time to receive assistance. Hamilton had a larger force and had, besides the assistance of the Indian tribes, sufficient supplies, ammunition, and money. It was obvious that in the spring Hamilton would be enabled, with his superior force, to crush Clark and regain possession of the western capital at Kaskaskia for England.

The control and destiny of an empire in extent and importance depended upon the action to be taken. Fortunately for the history of our country, there was a Col. George Rogers Clark at Kaskaskia. To wait at that point was to invite inevitable defeat. He conceived the hazardous enterprise of marching across the country, surprising and capturing Governor Hamilton and his command at Vincennes.

On February 5, 1779, Colonel Clark, with a force of about 175 men, started from Kaskaskia to march to Vincennes, a distance of 175 miles, though it was estimated by Clark that he traversed a distance of 240 miles by the way taken. It was at the worst possible season of the year. The snows had melted, and a large portion of the ground was under water. The creeks and swamps were enlarged to wide dimensions. The weather was stormy and rainy. Much of the time there was a cold drizzling rain. Part of the time, when crossing the creeks, the men would be compelled to push aside the floating blocks of ice. At night there was no dry place to lie down, and they had no tents for shelter.

The supply of provisions ran out, and during the last few days the men were almost without food, and as they came toward the end of the march it was imperative that discovery should be avoided, and hence the shooting of game was prohibited. On February 21, when they were trying to get through swamps and marshes and the overflow of the Wabash River, they were compelled to wade through water in some places up to the neck, and the weather was so cold that in the morning the ice had frozen from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in thickness.

But on February 23, 1779, Clark and his command attacked Governor Hamilton in Fort Sackville at Vincennes, surprising him, and on the next day Hamilton surrendered.

The possession thus acquired was never lost. No rhetoric can add to a simple recital of the facts. In hazard of undertaking, in celerity and hardship of execution, and in the success and importance of its results this short campaign of Colonel Clark in the winter month of February, 1779, has seldom, if ever, been equaled. Through the daring and the genius of one man the great Northwest had come into the possession of Virginia. From that time on, the Continental Congress, in its discussion of a possible treaty of peace with Great Britain, insisted that the Northwest Territory, from the Great Lakes southward, as well as the remainder of the British possessions east of the Mississippi River, should be considered as belonging to the revolting colonies.

And in the year 1779, while the war was in progress, but it seemed as though peace were possible, the Continental Congress considered in secret the terms upon which it would agree to peace with Great Britain, and in March, 1779, it was agreed by Congress that in case of peace it would insist upon the Mississippi River for the western boundary of the revolting colonies, from the source of the Mississippi to the thirty-first parallel of north latitude. Again, in August, 1779, instructions were agreed on by the Congress to give to a commission to be appointed for the purpose of negotiating peace, and again it was insisted that the Mississippi River should be the western boundary line.

The natives of that vast tract of country, mostly unexplored, were tribes of Indians. Most of the settlements were French. But it was not proposed or discussed that it was necessary to have an expression by vote or otherwise of the desires of the inhabitants of the territory acquired, nor was any tender sentimentality indulged in by these makers of the Declaration of Independence. They saw that they had captured the British forts and capitals; they saw a valuable domain which might be added to their territory, and they promptly saw the value of keeping it.

But all of the colonies did not have colonial claims to portions of the newly acquired territory. It soon became evident that the new domain might easily become either a cause of dissension or a cause of closer union. If the States which claimed the new territory insisted upon their respective claims, then the new territory might easily cause disputes or even war. But if the newly acquired territory should be turned over to the General Government, then there would be a domain of great value belonging to the central Government which would give it stability and strength.

I have already referred to the claims and the grants by the separate States to the General Government, but before those grants were made seven of the original States claimed colonies for themselves. Virginia had claimed and exercised the right of increasing her territory by conquest under Colonel Clark.

The cession from Virginia, by the act of December 20, 1783, contained the provision that the cession was upon condition that the territory so ceded should be laid out and formed into States, and that the States so formed should be admitted as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The Constitutional Convention met in 1787. The Federal Government at that time had acquired the Western territory, which it was understood would eventually be admitted as separate States in accordance with the Virginia cession. The ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory by a governor and judges had just been considered and passed. The question of the acquisition and government of new territory was therefore a live and familiar question with the framers of the Constitution.

Let me recall to your minds the circumstances connected with the adoption of section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution, providing that—

> New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union. * * * The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The Constitutional Convention adopted various preliminary resolutions concerning the form of government and constitution to be adopted, and on July 26, 1787, referred them to a committee of detail as the basis for a draft of a constitution. Among these preliminary resolutions was:

> 17. Resolved, That provision ought to be made for the admission of States lawfully arising within the limits of the United States, whether from a voluntary junction of government and territory or otherwise, with the consent of a number of voices in the National Legislature less than the whole.

There was no other provision relating to government of territory or admission of new States in these preliminary resolutions. On August 6 the committee of detail reported a draft of a constitution, which contained—

> ART. 17. New States lawfully constituted or established within the limits of the United States may be admitted by the Legislature into this Government; but to such admission the consent of two-thirds of the members present in each House shall be necessary. If a new State shall arise within the limits of any of the present States, the consent of the legislatures of such States shall be also necessary to its admission. If the admission be consented to, the new States shall be admitted on the same terms with the original States. But the Legislature may make conditions with the new States concerning the public debt which shall be then subsisting.

When this article came up for consideration in the convention, after some discussion Gouverneur Morris moved as a substitute:

> New States may be admitted by the Legislature into the Union; but no new States shall be erected within the limits of any of the present States without the consent of the legislature of such State as well as of the General Legislature.

This substitute was amended by the convention so as to read as follows:

> New States may be admitted by the Legislature into the Union; but no new State shall be hereafter formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any of the present States without the consent of the legislature of such State, as well as of the General Legislature.

This substitute as amended was adopted, though New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland voted against it. The following clause was then added:

> Nor shall any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts thereof without the consent of the legislature of such States, as well as of the Legislature of the United States.

Mr. Carroll of Maryland thereupon moved to add:

> Provided, nevertheless, that nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to affect the claim of the United States to vacant lands ceded to them by the treaty of peace.

Up to this time in the Constitutional Convention there had been no suggestion of any provision granting to the General Government authority to control or regulate the acquired territory. This could not have been because the subject was not in the minds of the members of the convention. They had adopted resolution after resolution in reference to the form of government; they had proceeded in the consideration of the report of the committee of detail; they were thoroughly acquainted with the fact that Congress had assumed control of the newly acquired Western territory; they knew well that Virginia had ceded her claim to the Northwest Territory to the Federal Government, but it seems to have been assumed as a matter of course that any government organized under the Constitution would have authority to deal with its own property and its own domain. But some of the members of the convention were insistent that no provision should be inserted in the Constitution which should injure the claim of the United States to the lands ceded by the treaty of peace, and hence the provision which Mr. Carroll, of Maryland, moved to add.

After some discussion, however, Mr. Carroll withdrew his motion and moved the following:

Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to alter the claims of the United States, or of the individual States, to the Western Territory; but all such claims shall be examined into, and decided upon, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Gouverneur Morris was the member of the convention who most frequently appeared as the draftsman of the various provisions agreed upon, and he moved to postpone the amendment of Mr. Carroll in order to take up the following:

The Legislature shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution contained shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims, either of the United States or of any particular State.

This provision was adopted the same day and is practically identical with the provision in the Constitution. The history of its adoption seems to strongly indicate that it was intended to confer upon Congress full, absolute, and unrestricted authority over the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

THE ORDINANCE OF 1787.

The Constitution was framed and adopted at a time when the question of government of the Northwest Territory was being discussed and decided upon. The ordinance of 1787, for the government of the Northwest Territory, provided for the appointment of a governor and three judges; and it was provided that—

The governor and judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress from time to time; which laws shall be in force in the district until the organization of the general assembly therein, unless disapproved of by Congress.

The general assembly or legislature was to be organized when the district contained a voting population of 5,000. It was to consist of the governor, a legislative council of five, appointed by Congress from ten persons named by the Territorial house of representatives, and that house to be elected by the people. An act was required to be passed by the representatives and a majority of the council and to receive the assent of the governor, who was given an absolute veto power.

The ordinance of 1787 was approved by the Congress elected under the new Constitution. That ordinance gave to the people of the Northwest Territory no choice in the selection of their governor or judges, who were to select and modify laws for them. And even when the population should become 5,000, they could only elect one branch of the legislature, and the governor appointed by the General Government was to have an absolute power of veto. No scruples about the just powers of government depending upon the consent of the governed hindered these practical men, who had organized a revolution for liberty, adopted a Declaration of Independence, framed a new Constitution, and inaugurated a new Government, from adopting practical common sense in the government of a new Territory.

THE INDIANA AND MISSISSIPPI TERRITORIES.

The Indiana Territory was organized out of "the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio River" by act of Congress, May 7, 1800, with a government "in all respects similar to that provided by" the ordinance of 1787.

The Mississippi Territory was organized with a similar government.

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

But, Mr. Chairman, the men who framed the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution not only had an opportunity to give practical effect to their construction of those instruments by the organization of Territories in the new possessions east of the Mississippi River, but they also had a still more conspicuous opportunity to construe those instruments in the acquisition and government of Louisiana.

In 1541, De Soto had reached the Mississippi River. Father Marquette descended it to its mouth in 1673, and in 1680 La Salle descended the Mississippi and took possession of the country adjacent in the name of Louis XIV of France, and called it Louisiana.

In 1706 the French colonists settled on the site of what is now New Orleans. In 1717 the Louisiana country was granted by Louis XIV to the company upon which was based John Law's great Mississippi scheme. But this charter, after the failure of the company, was surrendered in 1730. By the treaties of 1762 and 1763 all of the French possessions west of the Mississippi, as well as the city of New Orleans, on the easterly side, were ceded to Spain, and the French possessions east of the Mississippi, excepting the island of New Orleans, and also the Spanish possessions east of the Mississippi were ceded to Great Britain. During the war of the Revolution Spain had recaptured the British possession of East and West Florida, and these were ceded back to her by the treaty of 1783. The Spanish, therefore, came to control both sides of the Mississippi River at its mouth and the west side throughout its entire length.

By the treaty with Spain of October 27, 1795, the southern boundary line of our country was fixed at 31° north latitude from the Mississippi River east, giving Spain control of the Mississippi from that line southward, but it was provided in that treaty that the King of Spain—will permit the citizens of the United States, for the space of three years from this time, to deposit their merchandise and effects in the port of New Orleans and to export them from thence without paying any other duty than a fair price for the hire of the stores; and His Majesty promises either to continue this permission if he finds, during that time, that it is not prejudicial to the interests of Spain, or if he should not agree to continue it there, he will assign to them, on another part of the banks of the Mississippi, an equivalent establishment.

This was for the accommodation of the settlements along the east side of the Mississippi River and along its tributaries.

But France still looked with covetous eyes upon this great colonial possession which years before she had ceded to Spain, and by the secret treaty of San Ildefonso, October 1, 1800, Spain retroceded the province of Louisiana to France, though France did not then take possession, and the world was not made aware of the treaty for a year and a half.

While the Spanish were still in possession of New Orleans and Louisiana, but after the execution of the treaty ceding that province back to France, the Spanish intendant at New Orleans, who had charge of such matters, declared by a proclamation October 16, 1802, that the right of deposit no longer existed, which meant that the citizens of our country could no longer ship their farm or other produce down the Mississippi River in river boats and deposit the same there until it should be shipped away by vessel free of duty or other imposts.

About the same time it became known that Spain had ceded the province of Louisiana back to France and it was generally believed by the American citizens that this policy was one agreed upon between Spain and France for the purpose of taking away from the Americans the right of free navigation on the Mississippi River.

At that time river navigation was the only practicable method of shipment from a large share of the Mississippi Valley, and if the right of deposit should remain suspended our nation's interests in the Mississippi Valley would be bottled up tighter even than Cervera's fleet at Santiago.

The opposition to President Jefferson wanted to declare war and take forcible possession of New Orleans. Jefferson himself came to the conclusion that it was necessary for the United States to own at least one side of the Mississippi from its source to its mouth in order to maintain free navigation, and he commissioned James Monroe, afterwards President, to act with Robert Livingston, then minister to France, in an effort to purchase New Orleans and the rest of Louisiana lying east of the Mississippi River from France, and Congress appropriated the sum of $2,000,000 to be applied for that purpose.

The critical condition of affairs is strongly shown by the letter which President Jefferson wrote on January 13, 1803, to Mr. Monroe, informing him of his appointment, and in which he said:

On the event of this mission depend the future destinies of this Republic. If we can not by a purchase of the country insure to ourselves a course of perpetual peace and friendship with all nations, then, as war can not be distant, it behooves us immediately to be preparing for that cause.

Fortunately for our country, France and England were then on the verge of another war. England looked with grave objection upon the acquirement by France of the immense Louisiana province, and Napoleon, who was then the first consul of France and its ruler, quickly saw that in case of war the English, with their superiority at sea, would soon take possession of New Orleans and obtain control of the Mississippi River territory.

On Easter Sunday, April 10, 1803, Napoleon called two of his counselors who were best acquainted with the French foreign possessions and asked their advice. He said:

I know the full value of Louisiana, and I have been desirous of repairing the fault of the French negotiator who abandoned it in 1763. A few lines of a treaty have restored it to me, and I have scarcely recovered it when I must expect to lose it. But if it escapes from me it shall one day cost dearer to those who oblige me to strip myself of it than to those to whom I wish to deliver it. The English shall not have the Mississippi, which they covet.

And after hearing from his advisers, one in favor of selling the province to the United States and the other in favor of retaining it, Napoleon said:

Irresolution and deliberation are no longer in season. I renounce Louisiana. It is not only New Orleans that I will cede. It is the whole colony, without any reservation. I know the price of what I abandon, and I have sufficiently proved the importance that I attach to this province, since my first diplomatic act with Spain had for its object the recovery of it. I renounce it with the greatest regret. To attempt obstinately to retain it would be folly. I direct you to negotiate this affair with the envoys of the United States.

A treaty of purchase was agreed upon by which the United States was to acquire not only New Orleans on the east bank of the Mississippi, but the vast province of Louisiana, extending from the Gulf along the west bank of the Mississippi its entire length, reaching in its northern part, as claimed by many, across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean.

For this territory the United States was to pay France the sum of $11,250,000 of principal, payable within fifteen years with interest, and also pay the sum of $3,750,000 to American citizens having valid claims against France.

The treaty was not received with favor by all classes in this country. The purchase went far beyond the authority which had been granted to Monroe and Livingston. They had been compelled to act on their own judgment. Napoleon was not willing to wait for instructions from home. It would take three months for our commissioners in Paris to communicate with their home Government. Delay was dangerous both to France and to the United States. It was known by both Monroe and Livingston that the President, who had appointed them, was a believer in a strict construction of the powers granted by the Constitution. They had been commissioned by him to purchase a small bit of territory on the eastern bank of the Mississippi near its mouth, for a moderate sum, purely in aid of river commerce and navigation, and now they were offered a vast empire, which in time must become settled and governed, and for this they were asked to pay a sum which in those days was no inconsiderable amount, and to accept a provision in the treaty that the inhabitants would be incorporated as citizens of the United States.

Possibly if there had been cable connection between Paris and Washington in that day the result would have been different. Perhaps if daily instructions could have been sent by wire from Jefferson to his commissioners in Paris, there would have been no treaty agreed upon. Probably we should never have acquired the domain west of the Mississippi River. There might have been there now a province of France, a colony of England, or an independent French or English speaking nation to limit our western growth and dispute with us the national superiority on the Western Hemisphere.

The opponents of Jefferson did not take kindly to the treaty. The price paid, the character of the people acquired, the quality of the land purchased, the danger of unduly extending the limits of a republic, the violation of the Constitution by the provisions of the treaty, the lessons to be drawn from the growth and destruction of the Roman republic, in fine, all the objections to the expansion of a nation or the acquisition of new territory which the ingenuity of the human mind has been able to devise, seem to have been the subject of severe and learned comment by the opponents of the treaty for the Louisiana purchase.

Jefferson himself was not free from constitutional scruples.

In a letter from President Jefferson to Senator Breckenridge, dated August 12, 1803, he said:

The treaty must, of course, be laid before both Houses, because both have important functions to exercise respecting it. They, I presume, will see their duty to their country in ratifying and paying for it, so as to secure a good which would otherwise probably be never again in their power. But I suppose they must then appeal to the nation for an additional article to the Constitution approving and confirming an act which the nation has not previously authorised. The Constitution has made no provision for our holding foreign territory, still less for incorporating foreign nations into our Union. The Executive, in seizing the fugitive occurrence, which so much advances the good of their country, has done an act beyond the Constitution.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENT JEFFERSON.

In a letter to Senator Nicholas, of Virginia, September 7, 1803, President Jefferson said:

I am aware of the force of the observations you make on the power given by the Constitution to Congress to admit new States into the Union without restraining the subject to the territory then constituting the United States. But when I consider that the limits of the United States are precisely fixed by the treaty of 1783, that the Constitution expressly declares itself to be made for the United States, I can not help believing that the intention was not to permit Congress to admit into the Union new States which should be formed out (outside) of the territory for which, and under whose authority alone, they were then acting.

In a letter from President Jefferson to Secretary of State James Madison, dated August 25, 1803, Jefferson said:

Further reflection on the amendment to the Constitution necessary in the case of Louisiana satisfies me it will be better to give general powers, with specified exceptions, somewhat in the way stated below. * * *

P. S.—Louisiana, as ceded by France to the United States, is made a part of the United States. Its white inhabitants shall be citizens and stand as to their rights and obligations on the same footing with other citizens of the United States in analogous situations. Save only as to the portion thereof lying north of the latitude of the mouth of the Oreansa River, no new State shall be established nor any grants of land made therein other than to Indians, in exchange for equivalent portions of land occupied by them, until amendment to the Constitution shall be made for these purposes.

Florida also, whenever it may be rightfully obtained, shall become a part of the United States. Its white inhabitants shall thereupon be citizens and shall stand, as to their rights and obligations, on the same footing with other citizens of the United States in analogous circumstances.

In a letter from Jefferson to Levi Lincoln, his Attorney-General, dated August 30, 1803, he proposed the following draft of an amendment to the Constitution:

Louisiana, as ceded by France to the United States, is made a part of the United States. Its white inhabitants shall be citizens and stand as to their rights and obligations on the same footing with other citizens of the United States in analogous circumstances. Save only as to that portion thereof lying north of an east-and-west line drawn through the mouth of the Arkansas River, no new State shall be established, nor any grants of land made other than to Indians in exchange for equivalent portions of land occupied by them, until an amendment of the Constitution shall be made for these purposes.

These letters from President Jefferson, in the light of present claims, are very instructive. Jefferson at that time was taking the position that under the Constitution there was no authority for that provision of the treaty providing that the inhabitants of the ceded territory should be incorporated into the Union. He could not have believed there was no authority to acquire new territory by purchase, because he had appointed Monroe and Livingston as commissioners for the purpose of effecting a purchase of New Orleans and had obtained from Congress authority to expend $2,000,000 in that undertaking.

It must, therefore, have been the opinion of Jefferson that, under the Constitution, the Government had authority to purchase New Orleans and hold it as a possession of the United States, but did not have authority to admit its inhabitants to all the rights of citizens or to subsequently create the new acquisition into a State or States to be admitted into the Union on equal terms.

The inference is irresistible that Jefferson believed that under the Constitution our Government had authority to acquire new territory to be governed by Congress as a possession or colony.

This view is strengthened by the draft of amendment proposed by Jefferson. Jefferson's proposition was that the Constitution should be amended so as to permit the admission of new States to be formed out of a part of the Louisiana purchase, but that a portion of the new acquisition should not be admitted. As to a portion of the territory acquired by the treaty, he proposed that no new State should be established out of it without a further amendment to the Constitution.

The claim is now frequently made that under the Constitution Congress has authority only to legislate for Territories for the purpose of subsequently creating them into States to be admitted on equal terms into the Union. Such certainly was not the view of President Jefferson, who proposed to adopt an amendment providing that a portion of the territory acquired should never be admitted as a State except by further amendment of the Constitution. Here again is an irresistible inference that Jefferson believed Congress had the power under the Constitution to control, regulate, and legislate for Territorial possessions or colonies without any view of forming them into new States.

VIEWS OF CONGRESS IN 1803.

The treaty for the Louisiana purchase was ratified by the Senate in October, 1803, at a special session of Congress called by the President for the purpose of considering it; and immediately bills were introduced to authorize the President to take possession of and govern the new province, and to provide for the payment of the sum agreed to be paid to France.

The discussion of these measures in the House and Senate gave to the members of those bodies an opportunity to express their views both as to the advisability and the constitutionality of the treaty and the purchase. No study of the subject of our national growth would be at all complete without a full and careful reading of the debates at the extra session of 1803. The statesmen who then sat in Congress were near enough, in point of time, to the Declaration of Independence and the formation of the Constitution to feel in touch with the real spirit of those documents. And what is very remarkable in the discussion was that the opponents of the treaty did not once in the course of a most determined opposition refer to the sacred rights of man proclaimed by the Declaration of Independence or to the proposition that the just powers of government depend upon the consent of the governed and the proposed overriding of those principles by the provisions of the treaty. They had far less imagination than gentlemen of the present day.

One of the provisions in the Louisiana purchase treaty was that—

The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible according to the principles of the Federal Constitution to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States.

The insertion of such a provision in the treaty would seem to indicate that at least the draftsman of the treaty did not believe that the mere cession of the territory to the United States would make it such a part of the United States as to extend the jurisdiction of the Constitution and the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States to the inhabitants of the ceded territory.

The treaty also contained a provision giving a discrimination in favor of French and Spanish ships coming into the ports of entry within the ceded territory for the space of twelve years.

Let me direct your attention to the constitutional provisions upon the subjects of uniformity of duties and discrimination between ports.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution provides that Congress shall have the power—

To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Section 9 of Article I provides that—

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

Notwithstanding these provisions of the Constitution, it was provided by Article VII of the treaty that—

As it is reciprocally advantageous to the commerce of France and the United States to encourage the communication of both nations, for a limited time, in the country ceded by the present treaty, until general arrangements relative to the commerce of both nations may be agreed on, it has been agreed between the contracting parties that the French ships coming directly from France or any of her colonies, loaded only with the produce or manufactures of France or her said colonies, and the ships of Spain coming directly from Spain or any of her colonies, loaded only with the produce or manufactures of Spain or her colonies, shall be admitted during the space of twelve years in the port of New Orleans, and in all other legal ports of entry within the ceded territory, in the same manner as the ships of the United States coming directly from France or Spain or any of their colonies without being subject to any other or greater duty on the merchandise or other or greater tonnage than those paid by the citizens of the United States. * * *

Although the treaty had been ratified by the Senate, it was strongly attacked in the House of Representatives on the ground that it was unconstitutional, and hence illegal, and that Congress was not therefore bound to consider it as the law of the land or make appropriations or enact legislation for the purpose of carrying out its provisions and giving it full effect. The discussion in the House and the legislation which was enacted are most instructive. I take the liberty of calling attention to full and fair extracts from speeches by leaders both on the side of the Presidential party, which favored the treaty, and the opposition, which denounced it. I quote from the Annals of Congress.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OCTOBER, 1803.

In discussing the effect of the treaty Mr. Mitchell, of Massachusetts, in the House of Representatives, in October, 1803, said:

There is nothing compulsory upon the inhabitants of Louisiana to make them stay and submit to our Government. But if they choose to remain, it has been most kindly and wisely provided that until they should be admitted to the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States they shall be maintained and protected in the enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess. What would the gentleman propose that we shall do with them? Send them away to the Spanish provinces, or turn them loose in the wilderness? No, sir; it is our purpose to pursue a much more dignified system of measures.

It is intended, first, to extend to this newly acquired people the blessings of law and social order; to protect them from rapacity, violence, and anarchy; to make them secure in their lives, limbs, and property, reputation, and civil privileges; to make them safe in the rights of conscience. In this way they are to be trained up in a knowledge of our own laws and institutions. They are thus to serve an apprenticeship to liberty; they are to be taught the lessons of freedom; and by degrees they are to be raised to the enjoyment and practice of independence. All this is to be done as soon as possible; that is, as soon as the nature of the case will permit, and according to the principles of the Federal Constitution.

Strange that proceedings declared on the face of them to be constitutional should be inveighed against as violations of the Constitution!

Secondly, after they shall have been a sufficient length of time in this probationary condition, they shall, as soon as the principles of the Constitution permit, and conformably thereto, be declared citizens of the United States. Congress will judge of the time, manner, and expediency of this. The act we are now about to perform will not confer on them this elevated character. They will thereby gain no admission into this House, nor into the other House of Congress. There will be no alien influence thereby introduced into our councils.

By degrees, however, they will pass on from the childhood of Republicanism, through the improving period of youth, and arrive at the mature experience of manhood. And then they may be admitted to the full privileges which their merit and station will entitle them to. At that time a general law of naturalization may be passed. For I do not venture to affirm that, by the mere act of cession, the inhabitants of a ceded country become, of course, citizens of the country to which they are annexed. It seems not to be the case, unless specially provided for. By the third article it is stipulated that the inhabitants of Louisiana shall hereafter be made citizens; ergo they are not made citizens of the United States by mere operation of treaty.

Mr. Smilie, of Pennsylvania, stated that he—

Agreed in opinion with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Varnum] that the Constitution of the United States did not extend to this territory any further than they were bound by the compact between the ceding power and the people. On this principle they had a right, viewing it in the light of a colony, to give it such government as the Government of the United States might think proper, without thereby violating the Constitution; when incorporated into the Union, the inhabitants must enjoy all the rights of citizens. He would thank gentlemen to show any part of the Constitution that extends either legislative, executive, or judicial power over this territory. If none such could be shown, it must rest with the discretion of the Government to give it such a system as they may think best for it.

Mr. John Randolph said:

A stipulation to incorporate the ceded country does not imply that we are bound ever to admit them to the unqualified enjoyment of the privileges of citizenship. It is a covenant to incorporate them into our Union, not on the footing of the original States, or of States created under the Constitution, but to extend to them, according to the principles of the Constitution, the rights and immunities of citizens, being those rights and immunities of jury trial, liberty of conscience, etc., which every citizen may challenge, whether he be a citizen of an individual State or of a Territory subordinate to and dependent on those States in their corporate capacity. In the meantime they are to be protected in the enjoyment of their existing rights. There is no stipulation, however, that they shall ever be formed into one or more States.

Do not the United States possess Territories now? Is the possession of Territories confined by the Constitution to those they now hold? I believe not; for in the Constitution it is stated that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Here is a clear recognition of territory belonging to the United States, and not merely of territory then held, but of territory which might in future be acquired by treaty or purchase. And if this territory be ceded to the United States, Congress have power, as soon as it is ceded, to make rules and regulations respecting it.

Roger Griswold, of Connecticut, one of the leaders of the opposition, made the most elaborate argument against the constitutionality of the treaty:

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Smilie], however, has said that it is competent for this Government to obtain a new territory by conquest, and if a new territory can be obtained by conquest he infers that it can be procured in the manner provided for by the treaty. While I admit the premises of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I deny his conclusion.

A new territory and new subjects may undoubtedly be obtained by conquest and by purchase; but neither the conquest nor purchase can incorporate them into the Union. They must remain in the condition of colonies and be governed accordingly. The objection to the third article is not that the province of Louisiana could not have been purchased, but that neither this nor any other foreign nation can be incorporated into the Union by treaty or by law; and as this country has been ceded to the United States only under the condition of an incorporation it results that if the condition is unconstitutional or impossible the cession itself falls to the ground.

The opposition to the treaty of peace with Spain seems to be largely based upon the proposition that this country can not, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, accept territory to be governed as colonies. This argument has probably been urged with more force than any other. It is the basis of most of the opposition to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands.

It has been insisted with eloquence, earnestness, and learning that it was contrary to both the policy and the spirit of our form of government that we should enter upon a colonial system, or that we should possess any territory or province to be governed upon the idea of a colony without merely considering such government as temporary in character and preparatory to statehood.

It is now urged most strenuously that any suggestion of the right to govern a possession as a colony is a violent departure from the plans and policies of our forefathers.

As I understand the opposition to the present treaty, the claim is made that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands ought never to be permitted to form separate States to be admitted into the Federal Union, and that therefore we are violating the spirit of the Constitution if we annex them, because it was not contemplated that any territory should be annexed except what should be finally admitted into the Federal Union as States.

The opposition in 1803, when the Government was young, when the men who sat in Congress were those who had been present at the formation of the Constitution and the birth of the Republic, seem to have had a different idea. I again call attention to the remarks of Mr. Griswold, the leader of the opposition in the House. He said:

A new territory and new subjects may undoubtedly be obtained by conquest and by purchase, but neither the conquest nor purchase can incorporate them into the Union. They must remain in the condition of colonies and be governed accordingly.

Let me now call your attention to what Mr. Nicholson, of Maryland, one of the leaders of the Presidential party in the House, and who defended the treaty in an elaborate argument, said:

The other constitutional objection is raised upon the seventh article of the treaty, which provides that the ships of France and Spain shall be admitted for twelve years into the ports of the ceded territory without paying higher duties than the ships of the United States.

To this gentlemen have opposed that part of the Constitution which declares that no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another, and that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. There appears to be a strange inconsistency in the arguments of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. R. Griswold]. He tells you that this Territory is not a State, and that it never can become a State; yet he afterwards declares that the treaty violates the Constitution by giving the port of New Orleans a preference over the ports of the Atlantic States. There is surely a contradiction here.

Whatever may be the future destiny of Louisiana, it is certain that it is not now a State. It is territory purchased by the United States in their confederate capacity, and may be disposed of by them at pleasure. It is in the nature of a colony whose commerce may be regulated without any reference to the Constitution.

Had it been the island of Cuba which was ceded to us under a similar condition of admitting French and Spanish vessels for a limited time into Havana, could it possibly have been contended that this would be giving a preference to the ports of one State over another, or that the uniformity of duties, imposts, and excises throughout the United States would have been destroyed? And because Louisiana lies adjacent to our territory, is it to be viewed in a different light? Or can the circumstance of its being separated by a river only, instead of the sea, constitute any real difference in regard to commercial relations which we may think proper to establish?

It seems almost strange that while the leaders in favor of the Louisiana purchase and those opposed to it disagreed upon almost every proposition of fact and constitutional law, yet upon one vital point both Mr. Griswold, for the opposition, and Mr. Nicholson, in favor of the treaty, were in complete accord. Both were of the opinion that we had a right to acquire territory by purchase, and the right to govern such territory as a colony. Mr. Nicholson stated:

It is territory purchased by the United States in their confederate capacity, and may be disposed of by them at pleasure. It is in the nature of a colony whose commerce may be regulated without any reference to the Constitution.

This was the opinion of the man who, by his argument, sustained and justified the treaty when it was attacked in Congress. He not only believed that we had the right to govern the newly acquired territory as a colony, but that we had a right to govern it without any reference to the Constitution. Upon this latter point Mr. Griswold did not agree. He said:

As to the idea of some gentlemen that this territory not being a part of the United States, but a colony, and that therefore we may do as we please with it, it is not correct. If we acquire a colony by conquest or purchase—and I believe we may do both—it is not consistent with the Constitution to delegate to the President, even over a colony thus acquired, all power, legislative, executive, and judicial, for this would make him the despot of the colony.

But in saying this he reiterated his belief that Congress had the right to govern the new territory as a colony without regard to its future admission as a State, and the rest of his opinion was not adopted by Congress in the legislation then enacted.

Do not forget that these were the expressions and beliefs of the men who were the leaders in the National House of Representatives in 1803, at the time when Thomas Jefferson was President and James Madison his Secretary of State. Do not forget that these were the opinions of the men who were living in the very dawn of the Republic, who were acquainted with the sentiment and spirit and policy of the people which had founded a new government, who themselves had partaken in the formation of our nation.

A great deal of very earnest and patriotic language has been used recently urging our country not to depart from the policy indicated by the Declaration of Independence and the spirit of the Constitution.

Strange, is it not, that the knowledge of this spirit and policy was unknown to the men who legislated in the days of Jefferson and Madison, but has recently been acquired by those who now ardently oppose American control in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands?

But I do not wish to digress; I am simply desirous of calling attention to the history of the policy and spirit of our country as denoted by facts.

Article VII of the treaty gave a preference to French and Spanish vessels entering the port of New Orleans for twelve years, and it was urged by those opposed to the treaty that this was a violation of the Constitution which rendered the treaty invalid and illegal.

Upon this subject Mr. Griswold, of New York, in opposition, after declaring that the Constitution gave no authority to annex territory by treaty, said:

This article gives to the ships of France and Spain the same right of entering the ports of the ceded territory with our own vessels, and it precludes the ships of all other nations from the same right. Now, if, as gentlemen contend, the new ceded territory with the inhabitants should become incorporated with the United States, there will be ports of entry in the United States into which French and Spanish vessels may enter on terms different from those on which they may enter other ports of the United States.

The inference was that here was a favor granted to the ports of New Orleans over other ports. This was against an important principle of the Constitution, for in the ninth section of the first article we find, "No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another." This treaty, then, becomes the law of the land. It has made a commercial regulation. It gives to the ports of the ceded territory a preference to any other ports, because the produce of France and Spain can be carried cheaper to their ports than to any other. If the principle contended for by gentlemen in favor of the treaty is admitted, I think I see a fatal blow proposed against the Constitution of the United States by destroying the reciprocity of interest that unites at present the different members of the Union. Perhaps I see wrong.

Mr. Griffin, of Virginia, said that—

He was correct, he believed, in stating that under the present regulations of trade Spanish vessels pay 50 cents per ton, while American vessels paid only 6 cents. Here, then, the President and Senate undertake to destroy this provision made by law. For, according to the treaty, Spanish and French vessels entering the ports of New Orleans will hereafter pay only 6 cents a ton, while similar vessels coming to all the other ports of the United States will be obliged to pay 50 cents a ton. The difference between 6 and 50 constitutes the preference given to New Orleans.

Mr. Rodney, of Delaware, sustained the treaty, and said:

"No preference," says the Constitution, "shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another." In what way, under this treaty, is there any preference of one port over another? I would be glad to see it pointed out, and to be shown whether there is any preference of Delaware over Massachusetts, or of Virginia over Georgia. No. The Constitution adverts to States themselves; and that the distinction between States and Territories is bottomed upon reason. Whence the necessity of the distinction?

When Territories grow into States and become represented in the public councils, a majority of them may league together and carry into effect regulations prejudicial to other States. Hence the Constitution provides that in all commercial regulations all the States shall be equally affected. But such a league can not be effected by Territories, which have no Senators in the other branch, and in this only the voice, without the vote, of a single Delegate. Independent of this consideration is this: If by any particular Territorial regulation the territory of the United States is benefited, that territory being the common property of the United States, a public stock in which they all share, every State in the Union reaps alike the benefit.

Mr. Mitchell, of Massachusetts, said:

By the treaty there is no preference given to one State over another in any commercial regulations. The port of New Orleans is not a part of any State in the Union. The abolition of the discriminating duties in favor of the two European nations is confined absolutely to the ports of Louisiana. They have no preference in the ports of any of the States. Nor is there given to one an advantage over the other.

Mr. Elliott, of Vermont, said that—

It was not contemplated that this provision would have application to colonial or territorial acquisitions. But it is said that the treaty obliges us to receive the inhabitants of the ceded territory into the Union and, of course, to form them into new States. * * * A complete discretion is left to the United States as to the time and manner of admission, and I have no idea that it will be necessary to admit them within the twelve years during which France and Spain are to enjoy those privileges.

The gentlemen who opposed the treaty of that day had the same fears which have been excited by the gentlemen who have opposed the treaty with Spain.

Mr. Griffin, of Virginia, said, in the House of Representatives in 1803, that he—did not feel a disposition to discuss the merits of the treaty or to go at large into the consequences which it might produce. He did, however, fear those consequences; he feared the effects of the vast extent of our empire; he feared the effects of the increased value of labor, the decrease in the value of lands, and the influence of climate upon our citizens who should migrate thither. He did fear (though this land was represented as flowing with milk and honey) that this Eden of the New World would prove a cemetery for the bodies of our citizens.

While Mr. Thatcher, of Massachusetts, said that he—was not disposed to discuss the causes which have produced the dismemberment of empires, though all history showed that great empires, whether monarchies or republics, had been ultimately broken to pieces by their magnitude. * * *

This acquisition of distant territory will involve the necessity of a considerable standing army, so justly an object of terror. Do gentlemen flatter themselves that by purchasing Louisiana we are invulnerable? No, sir; Spain will still border on our southern frontier, and so long as Spain occupies that country we are not secure from the attempts of another nation more warlike and ambitious.

Mr. Roger Griswold said:

This subject was much considered during the last session of Congress, but it will not be found either in the report of the secret committee which has recently been published or in any document or debate that any individual entertained the least wish to obtain the province of Louisiana. Our views were then confined to New Orleans and the Floridas, and, in my judgment, it would have been happy for this country if they were still confined within those limits. The vast and unmanageable extent which the accession of Louisiana will give to the United States, the consequent dispersion of our population, and the destruction of that balance which it is so important to maintain between the Eastern and the Western States threatens at no very distant day the subversion of our Union.

While Mr. Gaylor Griswold, of New York, another one of the leaders of the opposition, said:

If the principle contended for by gentlemen in favor of the treaty is admitted, I think I see a fatal blow proposed against the Constitution of the United States, by destroying the reciprocity of interest that unites at present the different members of the Union. Perhaps I see wrong.

I recently heard it said by a member of this House in the debate here that he would rather give Spain $100,000,000 and not keep the Philippines than to take them for nothing. His remark was not exactly original. Senator White, of Delaware, in discussing the Louisiana treaty, made much the same remark in 1803. In the course of the debate at that time Senator White said:

Louisiana must and will become settled if we hold it, and with the very population that would otherwise occupy part of our present territory. Thus our citizens will be removed to the immense distance of two or three thousand miles from the capital, where they will scarcely ever feel the rays of the General Government. Their affections will become alienated; they will gradually begin to view us as strangers; they will form other commercial connections, and our interests will become distinct. These, with other causes that human wisdom may not now foresee, will in time effect a separation, and I fear our bounds will be then fixed nearer to our houses than the waters of the Mississippi. We have already territory enough, and when I contemplate the evils that may arise to these States from this intended incorporation of Louisiana into the Union, I would rather see it given to France, to Spain, or to any other nation of the earth upon the mere condition that no citizen of the United States should ever settle within its limits, than to see the land in the territory sold for $100,000,000 and we retain the sovereignty.

VIEWS OF GOUVERNEUR MORRIS.

I have already called your attention to the history of the provision in the Constitution relating to the Government of the territory of the United States by Congress and to the fact that this provision of the Constitution, as well as many other provisions, was drafted by Gouverneur Morris. I now wish to call your attention to two letters written by Gouverneur Morris. He was a Federalist, a supporter of President Adams and a bitter opponent of President Jefferson. He had been a member of the Constitutional Convention, and the proceedings of that body show that he was one of its most active and influential members.

When the Louisiana treaty was promulgated, Mr. Henry W. Livingston wrote to Morris asking him in regard to his construction of the provision relating to government of Territories. Morris replied; but his first reply was not fully satisfactory to himself and a few days thereafter he sent another letter to Henry W. Livingston, dated December 4, 1803, in which he said:

A circumstance which turned up in conversation yesterday has led me again to read over your letter of the 3d of November and my answer of the 28th [25th]. I perceive now that I mistook the drift of your inquiry, which is substantially whether Congress can admit, as a new State, territory which did not belong to the United States when the Constitution was made.

In my opinion they can not.

I always thought that when we should acquire Canada and Louisiana it would be proper to govern them as provinces and allow them no voice in our councils. In wording the third section of the fourth article I went as far as circumstances would permit to establish the exclusion. Candor obliges me to add my belief that, had it been more pointedly expressed, a strong opposition would have been made.

And in a letter dated January 7, 1804, written to Jonathan Dayton, Gouverneur Morris said:

As to the cession of Louisiana, I should indeed have lost all shame as well as pretense to understanding if I did not approve of it. A few millions more or less in the price might be a fit subject for Democrats to bawl about if the treaty had been made by their opponents, but it really seems unworthy of notice when the subject is taken up on a great scale. I see with you that it will not be easy to find a proper governor for the newly acquired territory, supposing always the Administration to know the kind of a man necessary to the office and to seek him without motives of party or partiality.

Let me add my belief that no man, without the support of at least 1,000 American bayonets, can duly restrain the inhabitants of that region. * * *

There are two points which do not meet my approbation. * * * My other objection is more serious. The stipulation to admit the inhabitants into our Union will, I believe, prove injurious to this country. (Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris, by Anne Cary Morris, volume 2, page 452.)

Here we have the construction of one of the leading framers of the Constitution. Although politically opposed to President Jefferson, he was in favor of the purchase of Louisiana; he believed that we had the right to govern it as a province; that we had no constitutional right to admit the acquired territory as new States; that it would be necessary to govern the annexed territory by force of bayonets and arms; and his only objection to the treaty was that it provided for the eventual admittance of the inhabitants into the Union.

ACT TO TAKE POSSESSION OF LOUISIANA.

The discussion of the treaty at the special session in October, 1803, resulted in the passage of an act authorizing the President to take possession of the ceded territory and providing for the temporary government thereof. The bill for this act passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 89 yeas to 23 nays. It passed the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. Permit me to call your attention to its terms. It provided:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to take possession of and occupy the territory ceded by France to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 30th of April last between the two nations; and that he may for that purpose, and in order to maintain in the said territories the authority of the United States, employ any part of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the force authorized by an act passed the 3d day of March last, entitled "An act directing a detachment from the militia of the United States, and for erecting certain arsenals," which he may deem necessary, and so much of the sum appropriated by the said act as may be necessary is hereby appropriated for the purpose of carrying this act into effect; to be applied under the direction of the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, or unless provision be sooner made for the temporary government of the said Territories, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner, as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the full enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The other act, which was referred to in section 1 of the above act, was the act of March 3, 1803, authorizing the President, whenever he shall judge it expedient, to take effectual measures to organize, arm, equip, and hold in readiness to march at a moment's warning, a detachment of militia not exceeding 80,000.

In the recent debate in this House upon the bill for the increase of the Army, a great deal was said by the opponents of the treaty about the danger of granting authority to the President to control an army of between fifty and one hundred thousand, with authority to send them into the territory ceded by Spain for the purpose of obtaining and maintaining forcible possession. It will be noted that although the inhabitants of New Orleans and the rest of the province of Louisiana had not been consulted about the cession of their territory to the United States, yet Congress, in 1803, under the inspiration of President Jefferson and James Madison, enacted this law authorizing the President to call out troops to the number of 80,000 for the purpose of taking forcible possession of New Orleans.

It was well known at that time that Spain was inclined to object to the cession of Louisiana by France to this country, and it was also known that the inhabitants of the ceded territory did not desire to come under the sovereignty and control of the United States.

It will be noticed that the act of 1803 gave to President Jefferson despotic and unlimited power over the newly ceded territory for its temporary government.

ORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR LOUISIANA.

The United States took possession of New Orleans December 20, 1803, and a little later Congress proceeded to the enactment of legislation for the organization of Territorial government for the newly acquired possessions.

One of the disputed propositions at present in regard to the annexation of the Philippine Islands is whether by the ratification of the treaty and the annexation of those islands to the United States the Constitution, with all of its provisions, is thereby extended over the annexed territory. I have already called attention to the preference given to Spanish and French ships for twelve years at the port of New Orleans by the treaty, contrary to an express provision of the Constitution if that provision were held to apply in the new territory.

I have also called attention to the opinions of the various members of Congress expressed in the debate. Permit me to now call your attention to the act which was passed for the organization of Territorial government for the Louisiana purchase and to the consideration of the bill for that purpose in the House of Representatives. And first note that section 2 of Article III of our Constitution provides that—

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

The sixth amendment to the Constitution provides that—

In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury.

The seventh amendment provides that—

In all suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

It seems almost patent that if the Constitution was, by the consummation of the acquisition, extended over the new territory, then these constitutional provisions became at once in force in the new territory, and that Congress could not pass any valid act in any way limiting the rights thus guaranteed. And yet that is precisely what Congress proceeded to do. I call your attention to the act of March 26, 1804, for the organization of a government for the newly acquired Louisiana territory.

In section 5 of the act as it was finally passed is the provision—

In all criminal prosecutions which are capital the trial shall be by a jury of twelve good and lawful men of the vicinage; and in all cases, criminal and civil, in the superior court the trial shall be by a jury if either of the parties require it.

The same provision was in the bill when first introduced in the Senate. During the consideration of this section of the bill in the Senate, in January, 1804, it was moved to amend that clause of the fifth section reading "In all criminal prosecutions which are capital the trial shall be by a jury of twelve good and lawful men of the vicinage," by striking out the words "which are capital;" but the motion was defeated by a vote of 11 yeas to 16 nays.

When the same section was under consideration in the House of Representatives in March, 1804, Mr. G. W. Campbell moved to strike out of that clause the words "which are capital the trial shall be by a jury of twelve good and lawful men of the vicinage; and in all cases, criminal and civil, in the superior court the trial shall be by a jury if either of the parties require it," and to insert in place thereof the words "the trial shall be by jury, and in all civil cases above the value of $20," for the purpose of making the clause comply with the provisions of the Constitution.

And Mr. Campbell said, in support of his motion, that he—conceived that in legislating for the people of Louisiana they were bound by the Constitution of the United States, and that they had not a right to establish courts in that Territory on any other terms than they could in any of the States. Wherever courts were established in a Territory, they must be considered as courts of the United States, and of consequence can not be otherwise constituted than as courts in the States. The Constitution expressly declares that in criminal cases the trial shall be by jury, and in all civil cases where the sum in controversy exceeds the value of $20 the trial shall be likewise by jury. In the ninth article of the amendments to the Constitution we find the following words: "In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." The eighth article says: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury."

I will observe that the right of trial given by this section, to wit, "If either of the parties require it," is a dangerous mode of proceeding and may tend unwarily to entrap them. The person brought before the court for a misdemeanor, asked if he requires a jury trial, may be ignorant of the evidence and may not know the benefits of a trial by jury; he must at all events show a want of confidence in the court or waive a jury trial. If he does the first, he may sour the minds of the court. The party is thus put in a situation which may be worse than if he was deprived altogether of the right of a trial by the necessity of making a choice which may operate more against him. The bill, therefore, does not secure the right of a jury trial as contemplated by the Constitution.

It seems apparent that if the contention of Mr. Campbell that the Constitution did apply to the new territory was correct, then his amendment was necessary in order to make the proposed enactment constitutional. And yet his amendment was defeated by an overwhelming majority.

The act erecting Louisiana into two Territories and providing for the temporary government thereof became a law by the approval of President Jefferson (author of the Declaration of Independence and founder of the Democratic party) March 26, 1804. The provisions of that act are very instructive at the present time. I have already referred to the ordinance of 1787 and the acts organizing the Territories of Indiana and Mississippi.

But this was the first act organizing a government in territory acquired by the United States subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution, and it emphasizes the opinion of the statesmen of that day as to the rights and power of Congress in the government of the acquired territory.

By that act what is now the State of Louisiana was organized into the Territory of Orleans. Section 4 of the act provided as follows:

SEC. 4. The legislative powers shall be vested in the governor and in 13 of the most fit and discreet persons of the Territory, to be called the legislative council, who shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States from among those holding real estate therein, and who shall have resided one year at least in the said Territory and hold no office of profit under the Territory or the United States. The governor, by and with advice and consent of the said legislative council, or of a majority of them, shall have power to alter, modify, or repeal the laws which may be in force at the commencement of this act. Their legislative powers shall also extend to all the rightful subjects of legislation, but no law shall be valid which is inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or which shall lay any person under restraint, burden, or disability on account of his religious opinions, professions, or worship; in all which he shall be free to maintain his own, and not burdened for those of another.

The governor shall publish throughout the said Territory all the laws which shall be made, and shall from time to time report the same to the President of the United States, to be laid before Congress, which, if disapproved of by Congress, shall thenceforth be of no force. The governor or legislative council shall have no power over the primary disposal of the soil, nor to tax the lands of the United States, nor to interfere with the claims to land within the said Territory. The governor shall convene and prorogue the legislative council whenever he may deem it expedient. It shall be his duty to obtain all the information in his power in relation to the customs, habits, and dispositions of the inhabitants of the said Territory, and communicate the same from time to time to the President of the United States.

In other words, Congress, in the early days of the Republic, organized a government in newly acquired territory not only without asking for the consent of the governed, but absolutely without regard to their wishes and without giving to them any local legislative influence.

The legislative powers were vested in a governor and a legislative council of thirteen, all to be named by the President of the United States. And the governor, by and with the consent of this legislative council, might enact such legislation as he saw fit. He could convene and prorogue the legislative council to suit his whim.

History compels us to say that it was Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, the founder of the Democratic party, who signed his approval to this law as President; and he made the appointments in accordance with its terms. And when he did so, his Secretary of State and confidential adviser was James Madison, the member and historian of the Constitutional Convention.

Nor was this all. As to the remainder of the Louisiana province, it was organized into the district of Louisiana, and by section 12 of the act it was provided that the executive power to be exercised in the said district should be vested in the governor of the Indiana Territory, and that the governor and judges of the Indiana Territory should have power to make all laws which they might deem conducive to the good government of the inhabitants of the district of Louisiana. And yet no complaint is now made that President Jefferson and the Congress which enacted this law acted foolishly or unwisely, or that their act was a breach of the principles of self-government expressed in our form of government.

The people of New Orleans, however, did not like the new form of government. Martin, the historian of Louisiana, says, referring to the transfer to the United States:

The people of Louisiana, especially in New Orleans, were greatly dissatisfied at the new order of things. They complained that the person whom Congress [President Jefferson] had sent to preside over them was an utter stranger to their laws, manners, and language, and had no personal interest in the prosperity of the country; * * * that in the new court of pleas, most of the judges of which were ignorant of the laws and language of the country, proceedings were carried on in the English language, which Claiborne had lately attempted to introduce into the proceedings of the municipal body, and the suitors were in an equally disadvantageous situation in the court of last resort, in which he sat as sole judge.—Martin's History of Louisiana, page 322.

The dissatisfaction of the people of New Orleans increased. Meetings were held, committees were appointed, and a deputation of three was sent before Congress to obtain redress. Martin says the deputation was not successful in their application to Congress. In March, 1805, Congress passed an act to establish a Territorial government similar to that of the Mississippi Territory. This provided for the appointment by the President of a governor, with an absolute veto power. In vain did the New Orleans deputation plead for an amendment to the bill providing that the governor should be chosen by the President out of two individuals selected by the people.

The conclusion is almost irresistible that the position taken by the President and Congress, on the consideration of the subject at the time, was that before being made into States the newly acquired territory had no rights under the Constitution; that it was to be governed independently of the Constitution and entirely outside of its limiting provisions; that it had no benefits from the Constitution except such as Congress, in its discretion, chose to extend; that it was to be governed as property; "the soil, as a sovereign would govern his property; the inhabitants, as a father would take care of his children."

The statesmen of that day attempted to govern the new possession in the only common-sense method. They acquired a vast possession which required some form of suitable government. Who now wishes that they had rejected the Louisiana purchase on the ground that they could not govern it except by despotic methods? It is true that the territory was sparsely settled outside of the city of New Orleans, but do the Constitution and Declaration of Independence only apply to thick settlements or large aggregations of people and not to the pioneers who take up their abode and make a fight for civilization in the sparsely settled Territories?

Is there any reason why, if Congress can give a sufficient and suitable government to a region too sparsely settled to admit of self-government without asking the consent of the inhabitants, the same Congress can not give a sufficient and suitable government to a region settled by a people who have not proven their capacity for self-government? What is the difference in principle, either as to the rights enunciated by the Declaration of Independence or the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution?

THE ACQUISITION OF FLORIDA.

But I do not wish to wander from my historical narrative. In April, 1818, Gen. Andrew Jackson, one of the patron saints of the Democratic party, in the prosecution of the Indian war took possession of the Spanish fort at St. Marks, Fla., by force of arms, and when remonstrated with by the Spanish governor replied by entering Pensacola in May and capturing the Spanish fort at Barrancas. Negotiations were then pending for the purpose of settling the boundary lines between the United States and the Spanish possessions on the west and south.

A treaty was concluded February 22, 1819, by which the boundary lines between the United States and the Spanish possessions were agreed upon, and at the same time Spain ceded the Spanish province of East Florida and the Spanish title to West Florida to the United States for the consideration of $5,000,000. This treaty was not ratified by the King of Spain until October 29, 1820, after which it was again ratified by the Senate on February 19, 1821.

Article VI of the Florida treaty provided that—

The inhabitants of the territories which His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution, and admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

And Article XV provided that—

The United States, to give His Catholic Majesty a proof of their desire to cement the relations of amity subsisting between the two nations and to favor the commerce of the subjects of His Catholic Majesty, agree that Spanish vessels coming laden only with productions of Spanish growth or manufactures directly from the ports of Spain or of her colonies shall be admitted, for the term of twelve years, to the ports of Pensacola and St. Augustine, in the Floridas, without paying other or higher duties on their cargoes, or of tonnage, than will be paid by the vessels of the United States. During the said term no other nation shall enjoy the same privileges within the ceded territories. The twelve years shall commence three months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.

The treaty with Spain fixed the boundary line between the United States and the Spanish possessions at what is now the easterly line of Texas. The present State of Texas was originally a part of the French or Spanish possessions west of the Mississippi River. In 1827 Henry Clay, then Secretary of State under President Adams, instructed the United States minister to Mexico to offer $1,000,000 for the Mexican territory east of the Rio Grande.

In 1829 Martin Van Buren, Secretary of State under President Jackson, instructed our minister to Mexico to offer $5,000,000 for the portion of Texas this side of the Neuces River, but Mexico refused the offer. In 1830 orders were issued by our Government to prevent any further emigration from the United States to Texas. On May 27, 1836, the Republic of Texas was proclaimed, and on March 3, 1837, it was recognized by the United States.

In 1844 the President negotiated a treaty with the new Republic of Texas for the annexation of Texas to the United States and her admission as a State in the Federal Union. When this treaty was presented to the Senate for its ratification, instead of receiving the necessary two-thirds vote to secure a ratification, it was rejected in the Senate by a vote of 16 ayes to 35 nays.

But on February 25, 1845, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 120 ayes to 98 nays, passed a joint resolution for the annexation of Texas, and on March 1, 1845, this resolution was passed by the Senate by a vote of 27 ayes to 25 nays. It will be noticed that this was a Senate consisting of the same members who in the previous year had rejected the treaty for annexation by more than a two-thirds vote in the negative. It will also be noticed that a change of one vote from aye to nay on the passage of the joint resolution would have defeated that resolution.

Texas on July 4, 1845, consented to annexation upon the terms named in the joint resolution, and on December 29, 1845, she was admitted as a State into the Union. At the time of the passage of the joint resolution, and also at the time of the admission of Texas as a State, Texas was considered as in rebellion by the Republic of Mexico, and her independence had not then been acknowledged by the Mexican Government, against which she had revolted.

THE ACQUISITION OF CALIFORNIA AND NEW MEXICO.

War with Mexico seemed imminent on account of the admission of Texas, and under date of November 10, 1845, James Buchanan, then Secretary of State, instructed our minister to Mexico to offer the Mexican Government $5,000,000 for the cession of New Mexico, $25,000,000 for the cession of the province of California as far north as San Francisco, and $20,000,000 for the bay and harbor of San Francisco and the Spanish territory to the northward. It is not necessary for me to recite the events leading up to the war with Mexico, which was declared to exist by a declaration of Congress passed on May 13, 1846. Nor is it necessary to call attention to the history of the Mexican war, which resulted in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which was made February 2, 1848, amended by the Senate in ratification, and proclaimed July 4, 1848.

It will be recalled that there was quite a Spanish settlement in California at the time of its acquisition by this country. In New Mexico was Santa Fe, the second oldest town in the United States. When Florida had been acquired, there came with it St. Augustine, the oldest town in our country. But in neither case had any expression been given by the inhabitants of the ceded territories showing that they desired annexation to this country. They had not been in any way consulted. Their wishes or their inclinations were not considered when making the treaty of peace.

Although the United States had defeated the Mexican Government and was in possession of the capital of Mexico at the time the treaty was entered into, one of the provisions was that this country was to pay to Mexico, in consideration of the cession of New Mexico and California, the sum of $15,000,000, and this sum was afterwards paid in pursuance of the treaty.

I have heard considerable said upon the floor of this House in denunciation of the provision of the present treaty with Spain for the payment by us to Spain of $20,000,000 as part consideration of the cession of the Philippine Islands. We have been told by gentlemen here representing the Democratic party that it was beneath the dignity of this country, after having defeated Spain in war, to now turn around and pay to Spain a large sum of money for that which, if we take at all, we ought to take purely and solely as victors. And I have wondered whether their denunciation extended far enough back to take in the Democratic President and Secretary of State under whose guidance and direction the provision was inserted in the treaty with Mexico for the payment of $15,000,000.

But again I do not wish to digress.

Article VIII of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, providing for the rights of the inhabitants in the ceded territory, was as follows:

Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without their being subjected, on this account, to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who prefer to remain in the said territories may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States. But they shall be under the obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States.

In the said territories property of every kind now belonging to Mexicans not established there shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract shall enjoy with respect to it guaranties equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States.

Article IX of the treaty, as negotiated and presented to the Senate for ratification, was as follows:

The Mexicans who in the Territories aforesaid shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

This provision was somewhat different from the provisions covering the same point in the treaties for the acquisition of Louisiana and Florida, and when the treaty came before the Senate for ratification, for some reason, which does not seem fully disclosed, but probably was simply to maintain uniformity, it was ordered by the Senate that the treaty be ratified with an amendment, inserting in place of article 9, as it read in the original draft of the treaty, the third article of the Louisiana treaty.

Mr. Chairman, the treaty with Spain, which has just been ratified by the Senate, after a memorable campaign for and against its ratification in this country, has created only a mild discussion compared with the bitter and violent debate in the country over the annexation of Texas and the acquisition of California and New Mexico. Great leaders of the country then as now were opposed to expansion. Men whose names will ever live in the history of our country as noble patriots and broad-minded statesmen then as now believed that the enlargement of our national domain and the expansion of our national sovereignty were fraught with the gravest of danger. But the discussion was not carried on so coolly then as now. The opposition was more determined and more embittered. In the minds of the opponents at that time the dangers were even more clearly seen (apparently) than they seem to be now.

Mr. Chairman, to no man who ever has sat in the Congress of the United States do the people of our country owe a greater debt of gratitude than to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who opposed with all his wonderful might and splendid mind the acquisition of California and New Mexico. Permit me to call your attention to a few of the expressions used by the great Daniel Webster, the defender of the Constitution, concerning the admission of Texas and the acquisition of New Mexico and California:

The Government is very likely to be endangered, in my opinion, by a further enlargement of the territorial surface, already so vast, over which it is extended.

And again he said, referring to the same subject:

I say, sir, that, according to my conscientious conviction, we are now fixing on the Constitution of the United States and its frame of government a monstrosity, a disfiguration, an enormity.

Sir, I hardly dare trust myself. I do not know but I may be under some delusion. It may be the weakness of my eye that forms this monstrous apparition. I hold it to be enormous, flagrant, an outrage upon all the principles of popular republican government, and on the elementary provisions of the Constitution under which we live and which we have sworn to support. * * * I think I see a course adopted which is likely to turn the Constitution of the land into a deformed monster, into a curse rather than a blessing. * * * And I think that this process will go on, or that there is danger that it will go on, until this Union shall fall to pieces. I resist it to-day and always. Whoever falters or whoever flies, I continue the contest.

And again he said:

On other occasions in debate here I have expressed my determination to vote for no acquisition or cession or annexation north or south, east or west. My opinion has been that we have territory enough, and that we should follow the Spartan maxim, "Improve, adorn what you have;" seek no further. * * * There may be in California, and no doubt there are, some tracts of valuable land. But it is not so in New Mexico. * * * There are some narrow strips of tillable land on the borders of the rivers, but the rivers themselves dry up before midsummer is gone. All that the people can do in that region is to raise some little articles, some little wheat for their tortillas, and that by irrigation.

I particularly commend the speech of Webster to the distinguished gentleman who represents on the floor of this House the Territory of Arizona, a part of the New Mexico to which Mr. Webster referred. That gentleman is known as a bitter opponent of expansion. He opposed with all his might the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. But Webster in his speech said that there might be some excuse for annexing the Hawaiian Islands, but he could see no possible excuse for taking in such a barren territory as he said Arizona was, from which the gentleman comes, and which he so well represents.

Mr. Chairman, the Senator from Massachusetts has been reversed by history. He did not see aright the signs of the times as to expansion. If Daniel Webster were now alive, he would be the last man in the Republic to admit that this country could afford to lose a single foot of the territory embraced in the cession from Mexico in 1848. He would be the quickest to admit that the acquisition of that territory has done much to cement the Union into closer unity; has done much to knit more tightly the bands which hold our country together; that the sunny land on the other side of the Rocky Mountains, which was so far away in 1848, and which, through the genius of our citizenship, has been brought into close and quick touch with the rest of the Union, has made our whole country feel that distance no longer separates the utmost parts from quick communication with the Central Government, which responds constantly to every feeling of danger or joy, of poverty or prosperity, in every part of our domain.

Following the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, we entered into another treaty with Mexico December 30, 1853, under the Administration of President Pierce, by which we purchased from Mexico a strip of land known as the Mesilla Valley, lying in the southern parts of New Mexico and Arizona, and embracing an area of 45,535 square miles, for which we paid to Mexico $10,000,000.

This treaty was negotiated on the part of the Union by Mr. James Gadsden, our minister to Mexico, and is usually referred to as the Gadsden purchase. This purchase was intended partly for the purpose of aiding in the settlement of a difference between the two countries as to the boundary line of the previous cession, but more for the purpose of showing the kindly feeling of our country to the Government in Mexico. The tract of land acquired by the purchase is probably worth less and cost more per square mile than any other territory ever acquired by our Government.

DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTS ON EXPANSION.

Mr. Chairman, all of the annexations to our country since the adoption of the Constitution up to the time of the Gadsden purchase had been under Democratic Administrations. May I ask the gentlemen on the Democratic side of this House to consider for a moment the names of those who were connected with the Administrations acquiring new territory for the expansion of our domain and sovereignty: President Thomas Jefferson and his Secretary of State, James Madison, afterwards President; President James Monroe, who negotiated the treaty with France, and under whose Administration Florida was acquired; President Andrew Jackson, who, while a general in the Army, had taken possession of Florida without orders and without regard to the rights of Spain; President Tyler, President Polk and his Secretary of State, James Buchanan, afterwards President, and President Pierce.

These are the men who were at the head of our Government during nearly all the time when the Democratic party has been in power in our Government. And permit me to say that in no case and upon no occasion did a single one of these great men ever propose to consult the wishes of the inhabitants in the new territory, except in the case of Texas.

They were the men who determined the historic policy of our country. It was their ambition and their desire to add to the other acquisitions of this country the island which we have just freed from the oppression of Spain. They believed not only that we had the right to add new territory to our country between the oceans and to govern it according to the dictates of the best judgment of Congress, unrestricted by the limitations of the Constitution, but they believed also in reaching across the water and taking in the island of Cuba.

Let me recall to your attention what has been done in the way of the acquisition of new territory during these Democratic Administrations.

The Louisiana purchase added to our territory 1,182,752 square miles, at an expense of 3¼ cents per acre. The Florida purchase added 59,268 square miles, at an expense of 17 cents per acre. The annexation of Texas added to our area 371,063 square miles, of which 274,356 square miles is included within the present State of Texas, and of which 96,707, lying outside of the limits of the present State of Texas, were purchased from Texas by the National Government in 1850, at an expense of $16,000,000, or 26 cents per acre.

The cession from Mexico in 1848 contained 522,568 square miles, which cost 4½ cents per acre. The Gadsden purchase of 45,535 square miles was acquired at a cost of 34 cents per acre.

THE ALASKA PURCHASE.

Mr. Chairman, the first duty of the Republican party was not to add new territory, but save to the country a portion of the old. Without regard to the doctrine that the just powers of government depend upon the consent of the governed, the National Government determined, by the issue of war, that neither the individual States nor a concerted movement of the Southern States or their people were entitled to separate themselves from our national sovereignty and organize a government apart from us for themselves. The right of revolution, asserted by the Declaration of Independence successfully, was again asserted by the Southern Confederacy, but this time without success.

It was not long, however, after the civil war until under the Administration of President Johnson, by the treaty made March 30, 1867, at Washington, by Secretary of State William H. Seward, in behalf of this country, the United States acquired the cession from Russia of all her possessions on the continent of America and adjacent islands, which we now refer to as Alaska.

The Alaska purchase added 577,390 square miles to the area of our country, at a cost of $7,200,000.

The territory acquired by this purchase has, up to the present time, been governed without any local legislature and wholly by direction and under the control of Congress. And though its government may not have been excellent, it probably has been much better than it would have been if conducted by a local legislature elected in that sparsely settled territory.

The power of Congress to give a fitting character to the particular legislation enacted for the special government of Alaska has seldom, if ever, been questioned, and has invariably, I believe, been exercised whenever Congress has seen fit.

OPINIONS OF LAW WRITERS.

Mr. Chairman, I have referred to some of the events in history concerning annexation, and to the opinions of some of the men who had much to do with the Republic and its policies in its early days. Permit me to call attention to a few legal opinions. Probably the two greatest writers of our country upon legal subjects have been Chancellor Kent and Judge Story. The Commentaries of one and text-books by the other are studied in every law college of our land. These men speak with authority equal to that of learned judges in deciding cases of grave importance.

Chancellor Kent, in referring to the various acts of Congress in relation to the organization and government of the various Territories under the provision of the Constitution empowering Congress "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," said:

It would seem from these various Congressional regulations of the Territories belonging to the United States that Congress have supreme power in the government of them, depending on the exercise of their sound discretion. That discretion has hitherto been exercised in wisdom and good faith and with an anxious regard for the security of the rights and privileges of the inhabitants, as defined and declared in the ordinance of July, 1787, and in the Constitution of the United States.

"All admit," said Chief Justice Marshall, "the constitutionality of a Territorial government." But neither the District of Columbia nor a Territory is a State within the meaning of the Constitution or entitled to claim the privileges secured to the members of the Union. This has been so adjudged by the Supreme Court. Nor will a writ of error or appeal lie from a Territorial court to the Supreme Court unless there be a special statute provision for the purpose. If, therefore, the Government of the United States should carry into execution the project of colonizing the great valley of the Columbia or Oregon River to the west of the Rocky Mountains, it would afford a subject of grave consideration what would be the future civil and political destiny of that country.

It would be a long time before it would be populous enough to be created into one or more independent States, and in the meantime, upon the doctrine taught by the acts of Congress, and even by the judicial decisions of the Supreme Court, the colonists would be in a state of the most complete subordination and as dependent upon the will of Congress as the people of this country would have been upon the King and Parliament of Great Britain if they could have sustained their claim to bind us in all cases whatsoever. (Kent's Commentaries, volume 1, page 385.)

While Judge Story, in his work on constitutional law, said:

The power of Congress over the public territory is clearly exclusive and universal, and their legislation is subject to no control, but is absolute and unlimited, unless so far as it is affected by stipulations in the cessions or by the ordinance of 1787, under which any part of it has been settled. (Story on the Constitution, section 1328.)

Story also said:

What shall be the form of government established in the Territories depends exclusively upon the discretion of Congress. Having a right to erect a Territorial government, they may confer on it such powers—legislative, judicial, and executive—as they may deem best. (Story on the Constitution, section 1325.)

That these distinguished jurists and authors thoroughly understood the absolute and broad opinion of the power of Congress as thus expressed by them is shown by the statement of Chancellor Kent in expressing the following opinion concerning the danger of the despotic power thus conferred upon Congress, to wit:

Such a state of absolute sovereignty on the one hand and of absolute dependence on the other is not congenial with the free and independent spirit of our native institutions; and the establishment of distant Territorial governments, ruled according to will and pleasure, would have a very natural tendency, as all proconsular governments have had, to abuse and oppression. (Kent's Commentaries, volume 1, page 385.)

And Judge Story, in his work, refers to this opinion of Chancellor Kent. The opinion of Chancellor Kent that such a despotic power was a dangerous one is not, of course, a legal opinion. That is purely a matter of policy and not a matter of legal construction. The opinions of Chancellor Kent and Judge Story are entitled to the greatest weight so far as they refer to matters of constitutional law. Kent's opinion as to the propriety of such a despotic power has no greater weight than the opinion of many persons unlearned in the law, but the fact that he called attention to the dangers which might arise from the exercise of such absolute sovereignty and power by Congress shows conclusively that when he expressed his legal opinion that Congress had such authority, he was fully convinced that the power granted by the Constitution was broad, full, and absolute in its character.

DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. Chairman, it is proper to say that the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in reference to the power of Congress over the Territories of the United States are somewhat conflicting and contradictory in character, but there is no decision of the Supreme Court denying such authority to Congress. Let me refer briefly to some of the cases decided by the Supreme Court.

In the case of The American Insurance Company vs. Canter (1 Peters, 517), relating to the acquisition of Florida, Mr. Justice Johnson, in deciding the case on the circuit, said:

The right, therefore, of acquiring territory is altogether incidental to the treaty-making power, and perhaps to the power of admitting new States into the Union, and the government of such acquisitions is, of course, left to the legislative power of the Union so far as that power is uncontrolled by treaty. By the latter (treaty) we acquire either positively or sub modo, and by the former (legislative power) dispose of acquisitions so made, and in case of such acquisitions I see nothing in which the power acquired over the ceded territories can vary from the power acquired under the law of nations by any other Government over acquired or ceded territory.

Mr. Justice Johnson's decision was affirmed in January, 1828, by the Supreme Court (The American Insurance Company vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 541), the opinion being delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, who said (referring to the Florida treaty of cession):

This treaty is the law of the land, and admits the inhabitants of Florida to the enjoyment of the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States. It is unnecessary to inquire whether this is not their condition independent of stipulation. They do not, however, participate in political power; they do not share in the government till Florida shall become a State. In the meantime Florida continues to be a Territory of the United States, governed by virtue of that clause in the Constitution which empowers Congress "to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." * * *

The right to govern may be the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory. Whichever may be the source, whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestioned.

In Loughbrough vs. Blake (5 Wheat., 317) it was decided by the Supreme Court, the opinion being delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, that the provision in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, giving the "power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises" extends to the District of Columbia; and the court expressed the opinion that such power extends to all places over which the Government extends, including the Territories. It is manifest, however, that it was not necessary to refer to the Constitution for such power, because, if the Constitution covered the Territories expressly, then the power would cover the Territories; and if the Constitution does not cover the Territories expressly, then the absolute authority of Congress would include the power given by that section of the Constitution.

In Fleming vs. Page (9 How., 617) decided in 1850, the Supreme Court said:

After Florida had been ceded to the United States, and the forces of the United States had taken possession of Pensacola, it was decided by the Treasury Department that goods imported from Pensacola before an act of Congress was passed erecting it into a collection district and authorizing the appointment of a collector were liable to duty—that is, that although Florida had, by cession, actually become a part of the United States, and was in our possession, yet under our revenue laws its ports must be regarded as foreign until they were established as domestic by act of Congress; and it appears that this decision was sanctioned at the time by the Attorney-General of the United States, the law officer of the Government.

And although not so directly applicable to the case before us, yet the decisions of the Treasury Department in relation to Amelia Island and certain ports in Louisiana were both made upon the same grounds, and in the latter case, after a custom-house had been established by law at New Orleans, the collector at that place was instructed to regard as foreign ports Baton Rouge and other settlements still in the possession of Spain, whether on the Mississippi, Iberville, or the seacoast. The Department in no instance that we are aware of since the establishment of the Government has ever recognized a place in a newly acquired country as a domestic port from which the coasting trade might be carried on, unless it had been previously made so by act of Congress.

The principle thus adopted and acted upon by the executive department of the Government has been sanctioned by the decisions in this court and the circuit courts whenever the question came before them. We do not propose to comment upon the different cases cited in the argument. It is sufficient to say there is no discrepancy between them. And all of them, so far as they apply, maintain that under our revenue laws every port is regarded as a foreign one unless the custom-house from which the vessel clears is within a collection district established by act of Congress and the officers granting the clearance exercise their functions under the authority and control of the laws of the United States.

Daniel Webster, in his argument before the Supreme Court in the foregoing case of Fleming vs. Page (9 Howard, 612), stated:

That there was a difference between the Territories and other parts of the United States. Judges were there appointed for terms of years, which the Constitution forbade as to other parts of the country. Hence the part of the Constitution which directs that duties must be equal in all the ports of the United States does not apply to Territories.

And in discussing the bill to organize a government for the Territory of Oregon, Daniel Webster said, in the Senate of the United States, August 12, 1848:

The question now is, whether it is not competent to Congress, in the exercise of a fair and just discretion, considering that there have been five slaveholding States added to this Union out of foreign acquisitions, and as yet only one free State, to prevent their further increase. That is the question. I see no injustice in it. As to the power of Congress I have nothing to add to what I said the other day. Congress has full power over the subject. It may establish any such government and any such laws in the Territories as in its discretion it may see fit. It is subject, of course, to the rules of justice and propriety, but it is under no constitutional restraints.

The case of Cross vs. Harrison (16 Howard, 164) refers to the condition of California between the time when the treaty of peace of Guadalupe Hidalgo was signed, on February 3, 1848, and the time when a collector of customs at San Francisco entered upon the duties of his office, in the latter part of 1849, by appointment by the President under an act of Congress creating California into a customs district.

At the time the treaty of peace was signed, in March, 1848, California was in possession of the military branch of our Government, and military officers were collecting customs. Notice of the ratification of the treaty did not reach the military officers in California until some time after the middle of the year 1848. When such notice did reach the military authorities in California they received no instructions from the Government regarding the course they should pursue. They thereupon, by military order, provided that the duties to be paid on imports at San Francisco should thereafter be the same as provided by law for the United States.

In the early part of 1849 an act of Congress was passed creating California into a customs district, with the port at San Francisco, but it was not until the latter part of 1849 that a collector, appointed by the President, entered upon the discharge of his duties. Persons who had paid duties on imports into California between the date of the signing of the treaty and the date of the creation of California into a customs district, as well as between the latter date and the date when the collector of customs qualified, under written protest, urged that the collection of duties by the military authorities after the date of the signing of the treaty and its ratification was illegal and unlawful.

The Supreme Court held that the military authorities had the right to keep in force the rate of duties previously fixed by military order up to the time when, by further military order, a different rate was put in force equal to the rate fixed by law in the United States, and then had authority to collect the duties as fixed by the new military order up to the time when a collector was appointed and qualified under an act of Congress creating the territory into a customs district and fixing a port of entry. In the course of the argument in the opinion sustaining the proceedings taken by the military government of California, the court uses several expressions indicating that the tariff laws of the United States might be considered as extended over the newly acquired territory by virtue of the ratification of the treaty.

For instance, Justice Wayne, in denying the right of the importers to land goods at San Francisco free of duty between the time of the ratification of the treaty and the time when a collector of customs was qualified to act, states that to permit this would be—a violation of that provision of the Constitution which enjoins that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." Indeed, it must be clear that no such right exists and that there was nothing in the condition of California to exempt importers of foreign goods into it from the payment of the same duties which were chargeable in the other ports of the United States.

Such expressions of opinion as this one were not necessary to the decision of the case which was reached by the court, and though entitled to considerable weight upon that side of the question are not to be taken as expressing the considered decision of the Supreme Court upon a question of such vast importance as the one we are now discussing, and a decision of which was not required in the case before the court.

Mr. Chairman, I crave indulgence to refer to a few more recent decisions of the Supreme Court. I do not think it is necessary for us to pay much attention to the Dred Scott case. After the lapse of a generation, during which that case was only referred to for the purpose of pointing at it with the finger of scorn, the gentlemen on the other side of the House now begin to bring it out to fortify their position upon the subject of territorial expansion.

Let us not forget that the whole point involved in the Dred Scott case was the question of the extension of slavery. There was then going on in our country, as there had been from the time of the foundation of the Republic, that wonderful conflict of interest and ideas concerning the extension or restriction of slavery. It became necessary for the party which was then in control of the Government to take the position that the United States had no right to exclude slaves from any of the territory of the United States. For years the people of our country had acquiesced in the idea embodied in the Missouri compromise. There was to be and was a line north of which slavery should not exist and south of which slavery should not be interfered with.

The anti-slavery sentiment was not only becoming stronger in the hearts of the people of our country, but the numbers who expressed its ideas were becoming greater with the growth of the free States. To continue to keep out slavery north of the Missouri compromise line meant the admission of free States which would send to Congress Representatives and Senators opposed to slavery, so that the so-called balance of power between the slave and the free States would be destroyed and the free States would have a majority control of the Government.

In the minds of the keenest thinkers and leaders for the slavery party there was but one way in which to obviate the impending doom of slavery, and that was to secure a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that under the Constitution the Government could not interfere with the right of a citizen to take his slave or other property into any part of our Territories over which the Constitution was effective, and to hold that the Territories were covered by the provisions of the Constitution and guaranteed such right. It became necessary, in the development of this carefully laid scheme, for the Supreme Court to decide that the Territories of the United States were covered and protected by the guaranties in the Constitution, and that negro slaves might be carried by their masters into and kept in any of these Territories.

Every line of the decision by Chief Justice Taney was written for the purpose, and solely for the purpose, of effecting the result of permitting slaveholding in any and all of the Territories of the United States. That decision was blotted over by the blood of both North and South. It is not a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was a decision demanded and received by the slaveholding power of the Southern States. With the passing of that slaveholding power as a result of civil war the decision of the court in the Dred Scott case also passed forever.

In Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S., 44), relating to the Territory of Utah, Mr. Justice Matthews, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

It rests with Congress to say whether in a given case any of the people resident in the Territory shall participate in the election of its officers or the making of its laws; and it may, therefore, take from them any right of suffrage it may previously have conferred or at any time modify or abridge it as it may deem expedient. * * *

Their political rights are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States.

And in the case of Mormon Church vs. United States (136 U. S. Reports, 42) Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

The power of Congress over the Territories of the United States is general and plenary, arising from and incidental to the right to acquire the Territory itself, and from the power given by the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. It would be absurd to hold that the United States has power to acquire territory and no power to govern it when acquired. * * * The power to make acquisitions of territory by conquest, by treaty, and by cession is an incident of national sovereignty.

The Territory of Louisiana, when acquired from France, and the Territories west of the Rocky Mountains, when acquired from Mexico, became the absolute property and domain of the United States, subject to such conditions as the Government in its diplomatic negotiations has seen fit to accept relating to the rights of people then inhabiting these Territories. * * * Doubtless Congress in legislating for the Territories would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powes, than by any express and direct application of its provisions.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call particular attention to three recent cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, because they have been so often referred to in the recent discussion of the question.

In the case of American Publishing Company vs. Fisher (166 U. S., 464) the question was whether litigants at common law in Utah while it remained a Territory had a right to trial by jury requiring unanimity for a verdict.

The Supreme Court, by Mr. Justice Brewer, said:

Whether the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "in suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved," operates ex proprio vigore to invalidate this statute, may be a matter of dispute. * * *

But if the seventh amendment does not operate in and of itself to invalidate this Territorial statute, then Congress has full control over the Territories irrespective of any express constitutional limitations, and it has legislated in respect to this matter. In the first place, in the act to establish a Territorial form of government for Utah, act of September 9, 1850 (C. 51, section 17, 9 Statutes, 453, 458) it enacted "that the Constitution and laws of the United States are hereby extended over and declared to be in force in said Territory of Utah, so far as the same, or any provision thereof, may be applicable." A subsequent statute has more specific reference to jury trials. * * *

Therefore, either the seventh amendment to the Constitution, or these acts of Congress, or all together, secured to every litigant in a common-law action in the courts of the Territory of Utah the right to a trial by jury, and nullified any act of its legislature which attempted to take from him anything which is of the substance of that right.

It will be noted that in the above case the Supreme Court expressly declines to say that the Constitution and the seventh amendment thereof were in operation in the Territory of Utah irrespective of the legislation of Congress. The Supreme Court in that case leaves the matter open as one which is not determined. The language of the court is that whether the seventh amendment to the Constitution is, by virtue of the Constitution, extended over the Territories "may be a matter of dispute." I call especial attention to this language and this statement of the court because of the opinions in two cases which followed it, and which two cases are now claimed as authority for the proposition that the Constitution, by its own virtue, extends itself over new territory acquired by our Government.

The Fisher case, just cited, was decided by the Supreme Court April 12, 1897. A few days thereafter, on April 26, 1897, the Supreme Court decided the case of Springville vs. Thomas (166 U. S., 707). The opinion in the latter case is about one page long. The question involved was precisely the same as in American Publishing Company vs. Fisher, and naturally the judgment of the court was the same. But in delivering the opinion of the court Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said:

In these three cases judgments were entered on verdicts returned by less than the whole number of jurors by which they were tried. It has been decided by this court that the Territorial act of March 10, 1892, permitting this to be done * * * was invalid, because in contravention of the seventh amendment to the Constitution and the act of Congress of April 7, 1874. * * * (American Publishing Company vs. Fisher, ante, 464.) * * *

The supreme court of the Territory held * * * that the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, * * * the organic act of the Territory, vested in the Territorial legislature such unlimited legislative power as enabled it to provide that unanimity of action on the part of jurors in civil cases was not necessary to a valid verdict. * * *

In our opinion the seventh amendment secured unanimity in finding a verdict as an essential feature of trial by jury in common-law cases, and the act of Congress could not import the power to change the constitutional rule, and could not be treated as attempting to do so.

It will be noted that in American Publishing Company vs. Fisher the Supreme Court called attention to the fact that in the act passed by Congress to establish a Territorial form of government for Utah it was expressly enacted that the Constitution of the United States was thereby extended over the said Territory so far as applicable; and the court held in that case that by virtue of this provision in the act of Congress the seventh amendment of the Constitution became in force in Utah if it had not been so previously.

It seems very unlikely that the Supreme Court, which on April 12, 1897, had stated that it was still a matter of dispute whether the Constitution extended itself over newly acquired territory and declined in that case to settle the dispute, should on April 26, 1897, in an appeal involving precisely the same question, have intended, in a one-page decision and by four or five lines of an opinion, to decide this great constitutional question.

It is admitted that the seventh amendment of the Constitution was in force in the Territory of Utah and governed the decision in the case, because the act of Congress organizing the Territory of Utah so provided. But the statement in the opinion that an "act of Congress could not import the power to change the constitutional rule" was entirely unnecessary for a decision of the case, and can hardly be held sufficient authority for the determination of a great constitutional question which, two weeks before, had expressly been left undecided by the Supreme Court.

The case of Thompson vs. Utah (170 U. S., 343, 346) was another case involving trials by jury in the Territory of Utah. The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, one of the most distinguished jurists of our country. An opinion by such a judge, carefully considered, would be entitled to great weight. But in this case the decision is simply based upon the authority of the two cases which I have just referred to.

In the opinion Mr. Justice Harlan said:

That the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to the right of trial by jury in suits at common law apply to the Territories of the United States is no longer an open question. (Webster vs. Reid, 11 How., 437, 460; American Publishing Company vs. Fisher, 166 U. S., 464, 468; Springville vs. Thomas, 166 U. S., 707.)

And then, after specially referring to the last above-cited case, it is added:

It is equally beyond question that the provisions of the National Constitution relating to trials by jury for crimes and to criminal prosecutions apply to the Territories of the United States.

This case is decided upon the authority of the Thomas case above, and that case was decided upon the authority of the American Publishing Company case, and that case expressly left the question open and undecided.

Here is no pretense of giving consideration or particular thought to the grave constitutional question which, by the language of the opinion, is apparently disposed of offhand. The judgment of the Supreme Court was undoubtedly correct, but it was correct because the act of Congress had extended the Constitution over the Territory of Utah. The court was not required to determine whether the provisions of the Constitution apply to the Territories without regard to Congressional action. No conclusion was reasoned out, and apparently no consideration given to the opinion, except to find that it was governed by the cases which I have referred to. Those cases did not decide that the Constitution of itself extends itself to the Territories, and in the first case, American Publishing Co. vs. Fisher, that question is expressly left open and undecided.

While it is unfortunate that the Supreme Court of the United States should have been led into carelessly expressing an inconsiderate opinion—that the Constitution is, by its own virtue, extended over all Territories acquired by the United States—still it is not a matter of grave importance. The Supreme Court, composed, as it now is and as it probably ever will be, of judges of high character, great learning, patriotic impulses, and without the stubborn pride of opinion, will readily give to this question, when it shall properly arise before them, a new, complete, and unbiased consideration, and the result of that consideration can hardly be a matter of much doubt.

The Supreme Court has consistently held from the beginning that the provisions of the Constitution in relation to the character of the courts and the life tenure of judges did not apply to the courts created by acts of Congress in the Territories. Such a conclusion could only have been reached by the holding that the Constitution did not apply of its own virtue to the Territories.

The history of the country which I have cited, the history of the various annexations of new territory, the history of the government of the Territories by Congress, all show that the Constitution of the United States, in its general limitations and provisions, does not apply to or in the Territories. In one sense the Constitution extends over the Territories because of the constitutional provision that Congress shall have authority to make rules and regulations for the government thereof. But the other provisions, limiting the authority of Congress, has no application to the Territories, which are the common property of all of the States.

Mr. Chairman, it has been recently claimed on the floor of this House and elsewhere that if we annex the Philippine Islands we shall have no right or power under the Constitution to prevent the children of the present inhabitants of the Philippines from coming to our country and its capital when and how and as often as they please. And this contention has been based upon some decisions of the court and upon section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property; without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

I am aware of the learned decisions which have been made by our Supreme Court, based upon this amendment; but, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to an exception not provided for by the amendment, but which is recognized by every one familiar with the actual facts. The provision is that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States."

Mr. Chairman, the jurisdiction of the United States extends to every person within its limits except the representatives here of foreign governments. I am aware that in a certain sense we treat various Indian tribes as foreign powers; but after all we undertake by legislation to control their actions, and our jurisdiction is extended over them; and yet no one pretends that under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution or any other provision of the Constitution that the members of an Indian tribe, living in the tribal relation, can at his own sweet will have the power to leave the reservation upon which our Government places him and hie himself off to the capital of the country. We deal with but we also legislate for the Indian tribes. Sometimes we deal with them by treaty, sometimes without; but there is not a single foot of land in our country, occupied by or belonging to Indian tribes, over which our country does not claim the right of government and the right of jurisdiction as against a foreign power.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution has never been held to apply to the Indian tribes. We had dealt with the Indians for years before the fourteenth amendment was adopted. The custom of our country in dealing with the Indian tribes was well understood. The debates in Congress and in the various State legislatures show that it was not the intention by the fourteenth amendment to change the relations between the General Government and the Indian tribes, and hence it is held that that amendment does not apply to such tribes. It can and will be as easy for the courts to hold that the fourteenth amendment was not intended to apply and does not apply to any tribes or settlements or other inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

My position, Mr. Chairman, is that when the ratifications of the treaty shall have been exchanged and our country shall have acquired from Spain her title of sovereignty over the Philippine Islands we shall hold them as a common possession, province, colony, Territory, or whatever it may be called, belonging to the States which, in their confederate capacity, constitute the national Union. We may deal with and govern these new possessions as we please, unrestricted except by our intelligent ideas of humanity, civilization, liberty, and good government. We shall have the authority, if we wish, to sell the Philippines, because they have not become by the treaty a constituent part of our country.

We may exchange them if that is desirable. We may govern them with a government absolutely despotic in its character, or we may give to them such form of local self-government as will appeal to our best judgment, as will be in line with the history of our country, as will tend to educate the inhabitants of those islands for more complete government by themselves. The mere fact that we may have absolute and autocratic power is no reason against our taking the islands. Within its constitutional limits the power of Congress is already autocratic and despotic. Within their constitutional limits the powers of the different officers of our country are autocratic and despotic. We rely somewhat upon the good judgment of the men who are elected to office, and we also rely upon the right of the people, in their discretion, to correct an exercise of ill judgment by electing other and different officials.

EXPANSION HAS PROVEN BENEFICIAL.

Mr. Chairman, shall we shrink from the problems which are thus thrust upon us? Shall we attempt to shift the burden from our shoulders for fear we may not be strong enough to bear it? Shall a nation which in a century and a quarter of time has increased its area from 400,000 to 4,000,000 square miles be now afraid of one more addition?

Why, sir, when, through the daring courage and the wonderful campaign of George Rogers Clark and his little band of less than 200 men, the British possessions in the Mississippi Valley were captured for the State of Virginia and the new Confederacy of States, the Continental Congress at once claimed that the empire thus gained, lying east of the Mississippi, should never be relinquished; and when the treaty of peace with Great Britain was signed in 1783, the territorial extent of the revolting colonies had already been nearly doubled.

The Revolutionary patriots of that day, while they may have had doubts about the future, while they were more afraid of a strong central government than we are now, while they could not even imagine the splendid triumphs which human genius would accomplish—welding together into a solid whole the scattered parts of a great empire—never faltered in their daring to believe that the empire which had been won by the gallantry and hardships of their soldiers, should remain a possession of their country.

From that day to this no generation has come and gone without adding to the extent of our national territory. And who can wonder? Does the history of the past count for nothing? Did the pilgrim fathers and mothers leave their homes and cross a trackless sea and settle on almost barren soil, in an inhospitable clime, in the midst of savage Indians, in order that their descendants should be frightened by the unsolved problems of an enlarging nation? Were there no trials and tribulations in the life and death of the early settlers who planted the fringe of States along the Atlantic coast from Maine to Georgia?

Were their problems less hard to solve than the problems which now confront us? Were the dangers which threatened them less fearful than the dangers which we may see as possible before us? Have we forgotten the losses which they suffered, the savage foes which they encountered, and the splendor of their achievements which overcame the obstacles of the wilderness in a new land, which defied the terrors of bloody border warfare, and which set up a new and independent government against the arms and power of the English throne?

No doubt when the early settlers left their homes in Europe to cross the Atlantic there were croakers and doubters who despaired of the successful ending of these new ventures. No doubt there were conservatives who pleaded terrors to be encountered and urged the certainty of failure; but lives there a man to-day so mean in spirit and so small in daring that he regrets the sailing of the Pilgrims for our shore? Unfortunately there be some who have come to us now, while the flush of prosperity and peace and comfort mantles our land, who pour out their souls and cry out their eyes fearful lest we, too, may be imbued by some of the spirit of adventure and liberty and gain which first brought the white race to build up this wonderful country and this noble Republic.

But the example of the early settlers has ever been an inspiration which gave to our people the hope, the heart, and the courage to accept the responsibilities of national growth and progressive expansion.

It was Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, who when President of the United States, with James Madison, the historian of the Constitutional Convention, for his Secretary of State, and James Monroe, also a President of the United States, made the first and the greatest expansion of territory after the adoption of our Constitution. There were doubters then. There were men then who feared and who trembled for the future of the Republic. There were pessimists in those days who did not believe that a republic could live with a domain so vast.

Jefferson put aside his conscientious scruples about a strict construction of the Constitution, and rising equal to the emergency and the opportunity which had come, looked dimly through the years and faintly saw the wonderful progress to liberty and to the life of the young nation by adding the western bank of the Mississippi to our domain.

It was Daniel Webster, the greatest Senator who ever sat in the United States Senate from Massachusetts, if not from all the States, who, in 1848, saw lurking in the annexation of California the dissolution of our nation.

But again the will and the wish of the people were better and wiser than the foresight of the great Webster. Who would now blot out from our map the States of Ohio, Illinois, and others which were gained by the prowess and genius of George Rogers Clark? Who would now part with Iowa, with Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and the other States which came to us through the Louisiana purchase made by Thomas Jefferson? Who would now yield up a foot of ground in Texas, which caused the Mexican war, or in California or in New Mexico, which were the result of that war?

We have suddenly learned that our nation has grown to the stature of full manhood. In the length of a year we have discovered that our nation is one of the great forces of government in the world; that it can not stand idly by; that in the inevitable destiny of government it must move forward. Almost without knowing it, and certainly without previous full appreciation of it, we have become one of the greatest factors in the world's commercial relations, which are so intricately interwoven and intertwined that no nation can now shirk the responsibilities of government which time or opportunity puts upon her.

Who does not know that dangerous problems and possibilities lie in the annexation of the Philippine Islands? Who did not know that dangers and problems would come with the early settlements on our shores? Who did not know that dangers and problems would come with the Louisiana purchase? Who did not know that dangers and problems would come with the annexation of Texas and the acquisition of Mexican territory? Shall we fear where our fathers dared? Shall we doubt and stop where they faced destruction and death and went ahead? Do we think that because we have reached from ocean to ocean we can circumscribe the sphere of our activity by the waters which border our present shores?

In 1803, when Jefferson made the Louisiana purchase, the exports from our country of all kinds were $55,000,000. In 1848, when we acquired California, the exports from our country were $138,000,000. Last year the exports were $1,255,000,000. Of our exports last year $981,000,000 went to Europe, $149,000,000 went to other countries in North America, and $47,000,000 went to Asia. The exports last year from our country to Asia were nearly as large and the exports to Asia and Oceanica together were considerably larger than the total exports from our country when Jefferson purchased Louisiana, and yet they were a mere bagatelle compared either with the total exports from our country or the total imports of Asia and Oceanica.

Who could foresee in 1803 that the exports from our country in less than a century of time would increase from $55,000,000 to $1,255,000,000? Who can read the future for us? In a century and a quarter our nation has spread from a mere coast line on the Atlantic until it has covered a continent, across to the Pacific Ocean. It is the ascendant nation on the Western Hemisphere. Shall it now stop its progressive growth because a few pessimists fear danger and a few partisans play politics?

When the century began it took six weeks to cross the Atlantic Ocean. Can you read into the future and tell how long it will take a hundred years from now to cross the Pacific Ocean? When the Territory of Oregon was organized in 1848 it took Governor Lane, the first governor of that Territory, more than six months to reach the mouth of the Columbia River.

But with the enlargement of our territorial extent came the enlarged genius of man, came the quickened wits of man, came the inspiration to greater deeds, to more splendid achievements in science, in mechanics, in arts.

Our country possesses to-day one-third of the railroad mileage of the world; more than one-half of the telegraph mileage. We have bounded into prosperity because we took up manfully the burdens which we assumed, and we attempted, like brave and daring men, the solution of the problems which we accepted. The civilization which has girdled the world is now reaching, with the hand of the American nation, across the waters of the Pacific to the land from which civilization started. The innate forces of human nature have decreed the opening of China and the Chinese Empire to the forces of modern genius and modern civilization.

In like manner as we have, by steady acquisition of territory, become the supreme leaders on the Western Continent, so we should become the supreme leaders on the Pacific Ocean.

When Webster negotiated the Ashburton treaty and settled our northwestern boundary line with Great Britain, we had a bare outlet on the Pacific Ocean. Since then we have acquired the coast line of California, the coast line of Alaska, and the Aleutian Islands, giving us the ascendant influence on the easterly and northerly sides of that ocean. By the recent acquisition of the greatest strategic point in the Pacific, the Hawaiian Islands, we now need but a foothold of territory and friendly inhabitants on the other side to give us the supremacy for defense or offense, for war or peace, for trade and commerce, in that greatest of bodies of water, which can not escape in the future from being the scene of a more splendid development than any yet attained in history.

Will it be said that we are taking the Philippine Islands against the wish of the inhabitants? Did the Continental Congress ask the consent of the inhabitants of Kaskaskia and Vincennes? Did Thomas Jefferson and James Madison ask the consent of the inhabitants of New Orleans? Did James Monroe or Andrew Jackson ask the consent of the inhabitants of Pensacola and other points in Florida? Did President Polk ask the consent of the inhabitants of Santa Fe or of California? They did not doubt their ability to give to the inhabitants of those territories better government than they previously possessed. Do we doubt the ability of our country to give to the Filipinos better government than Spain has ever given them?

For a hundred years they have been weakly struggling for additional privileges and greater liberty. They have never succeeded; they were never on the point of success; they were disheartened and defeated until the greatest hero of our war steamed by the forts and into the bay at Manila. If they are fit for local self-government, can we not give it to them under our central Government? If they are unfitted now for local self-government, can we not give them better government than they have had and better government than they can maintain for themselves? Do we fear that we are making a departure if we inaugurate a colonial system of government for them?

Jefferson, who drafted the Declaration of Independence, who was the founder of the Democratic party, urged an amendment to the Constitution which would keep a part of the Louisiana purchase in the condition of a colony or a province.

Gouverneur Morris, who was the draftsman of the Constitution, believed that we not only had the right, but that it was our duty to govern all of the Louisiana purchase as a colony. The opposition to the Louisiana purchase in Congress in 1803 denounced the treaty of purchase for the very reason, as they said, that it provided for the admission of the inhabitants of the annexed territory to equal rights and privileges with the citizens of our country, and they claimed that we only had the right to govern annexed territory as colonies.

We need not fear for the future. Our race surmounts the obstacles which it meets. The greater America has come, because it is for the mutual interest of those who take and of those who are taken. We shall not the less continue to solve the problems coming with increased population in our local affairs. We shall not the less continue to preserve the independence of thought and liberty within the individual States and the General Government; but with the spread of our power, with the enlargement of our domain, we shall take loftier views of the affairs of men. We shall strive to mount to higher rounds; we shall enlarge the blessings of individual liberty; we shall increase the comforts of those who come under our influence; we shall take a step forward in the progress of enlightened liberty, civilization, and humanity.

And we would not dare to step backward. If we have not the genius and the statesmanship to give good government to the people of the Philippine Islands under the direction of our central Government, then we acknowledge that a republican form of government is unequal to the emergency which confronts it and is less capable than would be the government of a monarchy. I deny it. We can give to the Philippine Islands, under some form of partial local government, more liberty, more enlightenment, more comforts, more privileges, more prosperity, more happiness than they have ever yet received—more than they ever would receive either under a government conducted wholly by themselves or some form of government supplied for them by some European power.

Let men prate no longer about their tender solicitude for the inhabitants of those islands when they say we have no right to govern them against their will. No patriot who is a citizen of our country will honestly say he believes we can not give them better government than they have had or than they can give to and maintain for themselves alone.

It is the selfish side of the opponents of expansion which causes them to weep tears for the supposed injury to be done to the Filipinos. It is not because they love or care for the Filipinos; it is because they love and care for themselves only. They are thinking, not of the interests of the inhabitants on the other side of the world; they are thinking only of their pessimistic, dyspeptic fears of the future of our own land—fears which are not new, but are the ghosts of fears born in the human heart and mind thousands of years ago, and which ever since have been stalking abroad, endeavoring to block the progress of the human race and of human government.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the future will bring forth, but I do not believe that wisdom will die with the present generation. What has been accomplished during this century will be more than duplicated in the next. Let us not make the mistake of believing that the Asiatic people are naked savages or poverty-stricken barbarians. Over there one form of civilization has reached a higher plane than we have yet attained. Scholarship and learning are not wanting there. Wealth and culture are found also there. Religion and philosophy will not be first taught by us to them. This wonderful people, which has isolated itself from the world since the dawn of what is to us ancient history, will shortly enter into competition and commerce with the rest of mankind.

The Chinese Empire, with its more than 4,000,000 square miles of territory, greater in extent than ours even with Alaska included, with its 400,000,000 of population, with its form of civilization, will soon be opened to the world, whether we will it or not. Then there will meet across the Pacific seas, in active competition, the two greatest intellectual forces of the world—the modern civilization of Europe and America and the ancient and modern civilization of China. What will result from the competition ensuing no one can foretell. It may be strife or it may be peace; it may result in a bloody warfare for final supremacy or it may excite the genius of mankind to a higher pitch than yet known, and produce a civilization, a prosperity, a comfort, a happiness, a means of communication, a splendor of the material, the intellectual, the philosophic forces of mankind not even yet faintly dreamed of.

Whatever the future may produce out of this great reopening and reawakening of ancient Asia, it is the opportunity now, as it is the duty now, of the United States to secure for herself a resting place for her navies, for her armies, for her trade and commerce, for her civilization, for her arts and industry, on the other side of the Pacific Ocean in close proximity to the coast of Asia.

Mr. Chairman, as against the wonderful possibilities of the future, as against the splendid destinies of our people and our nation, as against our final supremacy on the waters of the Pacific Ocean in the conflict of civilization, in the combat of races, in the growth of trade and commerce in peaceful amity, in the inspiration to higher art and higher thought and nobler genius, I would brush aside the objections offered by the opponents of the greater America as mere loose chaff flying unguided in the winds.

The dream of Columbus will soon be a realization. In 1492 he sailed westward from Spain to reach the East Indies. The country which he discovered and added to the map of the world has now reached to the East Indies, and within a few days, or years at most, another Columbus, sailing westward from Spain to find the East Indies, will discover that greater America has already begun to provide a route by which a ship can sail from Spain westward to the East Indies through an isthmian canal, and to a government placed upon the Philippine Islands, of liberty, of love, and of strength by the United States of America, which set up the first independent and liberty-serving government for itself on the continent which Columbus had discovered.

And when this second Columbus shall sail he may stop with his vessel for supplies at the island of Porto Rico, a possession of our country; he may pass through the Nicaragua Canal, under the control of our country; he can stop at the Hawaiian Islands, a part of our land; he can stop at the Ladrone Islands, belonging to us, and he can reach the Philippines and still be under the flag of the country which the first Columbus made known to the world.

Mr. Chairman, we shall take no steps backward. The treaty has been ratified. The American flag will never come down from Manila. It will not remain flying there because we are afraid to haul down the flag when it ought to be hauled down. It will not remain there because mere sentiment prevents us from hauling down the flag when once raised; but the flag will remain flying there because it is for the interest of all parties, because it is for the benefit of humanity, because it is a part of the plan of Divine Providence which, in some mysterious way, governs the destinies of the nations.

It will not remain there because we dare not haul it down, but because we dare to keep it flying and dare to face the problems which are before us.

May God give us the courage and the heart, the wisdom and soul, to properly administer enlightened government with intelligent progress in the more than 4,000,000 square miles, on both sides of the ocean, constituting the newer and the greater America.

Mr. DOCKERY. My colleague [Mr. VANDIVER] was, through an error of mine, deprived of ten minutes during the general debate the other day, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to address the committee for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER] be permitted to address the House for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARDY (to Mr. VANDIVER). You ought to get that pig out of the hole now.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Kentucky on my left suggests that perhaps I ought to get that pig out of its difficulty. I want to say that I had hoped to leave that pig in the limbo of forgotten lore. I think it was an act of cruelty on the part of the chairman of the committee a few days ago which cut that pig in two. But it is not against his cruelty that I protest. If I should protest at all it would only be against his lack of appreciation of a good pig tale. If he had allowed that pig story to proceed I am sure it would have taught him something. However, I can not undertake now to resurrect that pig. He is buried, one-half of him embalmed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the other half consigned to purgatory. I can not get him out. But if that pig had been allowed to root his whole way in, he would have taught the gentleman from New York that it is a better investment for the people of our country to buy pigs for $3 a head than to buy Malays and yellow belles at the same price.

I had it in my mind to demonstrate to the gentleman from New York and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that the appropriation of $20,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring title to the Philippine Islands was a bad investment.

But the gentleman from Ohio has chosen a different ground on which to justify this appropriation of $20,000,000. He puts it on the broad ground of generosity instead of business. I do not know that I can successfully meet him on the ground of generosity, but I would like to suggest to him that if any generosity or magnanimity is to be developed by this great Government, it should not be extended to the people of Spain.

If the proposition were to appropriate $20,000,000 as an act of humanity and generosity to the oppressed, suffering, struggling patriots of Cuba, or even to the half-civilized people of the Philippine Islands, I do not know that I could find it in my heart to object. But when it comes to appropriating $20,000,000 for the people of Spain to give us their title to a country that they do not own, and never did, then I think common justice and humanity dictate that I should object. Twenty million dollars for how many islands? Nobody knows. For how many people? Ten millions or more; nobody knows. We are to obtain title to a territory exactly where nobody can define. We are asked to give $20,000,000 as an act of generosity toward a conquered foe.

Where in the history of the world has such generosity been displayed toward so unworthy a conquered foe? We are asked to give $20,000,000, not to relieve the suffering of oppressed humanity in Cuba or the Philippine Islands, not to establish justice and promote the cause of liberty and freedom to mankind; $20,000,000, not to relieve distress anywhere, but $20,000,000 to acquire title to a country 7,000 miles away from us, and which, according to the latest information we can get, will be of no value to us when we get it.

It is true we are told in a supplementary statement that it is for the enlargement of trade and the expansion of commerce. But in reply to that I wish to remind the gentleman that England, with all of her colonies, found that during the last seven years her commerce has decreased 18 per cent, while the commerce of the United States, without these foreign colonies, has increased over 5 per cent.

Not only so, but I wish to warn the gentleman that coloinal possessions, that foreign aggression, that extension of territory, have been the ruin of all free governments in the history of the world. Perhaps the wisest advice that Augustus left to his successors in the management of the Roman Empire was that they should confine it to its then existing limits. That advice, adhered to for a time, was at last ignored, and his successors, in attempting to extend the empire of Rome beyond the seas, soon found their own country neglected, soon found their own country overrun with foreigners, soon found that the blood of Roman citizens was corrupted. So I have reason to fear that some of the same consequences may come to us or to our children in the future.

We are assured in this connection, too, that this extension of territory not only means foreign complications, not only means entangling alliances with foreign countries, but that it means a standing army of a hundred thousand men for the government of our own people and those of the islands that we are to acquire. A hundred thousand soldiers, to be kept at our expense, even in time of peace, to maintain order in these new possessions. And when several gentlemen on the other side were questioned as to where these 100,000 men were to be used, they told us that they are needed even here at home; that we are in constant danger of riots; that we are in danger of strikes, and depredations by those associated with strikes, and it gradually cropped out that this hundred thousand men are to be organized and kept equipped as a trained and disciplined army, ready at any time to be turned against our own people.

Gentlemen ask, Is there any danger in a standing army of 100,000 men? Do I fear the Army? No; I say frankly that for the present I have no fears; but I maintain that we should guard against establishing precedents and equipping organizations that may be a danger to us in the future. I think I have read the history of the world with some profit, and if I have I am sure of this one thing, that the progress of the world has been a progress toward peaceable methods and industrial civilization instead of in the direction of force. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman it is 20 minutes to 5 o'clock, and I was about to move that the committee rise.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Perhaps the most serious aspect of our complications growing out of the war with Spain was raised by the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. What will be the legal status of our new possessions? What are the constitutional powers of Congress in reference to them? May it enact one law as to the finances of Porto Rico, another that shall govern in Cuba, and still a third applicable only to the Philippine Islands? May it say that the commerce of one of these islands shall be subject to particular regulations and taxation and that as to the other different regulations shall prevail? Can it pass legal-tender laws relating only to these islands differing from the general legal-tender laws of this country? Can it enact different legal-tender laws for each of these islands?

Sir, if it be true that Congress has extra constitutional powers in reference to these new possessions, then Congress may do whatsoever it pleases as to the affairs of these islands. If the Constitution and its limitations are not applicable to our new possessions, the Supreme Court is powerless in reference to laws enacted for their government, and there resides nowhere authority to call in question Congressional enactments applicable to them. Mr. Chairman, it may be gratifying to gentlemen who abhor limitations upon governmental power to believe that possessions recently acquired can not claim the shield of the judiciary, but must submit to whatever laws Congress or even a military governor may prescribe; but this doctrine is a two-edged sword.

If Congress has power to fasten upon certain of these possessions legislation distinctly unjust and tyrannical, it follows as a logical sequence that we may enact legislation more favorable to them than could be enacted in the interest of any one of the original thirteen colonies. Mr. Chairman, I insist that, viewing the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] from whatever standpoint we may, it is refuted by a self-evident legal proposition; that is, that Congress can only pass laws general in their nature, applicable to every human being living under the flag and every community within the domain of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have only occupied the floor two minutes.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have occupied but two minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that the gentleman take his time to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in error. The gentleman's time has not expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am not going to be taken from the floor without a protest.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the gentleman be recognized, and that he be permitted to proceed to-morrow.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Not only is it true, under the theory advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], these islands might be made the subject of favoritism in legislation just as logically as the victims of odious and unjust laws. If Congress is at liberty to proceed regardless of the Constitution, it may establish one kind of government in one of the islands and a different kind in another. It may give one of the islands a parliamentary form of government and withhold it from the others. Who shall revise this or any other unreasonable and unjust discrimination? Under this strange doctrine Congress possesses power to establish perpetually over millions of people a military government, suspending the civil law and giving into the custody of the soldiery forever the destinies of 13,000,000 people.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois must know the constitutional question to which he referred in his remarks has been decided by the Supreme Court, and that the court has distinctly overruled the contention so stoutly insisted upon by him to-day. As to views advanced on this floor at the time of the purchase of Louisiana, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should not forget that Congress, instead of sanctioning the doctrine enunciated in the speeches quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, took precisely the contrary course, and carved out of the Louisiana purchase sovereign States which are now populated by millions of freemen. Up to this hour Congress has enacted no laws not applicable generally to all citizens living under the panoply of the Constitution.

Thus much I have said, Mr. Chairman, at this time because I think that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois should not go into the RECORD unchallenged. Sir, Congress has no power to depart a hair from the limitations of the Constitution in dealing with our new acquisitions. The general laws applicable to all the people, wherever they may live, are applicable to the citizens of the United States throughout every inch of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE) having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the sundry civil bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GILFREY, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 244. Joint resolution making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice;

S. 5260. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes;

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1776) to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHOUP, Mr. HANNA, and Mr. LINDSAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5342) granting a pension to John M. Palmer, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2683. An act for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Point Arguello, California;

H. R. 6810. An act granting a pension to Mary Luella Steele;

H. R. 10013. An act to increase the pension of Joseph H. McGee;

H. R. 10158. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Taylor;

H. R. 10997. An act to amend section 3287 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the drawing off, gauging, marking, and removal of spirits;

H. R. 11098. An act to extend and amend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes," etc.; and

H. R. 11358. An act for a roadway in the District of Columbia from Brightwood avenue across Rock Creek Park.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 11414. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

CHINESE OUTRAGES ON AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the response of the Secretary of State to the resolution of the House of Representatives of February 4, 1899, calling for information in his possession concerning certain alleged outrages committed upon the person of Bishop Earl Cranston and other American citizens in the city of Peking, China.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1899.

The message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative appropriation bill and nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and ask that the amendments be printed and numbered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. DOCKERY as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, the following executive and other communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, transmitting copies of certain memorials and bill, and of a report of the capitol building at Santa Fe—to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Edward W. James against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the naval establishment—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of the expenditures under the contingent appropriation for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11867) to authorize the Georgia Pine Railway, of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream in Decatur County, Ga., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2103); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HEPBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4792) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2104); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 12095) for the relief of the Pottawatomie and other Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12096) to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A joint resolution (H. Res. 365) for restoration of a road in Gettysburg National Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE: A resolution (House Res. No. 401) authorizing the completion of a parliamentary history of the coinage act of 1873—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CODDING: A bill (H. R. 12097) for relief of Richard H. L. Craw—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 12098) granting a pension to Teressa C. Scudder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 12099) removing the charge of desertion against Patrick Lally—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12100) for the relief of Sarah A. Marcus—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12101) granting a pension to Emily Hawkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A joint resolution (H. Res. 364) to authorize the President to appoint Jonathan Brooks an assistant paymaster in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Remonstrance of voters and others, of Jamestown, N. Y., against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts as a Representative from Utah—to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

Also, petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Good Templars Lodge, of West Scarboro, Me., in opposition to the sale of liquor in canteens, prize fighting, and polygamy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, to prohibit the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures or descriptions of prize fights—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELDEN: Petition of 260 members of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Cazenovia, N. Y., against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts as a Representative from Utah—to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Free Baptist Church, and the Grange, of Strafford Corner, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Manchester, N. H., for the passage of the Hepburn bill prohibiting the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures and descriptions of prize fights—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1899.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11732) to authorize the Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct a dam and bridge across the Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. 11736) granting the right and authority to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company to build bridges over certain rivers in the State of Alabama; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 307) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay certain laborers, workmen, and mechanics at United States navy-yards and naval stations 50 per cent additional for work performed in excess of eight hours per diem.

The message further transmitted to the Senate the resolutions of the House as a tribute to the memory of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented the petition of Samuel Miles, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law in the Territory of Alaska and to extend it to our new half-civilized dependencies, and remonstrating against the seating of polygamists in the Congress of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal churches of Henderson and Bishop streets, Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures and descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Henrietta S. Tuttle and sundry other citizens of New York, praying that the right of suffrage be granted to women in Hawaii; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented the petition of Rev. George Merritt, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor in canteens of the Army and Navy and of Soldiers' Homes, and in immigrant stations and Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY presented the memorials of James Alexander and 16 other citizens, of the Scott Paper Company and 8 citizens, of P. W. Boyd and 40 other citizens, A. K. Stevenson and 14 other citizens, G. Jennings and 14 other citizens, E. L. Vickars and 13 other citizens, H. D. Green and 15 other citizens, J. Wittig and 15 other citizens, Charles F. Cooper and 18 other citizens, William A. Fry and 18 other citizens, Charles McKrauer and 18 other citizens, John H. Williams and 18 other citizens, C. H. Deninger and 18 other citizens, Silvius Sidney and 18 other citizens, G. A. Nicholas and 18 other citizens, Otto Rubling and 18 other citizens, L. E. Warren and 18 other citizens, C. H. Clark and 18 other citizens, W. D. McAuliff and 17 other citizens, L. Kayser and 17 other citizens, H. A. Brown and 17 other citizens, J. R. Macking and 17 other citizens, J. Plant and 17 other citizens, J. U. White and 17 other citizens, H. L. Engelbert and 17 other citizens, J. Stern and 17 other citizens, M. C. Robinson and 19 other citizens, Harry Gallahue and 19 other citizens, J. O. Brown and 19 other citizens, Joseph G. Barbin and 19 other citizens, C. H. Kelly and 19 other citizens, Beal Simons & Co. and 19 citizens, E. Floyd and 19 other citizens, L. N. Kathan and 19 other citizens, F. L. Lansing and 19 other citizens, D. J. Davies and 19 other citizens, J. Francis Tucker and 19 other citizens, B. H. Drew and 19 other citizens, John B. Barger and 19 other citizens, C. H. Eigenbrodt and 38 other citizens, and of M. P. Canick and 19 other citizens, all in the State of Pennsylvania, and the memorials of T. Albin Smith and 18 other citizens, and of J. Webster Hunter and 18 other citizens, all in the United States, remonstrating against the passage of the anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of West Alexandria; the East End Baptist Church, of Williamsport; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Radnor; the Mulberry Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Williamsport; the Baptist Church of Star Junction; the West Washington Methodist Episcopal Church, of Washington; the United Presbyterian Church, of Jacksonville; the First United Brethren in Christ Church of Johnstown; the Trinity United Evangelical Church, of Johnstown; the United Presbyterian Church of Crete; the Methodist Church of York Springs; the Christ Lutheran Church, of Gettysburg; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Gettysburg; the Methodist Episcopal Church of New Oxford; the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Lutheran, and the Baptist churches of Muncy, and the First Presbyterian Church of Johnstown; the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Claysville, Putneyville, New Salem, Collingdale, Concord, Darby, Williamsport, Bryn Mawr, Chester, Trainer, Landisville, Blairsville, Mechanicsburg, Ephrata, Fernwood, Gettysburg, Brownsville, East Mill Creek, Valencia, and Eddystone; of Lieut. John H. Fisher Post, No. 101, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, of Hatboro; of the Senior Loyal Temperance Legion of Putneyville; the Christian Endeavor Society of the Church of God, of Mechanicsburg; of the Epworth League of Mechanicsburg; of the Young Men's Christian Association of Mechanicsburg, and of W. W. Tyson, of the Pennsylvania Soldiers' Home, of Erie, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor in canteens of the Army and Navy and of Soldiers' Homes, and in immigrant stations and Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of the legislature of South Dakota, praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the legislature of South Dakota, praying for the establishment of a branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and Sailors at Hot Springs, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 5499) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a new custom-house in the city of New York, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 11732) to authorize the Grand Rapids Water Power and Boom Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct a dam and bridge across the Mississippi River; and

A bill (H. R. 11736) granting the right and authority to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company to build bridges over certain rivers in the State of Alabama.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill (H. R. 11955) to amend sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to enter the motion or to make the motion now?

Mr. HOAR. I make the motion now. I do not wish to call it up now, however. I think the object of the bill is already provided for in existing statutes to which my attention has been called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, inasmuch as there is an agreement to vote on the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] at half past 2, I desire to call attention to some matters connected with that resolution.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement before he begins?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I notice in the RECORD this morning that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I think the Senator from Nevada also, stated yesterday that under the agreement no amendments could be offered to the joint resolution. In reading the agreement I do not understand that there could be anything in the agreement that would prevent amendments being offered before the hour of 2.30. There is nothing in the agreement, so far as I read it, that would prevent an amendment being offered. I see that statement in the RECORD this morning, however.

Mr. STEWART. I do not propose to give way to a discussion of that kind, because there will be a division of opinion on that point, I think. So far as the agreement is concerned, it is to vote on the resolution and nothing more. But any matters of that kind can be considered after I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. BERRY. It was because I saw that statement in the RECORD that I wished to call attention to it. I did not want it to go as a matter of course.

Mr. STEWART. I shall be brief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nedada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in the first place I think this is an inopportune time to take into consideration what shall be the policy of the United States with regard to the Philippine Islands. Very recently, and perhaps since some alleged understandings were made, war has broken out in the Philippine Islands. When my country is in war, I do not stop to consider how war was brought about. As is well known, I was opposed to this war altogether. I was in favor of acknowledging the belligerent rights of the Cubans and leaving them to fight the matter out, as we had done in all other cases. But the Administration and Congress decided otherwise, and my country became involved in war, since which time I have been in favor of prosecuting that war. I believe that is the duty of good citizens.

When the country is involved in war, it is their duty to stand by their country, and I do not believe that it is in the interest of my country to embarrass the Administration or to interfere with the prosecution of the war by the promulgation of theories of government at this time, and particularly the theory of government and the mode of dealing with the Philippine Islands set forth in this resolution, for, whatever the Government does, it certainly will not follow the line of policy marked out by the resolution. The joint resolution proposes that Congress shall declare—

> That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

When and where did the idea originate that it was the duty of the United States to go into the Philippine Islands to establish a government for those people and to prepare them for self-government? It seems to me that is a mission in which nobody has suggested the United States would engage. If it is our duty to give the people of the Philippine Islands good government, to educate them, and to establish a government suitable for them, is it not our duty to do so to every country in the world where they do not have a government suitable to our ideas? I submit that we are under no obligation to go to vast expense in order to establish a government for those islands.

The commercial idea connected with a sale or other disposition of the islands is repugnant to every sense of justice. The resolution reads:

> And in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

That is the meaning of the term "dispose of them," and it may be so construed. Do we intend to capture islands, civilize the people, establish governments for them, and then sell them? Do we propose to go into that business?

The language of this resolution is not in conformity with rational ideas. The language is obscure and absurd. In the first place, as I remarked, we are not in the business of capturing countries to give them such governments as we think they ought to have. In the next place, we are not in the business of capturing countries and establishing governments and selling them or disposing of them. That is not the mission of the United States.

There are questions connected with this matter that the people of the United States are seriously considering. We have been to a great expense in war. By the third article of the treaty "Spain cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands," particularly describing them, and "the United States will pay to Spain the sum of $20,000,000." The treaty vests in the United States all rights Spain ever had. We are entitled to all we have bought and now rightfully possess. There would probably be no difficulty, if it were our policy, in acquiring Cuba. The Philippine Islands and Porto Rico are already ours. There are many people who think they are valuable acquisitions.

Let me suggest some of the arguments which have been frequently heard in favor of retaining them. We are compelled to buy the tropical productions which those islands produce and would produce in abundance for our use. The value of tropical productions is a great element in the balance of trade against us at all times.

Principal articles of tropical production imported into the United States, 1898.

Article.	Value.
Coffee	$84,793,124
Sugar	89,219,773
Fruits and nuts	16,957,307
Tobacco	18,763,942
Hemp, jute, etc.	11,646,247
Miscellaneous articles (estimated)	30,000,000
Total	251,330,393

We are not a self-sustaining country in every particular. We have to buy tropical productions that we do not produce. That is a large expenditure, and it will grow. In a short time the value of tropical productions that we shall have to buy will be up to $500,000,000. Those who believe we should retain the islands think we ought to be independent and ought not to have to pay out that sum, and if we could get them on any fair terms we ought to take them and civilize them and educate them and have the benefit of saving that money.

There is a great contest in the world between financial slavery and liberty. The advocates of the doctrine that there is something about the material gold which makes it money and that you can not stamp the mandate called legal tender upon anything else has caused a financial war among all nations. The obtaining of that material involves a contest for national prosperity. There is not gold enough to do the business of the world.

In the language of Prince Bismarck, the blanket is not wide enough for all of us, and when we have good crops and other countries have bad crops, we pull the blanket off them, and they suffer. When we have bad crops, they pull it off us. The gold blanket is not big enough to cover all. If we are having good times and they have bad times, it is because we have had good crops and they have had bad crops; we pull the blanket off them. But if we have to pay out this $250,000,000, which will soon be $500,000,000, it will make a great difference in pulling the blanket off us and leaving us destitute of money. If we can save what we pay for the products of these islands and can have a country that can produce what we consume, no country can inflict so great injury upon us. If the two metals were used there would still be a struggle for them, and the country that can produce all kinds of products and supply itself will have a great advantage. That is one of the considerations which is urged by the advocates of retaining the islands.

Then it is suggested by the same parties who favor annexation that it would add vastly to our commerce—that it would be the nucleus of building up a coasting trade—because if we own the islands, Congress has the power to pass a law making communication with them a part of our coasting trade, and that would build up a very large merchant marine in the immediate future. But they must be ours in order that Congress may have that power. This resolution declares that we do not intend to assert that power; that we do not intend to annex the islands, but contemplate selling them. Such a declaration would raise a very serious question whether, if we carried out this policy, we could pass laws taking them into our coasting trade, and thereby securing a monopoly of the shipping between those islands and our ports.

Again, there is in the Orient an import trade which in round numbers amounts to a billion dollars a year. We have only 5 per cent of the trade of Asia and Oceanica. If we had these islands, and were engaged in the trade there, we would have a nucleus for trade and have a chance to compete with England. She has Hongkong, which enables her to deal directly with the surrounding country. Here is an opportunity to participate in the import trade of Asia and Oceanica, amounting to a little over a billion dollars in value of products, of which we get only 5 per cent.

Mr. PERKINS. We bought 27 per cent of their products last year.

Mr. STEWART. Of whose?

Mr. PERKINS. From Manila.

Mr. STEWART. I am speaking of imports into those countries. The exports from the United States to Asia and Oceanica amount to only 5 per cent of the imports that go into that country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Into China?

Mr. STEWART. Into China, Japan, and Oceanica. I have the table here. I went to the statistician, and I am accurate about it.

Mr. HALE. Manila has a large trade.

Mr. STEWART. I will insert this table in my remarks.

The table referred to is as follows:

*From Statesman's Year-Book, 1898. †Latest estimates. ‡From United States reports.

Mr. STEWART. We are certainly interested in having a home station in the Orient so that we can participate in this trade. These are arguments used in favor of the annexation of the islands.

Then there is another thing. We have a large number of teachers in this country who are out of employment. It has been stated that we have educated too many teachers, and they are out of employment in this country. By the census of 1890 we had 422,929 teachers in the United States. If we should employ the same number of teachers in proportion to population in the Philippine Islands we would employ one-sixth of the number there, which is 70,488. At the same ratio that would be about the number required to educate those people.

Then there would be employment for a great many enterprising young men to do business, because we would do the business of the country although we would not do the labor. As to the labor question, it is argued with considerable force that it would be a great advantage to our laborers because nature has ordained that the Filipinos can not come here. A man is insane to talk about an emigration from the Tropics to the north to labor. The thing never has occurred and never can occur in the very nature of things. Laborers have gone from the temperate zones to the tropical zone, but they lasted but a short time. Business men will go there. The climate is healthful and they can live there. Persons engaged in trade can go there, but the laborers in the field cultivating the soil must be of tropical birth and raised in the Tropics in order to be healthful. In turning up the soil of the Tropics it is said to contain a poison that northern people can not stand. They can live there, however, and follow other pursuits.

Now, here is a great opening for the young men of our country and for the teachers of both sexes that is looked upon by a great many people as being very important, and the people of the United States ought to have time to consider it.

These are some of the considerations which are urged in favor of annexing the islands. But I have heard it suggested by Senators that they do not want to interfere with our political institutions. What could be more absurd than that? The United States can be trusted never to admit as States any people that do not understand the English language and who can not think in the language of liberty and equality. English is the language of free institutions and of liberty governed by law. They have tried it and they have always failed. There can not be an idea of true liberty conveyed except by the use of the English language. The great battle of the commons against the aristocrats of England, which lasted for two hundred years, bred a race of liberty-loving people. That was the greatest contest which ever occurred in human history, and out of that contest arose a race that love liberty and are willing to fight for it anywhere and everywhere. It is not an ephemeral plant that grows up in a day.

Aguinaldo, a usurper and a dictator, without consulting anybody, calls himself a republican. They all call themselves republicans, because they think they will get the sympathy of liberty-loving people. Republics grow out of conditions. Nobody would ever think, under any circumstances, of admitting the Philippine Islands, or Cuba, or Porto Rico, or any other country to a full participation in our institutions until they had learned something of our institutions, and had learned the language in which liberty can be considered and discussed and in which free institutions exist. That, of course, will take time. We have kept New Mexico out of statehood for fifty years because the people did not understand the language of liberty, because they spoke a foreign language, and nothing else. New Mexico has had a population as great as that of other Territories that were admitted, and, indeed, always had more population; and they are an industrious people, too. But they did not speak our language and they did not understand our institutions, and we thought it was not safe to admit them. That has been the case with New Mexico for fifty years.

So there is no danger on that score. If the people can not be trusted when the time comes to say whether or not the Filipinos shall be incorporated in our institutions, then this Government will fail.

I have faith that this Government will be as wise a hundred years from to-day as it is now. We must trust it. Whatever we may attempt to do, we must trust the institutions to the generations that will come after us, in our doing nothing that will prevent them from exercising a sound judgment in protecting our institutions. We are not going to admit the Philippine Islands to statehood. Nobody thinks of admitting them until they are fitted for it. There is no political danger, because we are not going to enter into any relation that will involve it.

The question is, Shall we have time to see what we will do with these acquisitions? Shall we do it deliberately, after the facts are developed, or shall we promulgate a theory that will embarrass us, embarrass the Administration, and embarrass the Government? Shall we promulgate such a theory under an agreement to take a vote on a resolution that has not been discussed or a resolution that no Senator in this Chamber after consideration will indorse? I doubt whether the author of it likes the measure now. Nobody approves of it; and to precipitate a vote upon the resolution at this time seems to me unfair to the Government and to the people of the United States.

The United States owns these islands, and the people want time to consider whether they will give them up or not. They want time to consider what policy they shall pursue, and before they determine that policy they want all that the facts will develop in the next six months at least; and they are entitled to know what the facts will develop. It may be—and I will not say that it will not—that public sentiment will be for abandoning them. If it is, Congress will be ready to follow that public sentiment. It may be that public sentiment will be for keeping what we have got and utilizing them for the benefit of ourselves and the people of those islands. After the question has been discussed, we do not know how public sentiment may turn, but the people of the United States, who are the ultimate judges of this question, must determine it.

No election has occurred, no expression of opinion has been had from the public, and here it is proposed to enter upon the policy of capturing the islands, establishing a government for them, and then selling them or doing what we please with them. This is a new kind of business for the people. The people would not decide in favor of this joint resolution if it were submitted to them. It would not get 5 per cent of the 13,000,000 votes in the United States if the joint resolution should be submitted to them. Why should we pass it now? I see every reason against it, but none for it. No political advantage will be gained by it. No political advantage is ever gained by doing an illogical and ill-advised thing. The second sober thought of the people must be looked to, and they must have a chance to exercise that thought.

There is no political advantage in trying to forestall the people in their deliberations upon a great question like this, in which so much is involved, and in which great deliberation should be had. We should have the voice of the people before we speak, because there are many people in this country who are patriotic, who are enterprising, who are shrewd, who understand all these things, and who can judge of the matter as well as we can. This is a patriotic and practical question. The great practical mind of the United States will settle it, and settle it right. I propose to vote against the joint resolution and to follow the voice of the people on this great question, when that voice can be heard.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested by the Senator from Colorado. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, it occurs to me that this is rather an inauspicious time to pass any resolutions pledging the Government to any particular line of policy in the Philippine Islands or in regard to the government of the people of those islands; but if a resolution of any character is to be adopted it ought, in my opinion, to be so specific and direct and certain that we might at least understand the policy to which we propose to commit the Government. The joint resolution reads:

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States—

If that means that States are not to be created and admitted into the Federal Union out of the territories acquired by the treaty in the Pacific Ocean, then it meets with my approbation, and, in my opinion, with the approbation of the people of the United States; but if it is to be construed to mean that the ordinary protection of the Constitution to the citizen as a citizen or to the individual as an individual is not necessarily extended to those people over whom we assume authority by virtue of the treaty, then I am not in favor of it—

nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States—

Why that qualification to this declaration that it is not "intended to permanently annex said islands?" That it is not intended to permanently annex said islands is all that it was necessary to say, and the qualification "as an integral part of the territory of the United States" leaves the whole question in a state of uncertainty as to whether or not the annexation is to be permanent—

but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time—to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

To do what?

Now, why prepare those people for local self-government? Why undertake to educate them up to the standard of American citizens and then preserve the right to dispose of them in any manner that may be to our interests or to the interests of that people, we being the judges of what their interests may be?

Mr. President, if the point had not been raised that any attempt to amend the joint resolution would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, I should attempt to amend the joint resolution by substituting in lieu of it the paper I send to the desk and ask to have read. That paper sets out my views upon this question. That paper, in my opinion, sets out accurately the views of the people of this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. STEWART. I will suggest——

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert——

Mr. STEWART. There is no doubt the Senator has a right to offer the resolution right now, but he can not under the agreement offer it as an amendment to the other resolution.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to say a word in reply to the Senator from Nevada? There is already, to the joint resolution, an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Georgia, which was offered before the unanimous consent was given. I insist that the agreement does not cut off all amendments. There has been no ruling by the Chair to that effect. The Senator from Kentucky said, as I understood him, that it had been so held.

Mr. LINDSAY. No.

Mr. BERRY. That it had been ruled upon.

Mr. LINDSAY. I did not say it was so held.

Mr. BERRY. I insist that any amendment to the joint resolution can be voted on without debate; and certainly the amendment already pending at the time the agreement was made can not be cut off by reason of what occurred afterwards. As I understand the rules and the agreement, there was no such purpose, no such intention. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia was already pending as an amendment at the time the unanimous consent was given.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. HOAR addressed the Chair.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask for the reading of the paper, and then the discussion can proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, if the Senator will pardon me, to say that I do not believe it was generally understood by the Senate that no amendment could be offered, as usual. That never, as I understand it, was the interpretation of such a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on a measure. When, for instance, we have an appropriation bill of a hundred pages and more, and we agree that we will vote on it at a certain time, does anybody ever understand that no amendment can be offered?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, the phraseology of the agreement was stated here and was listened to with the utmost care. Had I supposed that an amendment would be offered and could be offered to the joint resolution under the agreement, I should have objected. It is a part of the understanding and can not be evaded that the joint resolution is to be voted upon at half past 2 o'clock. It was implied at least that it should be done without debate, but I was willing of course, and others were willing, that there should be a discussion of the question. In every case where we have had a unanimous agreement that a vote should be had upon a pending bill, if amendments were necessary we have included amendments.

Mr. HALE. In the agreement?

Mr. ALLISON. In the agreement. When these agreements are made, they are made in the spirit of concession and for the purpose of facilitating a vote—not for the purpose of putting in place other things than those proposed to be voted upon.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I will not use any word which implies artifice at all, but the Senate has been absolutely misled in regard to the intent. I supposed when I sat in my seat and said nothing that amendments were to be in order, as a matter of course. I did not understand it so, for one.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly understood it so, and I was careful to notice every word and sentence uttered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOAR. So the Senator has just said. We understand that. Now I say, I did not understand it so.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, I ask, Mr. President——

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky, as he has been yielding to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to yield to me, but I will wait until he gets through, if he prefers.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will yield to any reasonable statement.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say now, while what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has said is fresh, that I do not understand the agreement in the way he does. When I sat in my seat and heard that arrangement, I expected to offer an amendment which I had pending, and I expected to speak upon that amendment or upon the resolution; and I am quite sure that a large number of Senators so understood it.

Now, we are not going to be deprived of our rights in this matter by the mere sincerity and earnestness of conviction of somebody else with whom we do not agree. I have stated what I understood.

So if this vote be taken at half past 2 o'clock or whatever the time shall be, without the possibility of suggesting an amendment, two things will have happened: First, three Senators, at least, who had earnestly expressed their oppositior to the arrangement, but consented that a speech might be made, or that one should be made on another subject, the subject then pending, happening to be absent, this unanimous-consent agreement was obtained in their absence. Next, it is a unanimous-consent agreement which a large part of the Senate did not understand. Whether or no, under those circumstances, the Senators who secured that agreement think it their duty to insist upon it is for them to determine; but I should not insist on a unanimous-consent agreement which had been obtained on my request under such circumstances.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. LINDSAY. I think I will render the Senator's statement unnecessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow me a moment.

Mr. LINDSAY. Very well; I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and it relates to unanimous-consent agreements.

Unanimous-consent agreements are not often made, but when they are made the terms of the agreement are imported into the RECORD. Often we have unanimous-consent agreements which have stated that at a certain hour a certain bill shall be voted upon, with the pending amendments. Again, unanimous-consent agreements have been made to vote upon a bill at a certain hour, with amendments pending and amendments to be offered, and other unanimous-consent agreements have been made to vote upon a bill without amendment—that is, not mentioning amendments.

The Senator from Massachusetts now says that he would not under similar circumstances do what I have said ought to be done. I did not ask for the unanimous-consent agreement, but I understood, and every Senator must have so understood, if he was attentive to the statement of it, that this was to be a vote on the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and a vote without debate was implied, although nothing was said about that; and therefore it would be a vote upon that resolution at that especial hour. Now, to undertake to so arrange this business as that we shall not vote upon that resolution at all, but vote upon another resolution, in my judgment, is not in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement which was made.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator permit me to read the order that was made?

Mr. LINDSAY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BURROWS. The request was as follows:

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken upon the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] at half past 2 o'clock on next Tuesday.

That does not permit amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. BURROWS. And it ignores all pending amendments. So, in my judgment, the vote must be taken directly on the joint resolution.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not think I ought to yield the floor any longer. I now ask that the reading of the resolution which I have offered may be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution offered as a substitute by the Senator from Kentucky to the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution, and to insert:

SECTION 1. That the acquisition by the United States of foreign territory carries with it no constitutional obligation to admit said territory, or any portion thereof, into the Federal Union as a State or States.

SEC. 2. That it is against the policy, traditions, and interests of the American people to admit States erected out of other than North American territory into our Union of American States.

SEC. 3. That the United States accepts from Spain the cession of the Philippine Islands with the expectation that the people of those islands will demonstrate their capacity to establish and maintain a stable government, capable of enforcing order at home and of discharging the international obligations resting on separate and independent states, and with no expectation of permanently holding those islands, or of compelling their people to submit to the authority of the United States after they shall demonstrate their capacity for self-government, the United States to be the judge of such capacity.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I am sorry that I led up to the controversy between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] by a suggestion made by me. I did not undertake to say that it has been ruled that amendments would be out of order or in conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement. What I did say was, that notice had been given on yesterday that an attempt to make an amendment to the resolution would be so regarded by certain Senators; and that I had no disposition to provoke controversy on that subject.

If it shall be held that amendments are in order, and not in violation of the agreement, then I shall offer the resolutions which have just been read as a substitute for the pending resolutions. In order, however, to obviate any difficulty on that subject, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions offered by me shall be voted on fifteen minutes after 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. LINDSAY. Has objection been made to my request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to speak before the request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] for unanimous consent is put to the Senate?

Mr. BACON. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the resolutions read as a part of his recent speech be voted on this afternoon at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object.

Mr. MASON. I should like to have the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] again read. I could not hear it when it was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution proposed to be offered by the Senator from Kentucky as a substitute will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed substitute.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, there are some things in that resolution that I could vote for, and there are others that I could not vote for, but no consent ought to be given for the passage of any resolution here which does not involve the fullest opportunity for discussion. I make no objection—that is to say, I do not propose to hold myself not bound to vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], but to any other resolution I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given for the vote at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. to-day?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is recognized.

Mr. LINDSAY. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia, I give notice that immediately after the vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana I shall propose that the resolution which I have offered be taken up and voted upon.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator yield to me to make one remark?

Mr. LINDSAY. I am through.

Mr. BERRY. I want to say, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], that I do not believe he can find a precedent in this body where an amendment already pending was cut off by any agreement to vote upon the general resolution. I am willing to admit that probably it may be construed so as to cut out amendments thereafter offered, but an amendment pending under our rules must be disposed of before the bill or resolution to which it is offered is voted upon.

I repeat, that it was not the intention at the time the agreement was made to cut off a vote on an amendment already pending. To give such a construction as that to the agreement is to give that which was never intended, as I believe, by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]; and it certainly was not so understood by Senators on this floor.

Mr. HOAR. It would be the same bill or resolution parliamentarily after it had been amended.

Mr. BERRY. Yes, it would be the same under our rules. Where an amendment is pending, until that amendment is voted upon it could not be construed that any unanimous-consent agreement would remove or withdraw that amendment without the consent of the Senator who offered it. I repeat, I do not think a precedent can be found for such a proceeding, and if such a ruling is made it would be contrary to the practice of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] why it is——

Mr. BACON. I trust I will be allowed to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Then I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. I ask why it is that ex industria you will find it running all through in the making of these unanimous-consent agreements that they include amendments already pending. That is done in all such agreements, and that shows that the Senate has construed the rule so as not to include amendments unless they are mentioned.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, the provision as to pending amendments is put in such agreements to prevent other amendments being offered; and so the statement generally is to vote on the bill and pending amendments; but when there is a mere statement as to a final vote on a bill or resolution, I do not believe such a practice as has been contended for was ever heard of.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe it was ever heard of that such an agreement should be construed in a different way from what the agreement itself states.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, on yesterday there was some criticism made upon the fact that through the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] I had given notice that to-day I would ask the courtesy of the Senate to submit some remarks on this question. I desire to say two things with reference to that. In the first place, that notice was given through the Senator from Arkansas from the fact that it was a physical impossibility for me to reach the Senate Chamber. If my life had depended upon it, I do not think I could have gotten here.

In the second place, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] suggested that there was an impropriety in the giving of the notice, either personally or through another, from the fact that there had been given unanimous consent to vote upon this resolution at a certain time, and that a considerable time had already been passed in discussion upon the same.

I desire to say in reply to that statement that the Senator from Iowa is mistaken in his understanding of the fact. The McEnery resolution has not been discussed at all before the Senate, and if the Senator was in the Chamber a few days since when there was an effort made to secure unanimous consent by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] for a vote on these various resolutions, he will remember that I specially excepted any intention to give consent to a vote upon the McEnery resolution without discussion, upon the ground that that resolution had not been discussed and that there had been no opportunity for discussing it.

Mr. President, I gave the notice not because I expected to make any set speech or to make an elaborate presentation of the question, but because there had been no opportunity to present reasons why I could not vote for the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me at that point?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me just a second, that I may finish my sentence, I will say that I was under particular constraint to give those reasons, because I have been pressing for the passage of resolutions which, to those who do not examine them critically, might be supposed to be similar to the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana, and I wanted to show that the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana was vicious, that it was objectionable in the extreme, and that it would not, if adopted, accomplish the purpose which those of us who had introduced other resolutions had sought to accomplish.

Now I will with pleasure hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I simply wish to say that I certainly meant no reflection upon the Senator from Georgia in any way. I was surprised when it was suggested that there would be debate on the McEnery resolution, because I supposed it was absolutely implied that the vote should be taken at a convenient hour of the afternoon, at half past 2 o'clock, after the morning business and before the ordinary business of the Senate after 2 o'clock would go on. I supposed that it would be a vote without debate, and therefore was surprised when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], in behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], suggested debate on the resolution. I certainly thought it would lead up to the hour of voting, and therefore I did say—which I afterwards withdrew—that I thought it hardly fair to open debate on this subject. But, as I say, I withdrew that observation, and I certainly do not in any way, by implication even, suggest a reflection upon the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I am sure the Senator would not so intend it.

Mr. ALLISON. As I say, I afterwards withdrew the remark.

Mr. BACON. I have not had an opportunity to read the RECORD that far.

Mr. ALLISON. And therefore I suggested afterwards that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock to-day in order to give opportunity for debate on this subject.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of that fact until I reached the Senate Chamber, for the reason that there has been no mail delivered in the city and no communication, and I did not even know until I reached the Chamber that the Senate had agreed to meet at 11 o'clock this morning. Of course I do not understand, and have not said, that the Senator from Iowa intended to reflect upon me in any way, but I did understand that the Senator thought I had in some degree departed from the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement. I understand the unanimous-consent agreement to mean that after the hour for voting is reached there shall be no further debate; but if the time is fixed two weeks from now for the voting upon a resolution or a bill, that certainly does not imply that in the meantime no Senator shall have a right to give notice and ask permission of the Senate to address himself to the particular measure then to be voted upon. So much for that.

Mr. President, I desire very briefly to give the reasons why I can not vote for this resolution of the Senator from Louisiana, and why I do not think anyone who is opposed to the permanent or indefinite occupation of the Philippine Islands by the United States can properly vote for it, nor how anyone who is in favor of ever allowing those people a free government could under any circumstances vote for the resolution unless the pending amendment offered by myself is adopted. I am of opinion that an analysis of this resolution will show conclusively that it not only does not recognize that this Government will give up the permanent control, and does not recognize that the Filipinos are to have any freedom in the future, but that it distinctly gives authority for the continued occupation of the Philippine Islands and for the continued subjection of those people. If so, Mr. President, those of us who are known as anti-annexationists can not with propriety vote for that resolution unless amended.

Without any preliminaries whatever, I desire to ask the Senate to go with me in a brief analysis of this resolution. I will read the entire resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

Mr. President, this is a most ingenious resolution. It was evidently drawn by a master hand. I will not suggest that it was intended as an annexation resolution in disguise, but it is so in practical effect. In my judgment, it is a Trojan horse and comes from the Greeks.

There are, sir, in this resolution four distinct declarations, and I propose to take up each one of these declarations and analyze it, and see whether in either of the declarations there is a recognition of an intention on the part of the Government of the United States to surrender the control of those islands, to cut loose, to annul the annexation which has been accomplished by the ratification of the treaty, or whether there is any expression of any intention at any time to accord those people freedom and independence. I think an analysis of the resolution will show that each one of these declarations, taken separately and collectively, so far from making any such recognition, distinctly gives authority for the contrary.

The first of the four declarations is this:

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States.

That is a distinct declaration. Now, what does that mean? I will not say that it was intended to produce the impression that the resolution meant that the United States would surrender control over those people, but I do say that that is the impression which it would make upon anyone upon first blush.

But I call the attention of the Senate, bearing in my mind the fact that the particular point we are considering is whether there is an intention in this resolution which looks to a surrender of the islands—I say a surrender, I mean an annulment of the act of annexation—bearing that in mind, it will be seen upon examination that that first declaration is simply a declaration of the status of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. It is a declaration as to how that status is affected by ratification. It declares that the act of annexation is not intended to, and does not, incorporate those people as citizens. It declares a status, but does not aver any intention to change that status. It says the act of ratification does not make them citizens, but it does not say that the status which is thus declared shall ever in the future be changed. It is simply a declaration of a status without any declaration of future intent to change that status.

If this declaration were that it is not intended to hold these people subject to the dominion and sovereignty of the United States, it would amount to a declaration against permanent annexation. But as it stands it is a declaration under which the Filipinos can be held indefinitely as subjects, although not as citizens.

Consequently there is nothing in that first declaration which looks to the sundering of the tie which has been created by annexation, nor is there anything in the first declaration which looks to the future freedom of those people. It looks simply to the question of what is their relationship and what it shall be in the future, and it declares simply that they are not to be incorporated into citizenship.

Mr. President, this particular view of it has considerable light shed upon what is the true meaning and intent of this declaration by the contention which we have heard so earnestly in this Senate for weeks past to the effect that the acquisition of foreign territory does not confer citizenship upon the inhabitants of that territory; and therefore this declaration is simply carrying out that view of the case, and simply endeavoring in this manner to have the Congress of the United States make a declaration that, while those people have become subject to the dominion of the United States Government, they have not become and will not become citizens. That is all there is in that declaration—not a word more.

Mr. President, I am now endeavoring to analyze this resolution for the purpose of asking those Senators who favored the ratification of the treaty by which annexation necessarily follows, and who do not favor the permanent annexation of those islands, whether or not they can support this resolution. And thus going through the analysis, dividing this resolution into its four distinct declarations, I have endeavored to present the view which I think is conclusive, that there is nothing in the first declaration which looks to that which the opponents of annexation desire; which desire is, that there shall be no permanent connection between those islands and this country; that they shall neither be States nor shall they be vassal Territories; but that in the proper manner, to be hereafter determined, if you please, we shall cut loose from this Asiatic territory and resume our former status, attending to our own affairs at home.

As to the next declaration, the second declaration of this resolution, it is:

Nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States.

That declaration comes nearer making such a declaration as those of us who are opposed to permanent annexation might desire, and, upon first blush, if it stood alone, we might say that that was the intention; but an analysis of this second declaration will show that such is not the plain, unambiguous meaning of this part of the resolution; in other words, it is not the simple language which would be employed if the intent were that those islands should not in the future continue as a part of the territory of the United States. If such were the purpose, the simple language would have been used, leaving out the word "integral." Why the use of the word "integral?"

Nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States.

If this resolution intends to commit Congress to a proposition that it is not intended to hold those islands at all, it would have said:

Nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as a part of the territory of the United States.

The word "integral" is a word of limitation and is put there for a purpose. It is all fours with the other contention as to the relationship which the inhabitants of those islands shall bear to the United States. It is contended that they will not be citizens, and in the same way it is the purpose to contend in the future that by the use of the word "integral" Congress meant that it did not intend to incorporate these islands as a part of the territory of the United States in the same sense that Arizona or New Mexico is each a part of the territory of the United States; but by the use of the word "integral," a word of limitation, it is the purpose to commit Congress simply to the proposition that in holding the islands it is intended to hold them simply as an outside piece of property, not entitled hereafter to admission as one of the organized Territories of the country.

Mr. President, I am not discussing the question as to whether that is a proper relation for those islands to bear to the United States Government in case we permanently hold them. I am simply discussing the question as to whether this language excludes the idea of the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands. I am limiting this discussion to that. I am not discussing the question as to whether these people will under the law become citizens; I am not discussing the question whether or not under the use of the word "integral" these islands would properly become a part of the territory liable and of right entitled to organization as one of the Territories; but I am simply discussing the question whether the language used is intended to imply that there shall be no annexation of any kind and that these people shall bear no relation to our people of any kind, either as citizens or as vassals, because I do not want them either as the one or as the other.

Mr. President, I am addressing myself more particularly to the judgment of Senators who announce that they are opposed to the permanent annexation of those islands, and who are opposed to the subjection of the Filipinos to the dominion of the United States Government, either in the capacity of citizens or as subject vassals. I desire that they with whom I am in thorough accord on the question of annexation shall carefully consider whether or not they can with propriety give their support to resolutions which, if my analysis be correct, can be quoted in the future as a justification for the indefinite holding of these islands, in one relation or another, and in the indefinite subjection of those people to the dominion of the United States Government.

Under the first two declarations—first, as to what is the status of the Filipinos under the annexation; second, as to the purpose of the Government not to permanently annex those islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States—I wish to ask this question: Suppose twenty years from now or fifty years from now, the Government of the United States in the meantime holding these islands, not admitting the Filipinos to the rights of citizenship, not organizing the islands into a Territory, but holding them by a governor, either military or civil, appointed in Washington, allowing them no rights in common with the people of the United States—suppose in that condition of affairs a Senator, then here, should rise in his place and say that the pledge of the Government required that that relationship should end, and that the United States under that pledge should cease to hold the Philippine Islands in any capacity.

I respectfully submit that there is not a word in the pending joint resolution which could not, so far from being urged as a reason why that relationship should end, be urged in justification of indefinitely maintaining such relationship. If so, Mr. President, those who support the joint resolution will give their consent, their approval, to make authoritative a policy which will permit those islands to be indefinitely held and those people to be continued indefinitely under our dominion.

The last declaration as to not holding these islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States gets further light from the latter part of the joint resolution. We say we do not intend to hold them as an integral part of the United States, and then, in the latter part of the resolution, say that "in due time" it is our purpose "to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands." Now, of course, "due time" may mean one year, it may mean five years; it may mean, as the distinguished author of the resolution, if I recollect correctly, stated the other day, a hundred years. If I recollect aright, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], construing his own resolution on Saturday, said that it might mean a hundred years. A hundred years is not what we want.

It matters not to us, so far as the great interests of this country are concerned, so far as it affects the material interests of our own people, whether these people are given an enlightened government or whether they are held by the hand of despotism. The great reason, so far as we personally are concerned, why we do not desire the retention of these islands in any capacity is because such retention in any capacity will lay a great burden upon our people, because it will necessitate not only continued taxation, but increased taxation, because it will necessitate not only taxation, but, as a note of warning already sounded at the other end of the Capitol indicates, no taxation will be sufficient to meet it, and increased indebtedness in the shape of bonds must be resorted to.

Whether they are held as an enlightened community under an enlightened government or as a subject community, the same burden will be upon us both in money and in the lives that we must expend for the purpose of defending those islands. It matters not, so far as this particular branch of the case is concerned. It does matter a great deal in other considerations, but it does not matter so far as the particular question of burdens to be imposed upon our people is concerned what kind of a government we give them. The great thing with us is that there should be no connection between this Government and the Philippine Islands, whether they shall be equals or whether they should be subject vassals, because in either case we must bear the burden of taxation and make the sacrifice of lives of thousands of our soldiers, and be in constant danger of foreign wars.

And, sir, the proposition that the islands will not be held as an "integral" part of the territory of the United States has further illustration in the latter part of the joint resolution, which says that in due time we shall make such a disposition of them as our best interests may dictate. In other words, it involves two propositions. In the first place, that we will hold them indefinitely. In the second place, that when we do cut loose from them it will not be to give them a free and independent government, but it will be to sell them to some foreign power.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, in this connection I call his attention to the qualification of the word "self-government."

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that point.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is not an independent, but a local self-government.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that point later. I skipped it and was discussing a later phrase in the resolution, for the reason that I was discussing that particular part in connection with the prior part of the resolution. Now, here are the three declarations, and I wish to know of any Senator here who is opposed to the annexation and the subjugation of these people if he can give his support to either of the three propositions.

Now, what is the fourth proposition? It is the third in order of sequence, but it is the fourth as I consider them, and it is the one to which the Senator from Kentucky has just called my attention.

Mr. President, those of us who are opposed to the permanent annexation of these islands and who are opposed to the United States Government going into the business of subjugating foreign peoples believe that in due time—and when I say due time I mean a short due time—these people should be given their freedom. We think they are entitled to their freedom. They were fighting for it before we ever went there. Whether they were fighting for it at that particular moment or not matters not. They were a people who had shed their blood in order that they might be free, and they were a people who joined with us in the war against the Spaniards in the Philippines, not because they loved us, but because they thought it was to be a step to aid them in securing their liberty. Who doubts that? We think they ought to have their liberty, and the fact that they are not upon the same plane of enlightenment and civilization as ourselves does not in any manner militate against the proposition that they are entitled to their freedom.

Mr. President, what says the language of the joint resolution? Does it look in any manner or at any time to the freedom of these people? Does it not aver that they shall not have it? Does it not say that so far as we are concerned they are never to be free? Here is the language:

> But it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for "local" self-government.

Now, what is the plain construction of that language? The plain construction of that language is not that we intend to let them have a government of their own. The plain avowal is that it is the purpose of the United States Government to establish a government of the United States there, and that they are to be subject to it; a government which shall be one of our own making; a government which, if it follows the precedent, will probably be a military government; if not a military government, then a civil government, organized and appointed from Washington.

It distinctly negatives the idea that we are to let them have their own government, but we say that we are going to establish a government for the purpose of tutelage; that we are to establish a government of our own in the islands to prepare them for what? For independence? For the management of their own affairs? For freedom? By no means. To prepare them for local self-government. Why the word "local?" If it had said to prepare them for self-government, unless we took the last part of the sentence in with it, to which I am going to allude directly, it might have been supposed that it was intended that we would do there somewhat as we do in Cuba.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator from Georgia excuse me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Texas will let me finish the sentence——

Mr. CHILTON. I will not interrupt the Senator from Georgia at all.

Mr. BACON. No; I do not object to it. I thought it would be a little more——

Mr. CHILTON. Proceed.

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator from Texas, as he knows.

Mr. CHILTON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I was proceeding to say when interrupted, that if we had simply said to prepare them for self-government it might be understood that we meant we were going to do somewhat as we are doing in Cuba, arranging to see that those people have a government which shall represent the best sentiment of the islands and put them in a position where they could maintain that government. But when it says "local self-government" it evidently means that it is the purpose of the United States Government to continue the United States control over those islands, and even after they are found capable, under our tutelage, for self-government that they shall simply have local self-government, and that our connection with them as the dominating power is to be continued in one shape or the other.

Mr. CHILTON. The only inquiry I desired to make is this: While I have not regarded the pending joint resolution as of very great importance, I have rather been disposed to think, if adopted, it would serve a useful purpose, in view of the construction put upon it by the friends of the treaty. I am somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] draw a distinction, as I gather from his remarks, adverse to the pending joint resolution, as compared with the doctrine of self-government, because I remember that on the day when the joint resolution was first presented I heard him express the opinion (and he was a friend of the treaty, as we all know) that the resolution was the equivalent of the resolution which had been adopted in regard to Cuba.

The point I make—

I quote from the language of the Senator from Kentucky—

> The point I make is that this resolution, if adopted by the two Houses of Congress and signed by the President, so far as it can commit the Federal Government, will commit the Federal Government to do for the Filipinos all that it is now under obligation to do for the Cuban people.
>
> Why shall we make promises to the Filipinos, who are shooting down our soldiers to-day, which we did not make and have not made and have not been asked to make to the Cubans, who have been our friends all the while? We pledged ourselves not to maintain the military occupation of Cuba after a stable government shall be established. This resolution provides that when a stable government, such as is approved by the Government of the United States, shall have been established in the Philippines, like results shall follow those which are to follow in the island of Cuba.
>
> I maintain that the resolution goes as far as we have gone for Cuba, and it does not, in my opinion, comport with the dignity of the United States at this particular juncture to promise more to the Filipinos than we have promised to our neighbors who lie almost at our feet.

I recognize the fact that the resolution is to some extent vague in expression, but I was rather favorably inclined to it on account of the construction which had been given to it by the friends of the treaty, such as I have now quoted from the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. By way of explanation I will state——

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. I am informed that the resolution as offered by the Senator from Louisiana, then, turns out to be not the resolution I supposed it was. The original resolution as he offered it did seem to meet the very point I made when I was making those statements. My attention has been drawn to the fact that this is not the original resolution, but one altogether different from it. The investigation I have made has convinced me, even if I had been discussing this resolution at that time, that the pending resolution does not do any of those things.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky what has become of the original resolution?

Mr. LINDSAY. I can not answer the question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was endeavoring to discuss——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, that the evening we ratified the treaty the McEnery resolutions, which had been presented that morning, were amended out of all shape as he presented them, and then printed the next morning as though he had introduced the resolution which we now have, whereas if we will get the original typewritten copy we will see an entirely different measure.

Mr. BACON. I do not know anything about how that may be. I only heard the resolutions offered by the Senator from Louisiana when they were read from the desk, and I can not say whether these are the same or not. I am dealing with the joint resolution as it stands. I am very glad to have the attention of some of those who stand with me in opposing the permanent annexation of these islands, because I am exceedingly reluctant that they should give their consent to resolutions which will diametrically oppose what they wish to accomplish.

I was discussing the third declaration in the resolution, which is the fourth in the order of discussion, as to whether or not it is the intention of the Government under the resolutions ever to give to these people free government. If not, then I am sure the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who asked that we should vote upon the joint resolution, will not give it his support.

Mr. President, not only, as I was proceeding to say when the Senator from Texas desired to be heard, do we say that we will continue our government and our dominion for an indefinite term over these people, but we say that when that time ends they are not to have their freedom, but we are to dispose of them to other people. If there is anything in what we have heard here——

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. We are not to dispose of them to other people, but to make such disposition as may be for the best interests of this country and the people of the islands.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. MASON. That is the only redeeming line, I think myself.

Mr. BACON. But when it says disposition, does it mean that we are going to turn the islands over to the people? If so, why do they not say so? Certainly the word "disposition" includes the words "to sell." It does not necessitate it, but authorizes it.

Mr. MASON. We have sovereignty over Cuba——

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it is proper to carry on this debate on the narrow suggestion that that means to sell.

Mr. BACON. I am sure I have not been confining my criticism to that. I am giving a criticism upon that particular word. I say that if it had been intended to say that after the people had been tutored up to the point where they were capable of self-government they should be given their freedom it would have said so. No man can dispute but that under this language the Senator who votes for it votes for the authority of the United States at the proper time to dispose of them either by gift or by sale, because sale is one class of disposition.

Mr. MASON. Or we could dispose of them as we are to do with Cuba—to the people themselves.

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I do not mean to say that it will necessitate a sale, but I say if I vote for these resolutions I vote that it shall be in the power of the Government of the United States with my approval at the proper time, in due time, if they see fit, to sell the islands. The words "dispose of" certainly will authorize that.

Mr. President, there are resolutions here which are entitled to recognition and which would command my support. I desire to state that here is a resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] which has no ambiguity about it. Why the Senator from Illinois did not ask that his resolution be voted upon I do not know. Here is a resolution in words that can not be misunderstood. Here is a resolution in accord with these great principles for which he has been battling here for the last year. Here is a resolution in accord with the resolutions offered by the Senator from Nebraska, reaffirming the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence. It is short, but it covers the ground, and I would vote for it with the greatest pleasure.

> Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Government of the United States of America will not attempt to govern the people of any other country in the world without the consent of the people themselves, or subject them by force to our dominion against their will.

That is the whole doctrine. It is in a few words. It is not ambiguous. It can not be strained to mean anything else; whereas the joint resolution of the Senator from Louisiana can be construed to mean that this Government shall hold permanent and indefinite control and dominion in the Philippine Islands, and that it will hold them in subjection for all time, until we see proper to dispose of them according to our own will in some other way. Nay more, sir, this resolution is so adroitly worded that whatever it may seem to be to the casual reader, it is in fact imperialism, and authorizes distinctly a colonial government in the Philippine Islands, to be maintained by the United States until we see proper to sell them and their people.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he does not think it would be rather unwise for us to make a general declaration that under no condition will we hold a country contrary to the will of the inhabitants? If we were to carry on a war anywhere would we not necessarily for a time at least be compelled so to hold territory?

Mr. BACON. I, of course, recognize that this is a mere general enunciation of principle.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator that he is making a purely technical objection to the resolution.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Colorado for the information.

Mr. TELLER. It is an objection based upon the words, and therefore I think he should be held to technicalities on the Mason resolution as well.

Mr. BACON. I am not discussing the Mason resolution, except to contrast it with the pending joint resolution.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator just gave it his approval.

Mr. BACON. Certainly I do, and I approve of the Declaration of Independence; and the remarks the Senator makes on the resolution of the Senator from Illinois are equally applicable to the doctrines in the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question that I may understand him?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Do I not correctly understand the Senator from Georgia when I understand him to be discussing a permanent peace policy for the United States and not a temporary policy as to what we shall do for a short time while war is going on or shortly after it closes?

Mr. BACON. Of course not. This joint resolution, as I said last week, is now to be taken as a solemn declaration of Congress, of the great lawmaking power of the greatest Government on earth, as to what it will do, not this year or next year, but for all time to come as to the Philippine Islands. Therefore I say every word ought to be weighed, and there ought to be a technical as well as a liberal construction of the words we are going to use in making this great enunciation to the world and to ourselves.

Mr. President, I hope that the joint resolution will be voted down. I think it important that we should make an enunciation through carefully prepared resolutions as to what shall be the policy of the Government of the United States in the future relative to the Philippine Islands.

In the contest over the ratification of the treaty Senators may be said to have been divided into three classes. There were those who favored the ratification of the treaty and the permanent annexation of the islands. There were those who were opposed to the permanent annexation of the Philippine Islands, but who favored the ratification of the treaty as a precedent act to the consideration of what should be done with the Philippine Islands afterwards. The third class were those who were opposed to the ratification of the treaty because it accomplished the fact of annexation, and who desired that the treaty should be amended, or that there should be an accompanying resolution which would practically prevent the annexation of those islands to this country.

The difference between the latter two classes has been swept away. The treaty has been ratified. So the only question, so far as concerns those in the last two classes, is how we shall act. What measures shall we support which will prevent the permanent annexation of these islands? Therefore I hope that the joint resolution will be voted down, in order that the Senate, in mature consideration, may determine what enunciation shall be made. It is proper that there should be an enunciation which shall be expressive of the will and the determination of this Government.

Mr. President, I have no criticism to make upon what has been done under the action already had by the Government of the United States, for that is beyond recall, but I do think the time has come, especially in view of the early adjournment of Congress for nearly a year, when we should say to our people what we intend by this thing. It was given out that ratification was not intended to accomplish permanent annexation. It was so stated by Senators who were in favor of the ratification but who opposed annexation, and in my humble judgment the time has now come for them to make the promise good that after the ratification we would make an enunciation which would be satisfactory to the people of the United States as to the future policy of this Government.

One word, Mr. President, as to amendments. I have no discussion to make as to whether or not future amendments can be proposed, or rather, I should say, whether amendments can be proposed after the hour arrives when we have decided to vote. I find a difference of opinion among Senators who have been long in service here, and I shall not attempt to offer my judgment in the matter.

But as to an amendment which is pending, by what possible rule can a unanimous-consent agreement, especially a unanimous-consent agreement obtained without notice given to the Senate that it was going to be asked, take off a pending amendment? The parliamentary situation is that the pending question on the resolution is the amendment which was offered by myself. When the Senate adjourned when it had under consideration the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana, the question was on the amendment offered by myself. By what parliamentary rule can it be said that that pending question is displaced?

The amendment which I offered is an additional resolve. It is true, I think, that very much in the McEnery resolution should be taken out of it, but if the Senate will adopt this amendment it makes no difference about what comes before it. The amendment is as follows:

Resolved further, That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands, and assert their determination, when a stable and independent government shall have been erected therein, entitled in the judgment of the Government of the United States to recognition as such, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and to thereupon leave the government and control of the islands to their people.

If we adopt that amendment, it is a construction upon everything that goes before, and it is in language so plain that nobody can misunderstand it. It is in language so plain that no permanent annexation or indefinite control of those islands can be urged under it; none could be defended under it. It is a plain proposition: Do we intend to permanently annex those islands and to permanently subject those people to our dominion, or do we intend, through such agencies as we ourselves shall determine, and at such time as we shall determine, and in such manner as we shall determine, to recognize a government when we find one there, which in our judgment is entitled to recognition, and release and free those people and leave their affairs to themselves?

If the latter is our intention, then the language of this amendment plainly expresses such intention.

Now, this is the pending amendment, and it is not only the pending amendment, but it is the pending question on the resolution. The pending question is the adoption of this amendment. But in order to make it doubly sure, I now offer it again.

Mr. BERRY. Why offer it again?

Mr. BACON. It will fasten it.

Mr. BERRY. Some Senators hold that you can not offer it.

Mr. BACON. Very well, I will leave that to the Chair.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from Georgia proposes the following amendment to the pending resolution.

Mr. BACON. I want it distinctly understood that in offering the amendment I do not offer it to displace the pending amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to understand the motion of the Senator from Georgia. Does he move it as an amendment to the resolution or as an addition, so that it will be an amendment in one degree to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BACON. I will not do that. I will withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. That will make it in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

Mr. BACON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate again to the fact that the amendment is pending and was offered when the resolution was formerly before the Senate, and that the pending question is upon the adoption of that amendment. Now, I am not wedded to any amendment of my own or to any resolution of my own. I will with very great pleasure vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] this morning.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, let me ask a question. Does not the Senator from Georgia know that by offering any amendment we endanger our chance to get any vote upon any question?

Mr. BACON. I have not offered the amendment now. There is one pending that was offered last Saturday.

Mr. MASON. The Senator understands that I would prefer his amendment to this, but I should like to get something out of the vote at half past 2, or else have it voted down.

Mr. BACON. I certainly do not desire to be put in a position of having to vote upon the McEnery resolution without the opportunity to vote upon an amendment which I offered before there was any suggestion made by the Senator for fixing a time to vote on it.

Mr. LODGE. As to what a unanimous-consent agreement covers, the Senate in February, 1896, decided that precise point, and if the Senator from Georgia will allow me I will state it; but I do not want to interfere in the least with him.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. In 1896 there was the bond bill, as it was called, which had come over from the House of Representatives. To that the Committee on Finance had offered a free silver coinage act as a substitute; that is, it was an amendment, and it was a pending amendment on that bond bill. The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris, asked for unanimous consent to take a final vote on the passage of the bill at 2 o'clock on Tuesday. There was some little discussion, as there always is when a unanimous-consent agreement is asked for, and the Senator from Tennessee said of course his consent agreement included any parliamentary motion applicable to the pending bill, and that it also included amendments.

After that, when the time for carrying out the unanimous-consent agreement came, the following claim was made by certain Senators, of whom I was one. There was the amendment of the Finance Committee actually moved to the bill and pending. There was another amendment to that offered by the Senator from Idaho. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho was voted on before the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Therefore there remained the bill, with the pending amendment of the Finance Committee, and a discussion arose as to the right to take a vote after 2 o'clock on other amendments; that is, amendments of which Senators had given notice, but which had not been offered, owing to the parliamentary situation being such that they could not be offered.

The Senate held after that discussion, and it was a long and protracted one—and being one of those who had an amendment prepared, I thought that they held wrongly—but they held by an overwhelming majority that a unanimous-consent agreement to take a vote at 2 o'clock on that day on the final passage of the bill shut out everything except the amendment actually pending on the bill at the time when the unanimous consent was given.

Mr. BACON. I recollect that discussion very well.

Mr. LODGE. That they held to be an integral part of the bill and the unanimous-consent agreement; but it was held with the utmost distinctness that every other amendment fell when the hour of 2 o'clock was reached, and that no one had a right to offer any amendment without a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Now, to apply that ruling, which was agreed to by all the Senators longest in the Senate, at the hour of half past 2 the vote comes on the McEnery resolution, with the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, which was pending when the unanimous consent was given; but everything else that has not succeeded in getting a vote before half past 2 falls at half past 2, and to offer it would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. That is precisely what I stated this morning in the Senate, and precisely that which the Senator from Iowa denied. I stated that where there were pending amendments no unanimous-consent agreement could cut them off. I admitted that it might be construed to cut off any additional amendments after half-past 2 o'clock, but as to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia now pending I said we were entitled to a vote upon it, as the Senator from Massachusetts has proven.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me a moment? I did not understand, when I had the colloquy with the Senator from Arkansas this morning, that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia was actually pending.

Mr. BACON. The pending question is on the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a custom here of proposing amendments intended to be offered, and I supposed it had been offered in that sense, and that there was nothing pending on the joint resolution.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia is pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I have examined the RECORD and find that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia was the question under consideration when the joint resolution was up a week ago, and therefore I take it for granted that that amendment must be voted upon in order to get to the main question.

Mr. BERRY. I went to the clerks before I made the remarks this morning and asked them if the amendment was pending. They told me that it was pending and the argument was on that proposition. I knew that it was pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I misunderstood the Senator's statement as to what constitutes a pending amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I trust that all those will vote for this amendment who, like myself, are opposed to the permanent annexation of these islands and who favor that they shall be given their freedom at a proper time, leaving to the United States Government, as it does, the determination of when that time will come and the terms upon which it will be granted, leaving full power to the United States Government in every particular, simply pledging us to the proposition that we will not maintain the permanent annexation of these islands and that we will not subject their people to our dominion against their will. I trust that all those who agree with that fundamental proposition will vote for this amendment.

Now, sir, I have but one appeal to make to those who are opposed to it. Let us have a vote on the amendment and do not let it be put aside on a motion to lay on the table. It is a grave matter. It is an important matter. Let us come squarely up to it and say whether we are in favor of a permanent retention or whether we are in favor of letting these islands loose at a proper time, and whether we are willing to give freedom to a people who have heroically staked their lives to secure their liberties.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator from Georgia a few moments ago to suggest that he would offer an amendment.

Mr. BACON. No, sir; I withdrew that.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right. I only wanted to know the situation.

Mr. BACON. I may offer it to some other resolution in case it is not adopted at this time. In case it is adopted here, I will not do so.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two on the joint resolution and a word or two on the question of order. The precedent which has been cited by my colleague is this, as I understand it. The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris, a great master of parliamentary law, as we all know him to have been, perhaps the greatest who was in the Senate in his time, asked for a unanimous consent that there should be a vote on the bond bill at 2 o'clock. Then it was suggested that there would be a desire to vote on the amendments, and that Senator replied, not that he proposed to make that a part of the unanimous-consent agreement but that, of course, under such an order the pending amendments would be included, and that, of course, is what was done.

That, as I respectfully submit and as I conceive, gave the authority of the Senator from Tennessee and the authority of the Senate itself to that interpretation of such a unanimous agreement, namely, that an agreement to vote on a bill includes a vote on a lawfully and properly pending amendment just as it includes a vote to postpone it indefinitely, or lay it on the table, or any mode of actually disposing of it.

Now, at that time the question came up of the application of that understanding to the then existing condition of things, and the Senator from New Hampshire and my colleague and several others insisted, and I think correctly, that there was the right to offer amendments, they being offered before that time came, and being in order, and to have them also voted upon; and that proposition was never denied by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend a moment and allow the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. HOAR. I ask that that may be laid aside.

Mr. ALLISON. There is nothing pending.

Mr. HOAR. Then I ask that the joint resolution of the Senator from Louisiana may be taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there will be no objection to the Senator from Massachusetts proceeding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair simply desired to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. Let the unfinished business be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks that the unfinished business be laid aside informally. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Now, it turned out that the amendment proposed by my colleague, and possibly the one by the Senator from New Hampshire also, was not in order. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa listen to the statement, because I had somewhat of a difference with him about it, if it is not asking too much of his courtesy. Their amendments were not in order because there was another amendment pending. They did not propose to amend the pending amendment, and a new separate amendment of the bill was not in order until the first amendment was disposed of. That was not disposed of until 2 o'clock, or whatever the hour was, and then it was not in order to move it under the unanimous-consent agreement because the Senate had agreed that nothing should be done after 2 o'clock but to take the vote; that you can not take the floor and move an amendment which would take twenty minutes to read it, if it had been a long one; but that is immaterial. So, as I respectfully conceive, the true parliamentary doctrine established by the precedent cited by my colleague is that a vote on a bill involves a vote on amendments lawfully pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I concur in that view.

Mr. HOAR. And a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the joint resolution at half past 2 o'clock includes all amendments which may be moved before that time. Mark, the word is "before," because they are just as much a part of the bill. We put into our ordinary unanimous-consent agreements the words "amendments now pending," not as an enlargement of an agreement to vote on a bill at that time, but as a contraction of it, so that it will be understood that no other amendments except those now pending are included in the agreement; or if we say "amendments then pending," that gives it the other interpretation. So that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, or the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, unless it is disposed of before 2 o'clock, must then be voted on. I think that we now all agree upon it. You can not get in any other amendment, because, the previous one not having been disposed of, it is not in order. You can not get any in before 2 o'clock, because one is pending; and you can not get it in after 2 o'clock, because it is determined exactly what is to be done then, to wit, to vote, and not to make a motion to amend.

Now that is what I understood, and that is what I meant to say this morning when I used a word I should not have used. I agree with the contention of my friend from Iowa, which I understood to be something altogether different.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. For information only, and not in the slightest degree of criticism. I understand the Senator to say that in his opinion a unanimous-consent rule permits any amendment lawfully moved before the time at which we are called upon to vote.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; lawfully moved.

Mr. ALLISON. And pending.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, and pending. I understand the Senator to say, further, that inasmuch as one amendment has been lawfully moved and is now pending therefore no other can be lawfully introduced and be pending.

Mr. HOAR. Except as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Except as an amendment to the amendment.

Inasmuch as under the rules there can be but one amendment to an amendment, then I understand the Senator to say that whenever there is a consent rule, a unanimous-consent agreement, as to a resolution, that carries with it but the possibility of two amendments and no more.

Mr. HOAR. That is as I understand it, unless the right to offer amendments is otherwise preserved, or the prior amendments have been disposed of before the time fixed for a vote.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a few words upon the joint resolution itself. I heard a good deal before the treaty was enacted, spoken with great earnestness and great vehemence, about embarrassing the Administration in the war. It was said we can not declare the old doctrine of the Farewell Address, or the old doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, or any limitations on our constitutional power, or any expression of our intent, because there are hostilities going on between the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands. Those hostilities are going on now, and what has become of the scruples of the majority in this Chamber? They are prepared not only to send to the people of the Philippine Islands what two highly esteemed members of the Senate, in speeches which I think gave me more pain than any other speeches I ever listened to in the Senate, said they would not do—they would not send any message to the persons who had arms in their hands taken up against the United States. But here is a message, while those hostilities are still going on, calculated to provoke freemen, lovers of liberty, men who think as our ancestors thought, men who think as we have thought till within six months, to resistance and to hostility to the death.

They are simply resolutions, when properly analyzed, declaring in effect that these 10,000,000 people have in our judgment no constitutional rights, no rights to liberty, no rights even to be heard in the determination of their own self-government, and that they are not to have in the future any right of citizenship, any of the rights debated and somewhat misty, but still valuable and precious, which men have when they become residents on territory of the United States. They are not to be citizens here. They are not to be an integral part of our territory ever. Then it goes on to say, in substance, that they are to have nothing to do about their own government hereafter. It is the intention of the United States to make a government for them "suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands." Of that we are to judge, not they. That government is not to fit them to govern themselves ever in the great things which pertain to a national life.

The message which my honorable friend from Delaware will not send to the people with arms in their hands is a message of peace, of good will, of liberty. But he will send them this message from the Senate: Never shall you be made citizens; never shall your territory be United States territory; never shall you have the rights which dwellers on our territory enjoy; never shall you establish your government for yourself. We will try to fit you in small matters and in local matters for self-government; we will try to fit you to govern yourselves so far as the people of the District of Columbia used to govern themselves perhaps and so far as a Territory may govern itself perhaps, but you shall never have a part or a share, not one of the ten million of you, in your national self-government.

And then what is the United States going to do with 10,000,000 human souls? Make such disposition of them as will best promote not even their interests alone, but ours, "as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States," which they are not, and as a caudal appendage, the interests of the inhabitants of the islands.

Now, Mr. President, was there ever on the face of the earth more infamy, if what the people of the United States have said and lived and declared in the face of all mankind be true, than is to be contained in that declaration? It is a declaration stripped of everything else simply that the Louisiana sugar planter shall not be afraid of their competition in the future, and that to prevent that fear there shall never be a human, a constitutional, or a legal right recognized in those 10,000,000 people; and that is the whole of it.

Now, Mr. President, you can not send a message of peace, you can not send a message of hope, you can not send a message of pity, to those poor people who have taken their bows and arrows in their hands and thrown themselves against the power of the people of the United States, dashing out their lives in a brave battle for liberty. To send them even a message of pity the man who proposes it is denounced as a traitor and as unfaithful to the interests of his own country; but for a message of tyranny, a message of hate, a message of oppression, a message of slaughter, these gentlemen are ready enough.

Mr. President, I want to say a single word about these people and their chieftain. I agree that we have not full information about Aguinaldo. It may turn out in his case, as it has turned out in the case of so many others, that he is an unprincipled adventurer. We know nothing about that. All we know about him is that he was accepted as an ally, and that after everything that has been said to his disparagement happened, after his retreat, after his acceptance of the money of Spain, he was recalled in honor and in power by the admiral and the general of the United States. We know that he had invested the Spaniards in the city of Manila; we know that of those 2,000 islands he had won the independence of every one, save only the city of Manila and perhaps one or two other slight stations held by Spain. We know that there came from him a provisional government and constitution for a people engaged in a revolution for their own independence the like of which for ability and fitness for the situation for a people about to enter upon self-government as soon as the military necessity had gone by there are not ten men on the face of this planet who could have improved upon. It is a masterpiece of constitutional construction.

We know that he has addressed to this Senate a powerful, temperate, and respectful communication, stating with admirable clearness and compactness a desire and a hope for liberty and an appeal to the great people of the United States. I do not see how any American heart not of stone can fail to see that the source of that appeal is entitled to respect and to honor. He has also made an application—rejected, I am told, though the details of that we do not know—simply for a hearing.

Suppose it were true that these 10,000,000 people seeking liberty, knowing nothing of a foreign power but what they have learned from Spain, 10,000 miles off from the United States, unacquainted with our history, their eyes never having gazed upon the beauty and the glory of our flag, suppose they did in their ignorance and in their weakness make this brave and passionate attack upon the forces of the United States, they were, at least, men willing to give their lives for something. Whatever else they did, they did not flinch or run. We have, with scarcely the loss of a man, mowed them down by the thousands; we have inflicted upon them that dread and terrible penalty; and I do not agree with my honorable friends who say that it is unworthy of the dignity of the people of the United States to send those people even a message of kindness and hope and sympathy.

I think the lives of American soldiers were sacrificed by the men, whoever did it, who demanded of these men their unconditional submission and would not send them a message such as America has been wont to send and such as the American flag has been wont to bear to the down-trodden and suffering and oppressed peoples of the earth.

Mr. President, others doubtless will do as they please. I have in regard to myself, in regard to what I have said and done and what I shall say and do in this business, neither doubt, hesitation, nor misgiving. I am satisfied to stand with the fathers and the statesmen of the past generations, with the men who framed our liberty and who founded our Constitution.

Mr. President, I happened accidentally this morning, looking entirely for another subject, to find a passage from Dr. Johnson, in the great argument in which he assailed our revolutionary fathers, entitled "Taxation no tryanny." If I were to have it read at the desk as a part of the speech of the gentlemen who have been defending this business here, everybody would say, "Why, of course, that was exactly what they were saying; it sounds like last week and the week before last"—this doctrine that there can be no limitation of sovereignty, that a sovereign can do anything he pleases, that you are inferior, that a constitutional republic or a limited monarchy is inferior to a despotism or a tyranny. I should like to have the Secretary read the paragraph marked in the book, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

All government is ultimately and essentially absolute, but subordinate societies may have more immunities, or individuals greater liberty, as the operations of government are differently conducted. An English individual may by the supreme authority be deprived of liberty for reasons of which that authority is the only judge. In sovereignty there are no gradations. There may be limited royalty, there may be limited consulships, but there can be no limited government. There must in every society be some power or other from which there is no appeal, which admits no restrictions, which pervades the whole mass of the community, regulates and adjusts all subordination, enacts laws or repeals them, erects or annuls judicatures, extends or contracts privileges, exempt itself from question or control, and bounded only by physical necessity.

Mr. HOAR. That is the doctrine on which this present policy of ours stands. But John Adams and George Washington and Patrick Henry had something to say to the contrary. That pamphlet was published by Dr. Johnson in 1775 as An Answer to the Resolution and Address of the American Congress, and the American Congress joined issue and they answered to the great moralist and philosopher, the tool and defender of absolute power, that governments get their powers from the consent of the governed, and that the only powers they get are just powers, and we claim for our newly constituted governments the right to do only those acts and things which free and independent States may of right do.

Trampling on foreign peoples or disposing of them for our interests was not one of those things. They declare that it is the right of any people to institute a new government, and to not only "organize its powers in such form," but "to lay its foundation in such principles as to them"—not to anybody else—"shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." And they declare that these things lie at the foundation of all governments, and are of higher and prior authority than government itself. They put that not only into their own declaration, but into the contemporary constitution of every American State; and the people of Virginia added to it that these rights are "the basis and foundation of government," and "that no free government or the blessings of liberty can be preserved to any people but by frequent recurrence to these fundamental principles."

I wonder what sort of recurrence we are going to make to these principles this year? Can any man read them in the Senate without being denounced as a traitor? Can any Senator read George Washington's Farewell Address on his birthday without dropping his voice, or without a little laugh around the Chamber when he repeats the counsel which for a hundred years we have followed? Will it not be a remarkable celebration of the Fourth of July if we have these 10,000,000 people all trampled under foot, and some of our friends can not hear these great sentiments of the moral law as applied to the conduct of the States read again without saying, "Oh, that is a traitorous message you are sending to men who are in arms for their liberty in a distant land?"

Mr. HALE. I have not much hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will take any course which will stop the desolating programme that is now going on in the Philippine Islands. Previous to the ratification of the treaty with Spain Senators opposed to us who feared this result and who believed that instead of peace war would follow its ratification, early and late sought to assuage our fears and doubts by the declaration that the ratification of the treaty committed the American people, the United States, the Administration, to no policy of annexation or of resulting war with the inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago.

Under those arguments, and as the effect of those statements, I saw, as other Senators saw, day by day the number of Senators here who were afraid to vote for the treaty because of its malefic results gradually dwindling away and falling into the ranks of those who proposed to and did vote to ratify the treaty. Hardly has it been ratified, when an attempt is made to stay the hand of foreign war and to give a chance for peace in the Philippine Islands with the inhabitants there, we are told by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who has become a foremost advocate of the present policy and the present programme, that it is no time now for the Senate to express itself upon the situation in the Philippine Islands; that it should all be left to the Administration; that things are going on very well at present; and that we are precluded from expressing any opinion or laying out any policy.

I am not disappointed, sir; I expected it. I told Senators that when this treaty had been ratified and when war would ensue it would be found impossible for us to take any step that would alleviate the condition, and I do not have hope that out of it anything will come; but Congress will adjourn and the war will go on, and no man will be found in three months from now who will not recognize that it is a war of conquest and subjugation.

Everything that can be said about the attitude of the Filipino people is that for the last six months, and especially since the treaty was negotiated in Paris, they have besought us not to do to them what Spain had attempted to do. They have not to-day gone one step beyond that, sir. They risked their lives and their fortunes against Spain, and Spain's tyranny went on. They showed that they were a fighting people.

There were battles with the Spaniards, Mr. President, long before we went there, which arose to the magnitude of pitched battles, compared with which every instance of the struggle in Cuba was as nothing. They became our allies; they welcomed us to their shores as the herald and the harbinger of their freedom. We have the official declarations made by our representatives in their neighborhood to that effect. We have the declaration of the admiral of the fleet. We have before us, as the reports show, in the commission assembled at Paris, the declaration of General Merritt that in three months 5,000 troops would not be needed on the Philippine Islands. And yet to-day we have 20,000 men there and 7,000 more are now crossing the seas.

Mr. HOAR. How about the Oregon?

Mr. HALE. And the Oregon is sent out to reenforce the fleet.

And we are told, as the Senator from Massachusetts has so well and aptly—as he always does—put it, that we are traitors, and we are held up and blacklisted in the newspapers because we declare that under the circumstances something should be done in the way of giving those people a chance, at least, to show that they are friendly and can set up a government. Instead of that we destroy them, not by scores or hundreds, but by thousands. Mr. President, there have been more men on the Philippine Islands killed outright by the guns of our Army and Navy than were killed on the side of the patriots in the Revolutionary war in any six battles. The slaughter has assumed a gigantic attitude.

The American people will not let it pass. Unless I am mistaken, these tragic events, this slaughter of men in no way competent to meet us, men with bows and arrows presented to us, retiring, as it is said, and crawling by hundreds to die in the jungles and swamps, have almost stupefied the American mind. I discover already, sir, that this consideration is working with elemental force in the minds of the American people.

Nobody dared to tell us beforehand in the mission of commerce and of religion and the sending of the gospel that it was to be preceded by the slaughter of thousands of men. In another body it was said that we would take the Bible and the rifle and the shotgun, and, if necessary, would use the shotgun and the rifle first; but I found nobody when that was said who heard it or read it who was not shocked at the utterance and who did not repudiate it. But it was not even a small prophecy compared with what has since followed.

Like the Senator from Massachusetts, I have had no doubt as to my own position. I do not say, "I told you so." I do not desire to say that, but all the evils that have come my mind foreboded, and I stated it at times and places where it could not be mistaken. I have little hope now that anything will be done that will stop this programme.

I am not much enamored of the resolution of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. It contains very little that is good; it contains a good deal that is bad. It does not represent what I should desire to vote for as an expression of policy to go not only to the inhabitants of the Philippines, but to the people of the United States and to the world. I like the resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] much better, and the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] better still. But I do not, as I have said, out of it believe or hope that much good will come. The car will go on, Mr. President, the grinding will continue, until at last the people make themselves felt and heard upon this programme of subjugation and slaughter.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I agree to a large extent with what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said; but I am naturally an optimist, and I do not believe that this juggernaut car of the American forces and power will go much further until the American people have been heard from upon this subject.

When a little over a month ago I asked respectfully for a vote upon the resolution which has been read by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I pointed out to the Senate that coming events plainly foreshadowed war with the Philippine Islands. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is not now in the Chamber, questioned me, and even went so far as to say that he was sorry that the statement had been made; that it was an impossibility; and yet the very thing suggested has taken place.

The treaty is not complete, and under the protocol, assuming that we have the whole island as well as the bay and the harbor of Manila, we never had a soldier in Iloilo as against the soldiers of the new republic, or the pretended republic, if you please. Our flag had never been put upon that island. The natives of that island by force of their own arms had taken possession and driven the Spaniards out. We were assured day after day and hour after hour and week after week that there was no intention, after the ratification of the treaty, until it was complete at least, to take possession of the other islands of the archipelago. To-day the newspapers give us the news that was predicted upon this floor thirty-three days ago to-day, of the capture of Iloilo. We are driving the natives out after a bombardment, and then, according to the report, the natives have set the city on fire; and when a Senator rises here to question the conduct of his own country, he is called to account as though we were engaged in war with a great power, when every tyro knows the difference.

Mr. President, if we were conducting a war against Spain, Great Britain, Germany, or any of the powers of the earth, I think I know my patriotic duty as well as do those gentlemen who have scolded me in the press and elsewhere. It would be the hour of the survival of the fittest, and I would stand by my country, right or wrong, ready to vote arms, munitions, or furnish whatever I had to give in defense of the preservation of my country. But here is a case where we are attacking people without arms, where we are making war against people who can not defend themselves, and who thirty days ago were our allies—a war that is utterly unwarranted by any act of Congress. No declaration of war has been made by the war-making power, the Congress of the United States, against the people of the Philippine Islands. I ask any lawyer on this floor who claims to know international law whether, until the completion of the treaty of peace, we secure even the naked title of sovereignty which Spain had.

It was claimed that upon the completion of the treaty of peace we should receive the title of sovereignty. I denied it. But now, for the purposes of the argument, suppose you have received the title of sovereignty which Spain had, you do not receive it until the completion of the treaty; and until the completion of the treaty of peace we have, under the protocol, only the right to keep Manila and its harbor.

How is this war to be closed except by the extermination of those poor people? Admit, if you like, that Aguinaldo is dishonest; admit, if you like, that he sold his country for thirty pieces of silver—which I deny and which the record does not prove; admit all you please, yet within three days Aguinaldo asked for an opportunity to quit, and what is his answer? Take the official report, which was published about February 8, and which stands uncontradicted, and it shows that Aguinaldo, ready to quit, asked for a conference, and General Otis declined to recognize or answer the rebel chief. When is this war to stop, when we refuse even to permit the rebel party to speak to us? Mr. President, I desire to take about five minutes upon the joint resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am trying to get at the legal status of these people. Until the treaty is ratified at Madrid the title does not pass to the United States, I believe, and therefore these people can not be rebels against the United States Government. While we are making a treaty of peace with Spain and fighting these people under a pretense that legally they are Spanish subjects, what is our legal status in international law? I should like to have the Senator answer that question, or if he is unable, as I am, then I should like to call upon some other gentleman on the other side who knows all these things.

Mr. MASON. I have not a monopoly upon either fact or law. I have some opinions, and I admit myself that they are usually correct. [Laughter.] I am exceedingly sorry that my colleagues do not always agree with me. You remember the one man on the jury who found eleven fools, or simply people who did not agree with him. I have a theory about it. I have studied international law a little. It would take a very large book, however, to hold that which I do not know about international law.

The gentlemen who favored the treaty and urged it so strongly without any vote on the resolutions said in their speeches that when Spain ceded to us the Philippine Islands she ceded the sovereignty; that is, the right to govern. Now, I am an American. I do not believe you can sell the right to govern anybody. I do not believe you can do in international law that which is absolutely repugnant to and in conflict with the theory of the Government, but that we had a right, and for the purposes of the argument I said let that pass. It is only one of many questions, and for the purposes of the discussion which I am having now I say I will admit that you bought the sovereignty of Spain, I say that I am willing to admit that it carries the right to govern, but I say that until the treaty is complete you have no right by the armies and navies of your country to take possession of land which has not been ceded to you.

I understand that now, to-day, the men who were rebels yesterday against the United States are rebels against Spain, and for legal necessity we must transfer their rebellion as against the sovereignty of Spain, in order that we may shoot them to death and still be within the line of constitutional and international law. Yesterday they were rebels against us, according to the statements, and to-day, in order to justify the burning of their villages, we have transferred the legal status, and they are now rebels against Spain and we are killing them because they are rebels against Spain and have broken the treaty. Such are the intricacies of international law, if you will permit the expression.

Distinguished Senators who, upon this floor within one week, have declared them to be traitors and rebels against us are announcing a new doctrine this morning—that the Filipinos are rebels against Spain or that they are legally the subjects of Spain, and as subjects of Spain have broken the treaty of peace. To such extremities are gentlemen driven. Men fighting for liberty never have put such a construction upon statutes. It is only that frame of mind which sets out upon a beaten path, having announced its intention of drifting away from the lines laid down by the fathers, drifting away from the lines laid down by the Republican party in its last convention. With their heads set, they say, "If we do not kill them, they will have anarchy there. If we do not burn their towns, they can not govern themselves." By what authority was Iloilo fired upon by our guns? Have we declared war in this war-making body? Oh, no.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator from Illinois, if he will allow me, whether that is not a recognition of the existence of a government on the island of Iloilo?

Mr. MASON. Yes, to-day; but constitutional and international law change every twenty minutes to fit the purposes of those who would govern other people without their consent. What is the use of laying down a rule to-day? Let them lay down their own rule. They will not follow it twenty-five hours if it suits them to break it. Do not try to fix rules of international law to govern this body. The greatest lecture I have ever read upon international law was delivered by the distinguished chairman of our Committee on Foreign Relations, and I commend it to my friends in this Chamber, for he says, after all, international law can come and go, but the sum and substance of it is that its final judgments are based upon equity and liberty and good conscience. Is it liberty and good conscience to kill these people? That is what I ask.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand the Senator from Illinois to quote now from the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir; but I do not pretend to give his exact words.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has not the Senator got that choice morsel with him, and can he not read it?

Mr. MASON. It is in a publication giving a series of lectures delivered by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota at the university of his State. I am free to say that the more I read of him the more I honor him for his learning. In one of the lectures which made the greatest impression upon me, and which I had the pleasure to use and quote from in a small place where I had occasion to refer to his lectures, is that one thought. I am sorry I have it not here, but it is to this effect, that there is such a thing as international law, there are such things even as prize courts, but that international law is written not upon statute books but in the consciences of the nations of the world.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator then agrees with me that the taking of Iloilo is a recognition of the adherence of that island to Aguinaldo's government; and as Aguinaldo is a rebel against Spain and we are subduing his followers we have gone off 300 miles on another island to take another city where the people have never fired a gun on our soldiers?

Mr. MASON. Does the Senator mean that by killing a man you recognize his existence? Not at all. General Otis has distinctly declined to speak to Aguinaldo.

Mr. TILLMAN. Iloilo is 300 miles from Manila.

Mr. MASON. There is nothing in the dispatches to indicate that he may not have been willing to lay down his arms. But they say Aguinaldo is a fraud, do not speak to him, and kill the people back of him.

Mr. TILLMAN. But Iloilo is 300 miles from Manila.

Mr. MASON. I understand so; but it is a government which admits——

Mr. TILLMAN. Aguinaldo as the president of the republic?

Mr. MASON. He claims to be.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say the Iloilo people, the insurgents, or the patriots, or whatever we term them, have resisted the landing of the Americans there, and they did not land until we ratified the treaty and the battle of Manila came off. Now our troops, without any provocation, go on shore, shell the town, and burn it and seize it.

Mr. MASON. We shelled it, but they burned it, according to the official reports. [Laughter.] You must get your official information correct. We are giving them the Christian civilization of which we have been talking. We refuse to permit their leader to speak to us, but continue to shoot.

Mr. President, I desire a moment in which to reply to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Georgia in regard to the joint resolution known as the McEnery resolution, for which unanimous consent was given that it should be voted upon to-day at half past 2 o'clock. I do not wish to consume the very valuable time here—fearing some others may wish to speak a few minutes—to respond to gentlemen who spoke in regard to my conduct the other day. It is only fair, however, that I should say that more than a month ago I asked unanimous consent, and stated that I would continue to ask it until the treaty was voted upon.

I also gave notice that I did not intend to consent to a vote upon the treaty until some such arrangement was made. That ran along for four weeks. However, when the friends of the treaty wished it voted upon, I was absent from the Chamber for ten or fifteen minutes. When I returned, I found that an agreement had been reached or was about to be reached, and I felt that that was of such great importance that I would not interpose any objection, and did not. But I gave notice at the same time that I should continue to ask for unanimous consent. Saturday I took the floor. I was not speaking on the appropriation bill, and so distinctly stated. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will remember he told me, and I trust him as being familiar with the rules, that I was speaking in my own right.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Illinois was.

Mr. MASON. He said I had a right to speak. I gave notice at the opening of my remarks that I would ask for unanimous consent. In order that I might take no unfair advantage I suggested the absence of a quorum, and upon the roll call a quorum came in. I am told that 57 Senators were here. At the opening of my speech I again stated the object of my remarks; that I intended to continue to ask for unanimous consent. I did so continue. I kept the floor until I finished my speech, and I did ask for unanimous consent. I had been giving notice for thirty days and if any one Senator out of the dozen who objected to my requests during the past thirty days—the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] had objected; both Senators from Connecticut had objected; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] had objected twice, once when I made a request——

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. MASON. I do not mean that the Senator from Georgia objected until after the time came when he ceased to work for his own resolution.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Illinois is entirely mistaken. He can not show by the RECORD that I ever objected to any request of his to vote upon his resolution.

Mr. MASON. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean upon the McEnery resolution?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes. I said I was willing to vote on any of the other resolutions without debate, but that the McEnery resolution required discussion.

I will state to the Senator, as he has alluded to my action in the matter, that I was present when he asked for unanimous consent for a vote upon the joint resolution. I had previously, on the same morning, stated that I would consent as to all others, but upon that joint resolution there should be discussion. When he asked for unanimous consent, two or three Senators on the other side having previously—within a few minutes—objected, I supposed they were in their seats, and I did not make objection; otherwise I should have objected then.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Georgia did not feel that it was his duty to examine each chair to find whether the gentlemen who objected were present or not.

Mr. BACON. Even if I had, I would have found that they were not there.

Mr. MASON. I will say that I did not consider it my duty, and I do not consider it my duty now. If any Senator should come to me and say, "Do not call up this matter in my absence," he knows very well I would not do it; but there was such unanimous objection to every move I made that I did not consider that any one gentleman had appointed himself my guardian, and I expected every man in the Chamber to object when I finished my speech. None of them did object, and the order was made. I have no apology to make for it; and as to those gentlemen who saw fit to criticise me in my absence, I shall take occasion on some other and more favorable occasion to give my opinion of them, unless they shall at least modify some of the suggestions that have been made as to my conduct. I simply claim that I have the same right here as, and no better right than, every other Senator. No Senator, by reason of age, experience, or previous condition, has any more rights than I on this floor.

Mr. President, as to the joint resolution, I confess I agree with a good deal that has been said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. It is not the resolution of my choice. My own resolution is a dear, sweet thing, and I had hoped to put it upon its passage through this august body, but I had no chance of getting a vote on it. I have no hope of getting a vote upon my resolution. My resolution declares in so many words that we do not intend to govern other people without their consent. That is entirely in conflict with our conduct. I had no idea of getting a vote of censure upon our own Government in this dignified body. So I abandoned it, willing to take any crumb of comfort I could get. I was willing to take the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and so stated.

I worked here two days to get a unanimous-consent agreement. There is no hope of passing anything except the McEnery resolution, so called, which was agreed to by the distinguished gentleman who lead the fight for this treaty, and who, in my presence, agreed to call it up immediately upon the ratification of the treaty of peace. He kept his word so far as he could up to the hour of his departure from the Capitol. I am not finding any fault with him. I say so far as he could he kept his agreement.

Now, in my opinion, unless this resolution is passed, none will be passed. I believe it is better than no resolution. I wish to be heard upon that point for just a moment. I ask the Senator from Georgia, to whom I gave my attention this morning, to let me give him a construction of a few lines. I have listened to his construction of the resolution. I have listened to the construction given by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; but I can see only a crumb of comfort. I do not see even half a loaf, but I see no affirmative declaration that we intend to perpetually govern these people by force and without their consent.

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States.

Is not there some comfort in that, I will ask the Senator from Georgia—the fact that we dispel the idea of friendly and gracious assimilation of the people of those islands, who fight with clubs and bows and arrows; that we are not to adopt them as citizens of the United States? Is not that an affirmative declaration? Is it not pleasing to the Senator from Georgia? Would he not rather have that than to have the resolution loaded down by his resolution, which is a better one, and in the end have the joint resolution defeated altogether?

Mr. BACON. As the Senator asks me, I desire to state that if my amendment is not adopted I shall certainly vote against the McEnery joint resolution, as I think it vicious in each and every particular.

Mr. MASON. I said the resolution declares that by the ratification of the treaty of peace it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States. Is not that satisfactory—that we are not to incorporate them as citizens; that we are not to adopt them, bows and arrows, leprosy, and all? Suppose we all took the same ground that unless our particular resolution is adopted we will adopt none. I verily think the plain suggestion in my resolution, which the Senator said he would vote for, is better than this.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. The treaty of peace hands over the sovereignty of the Philippines to the United States. We take them in, according to the treaty. What is the use of a declaration that it is not our intention to take them in?

Mr. MASON. Oh, well, we may take a man into our house as a guest; we may take him in as a stranger; we may take him in as a partner or a boarder. We have taken in the Philippines. There is a difference of opinion as to how they stand. We ask for a declaration that the Filipinos are not to be citizens. I should gladly vote with the Senator, if they will give you an opportunity, but we can not get an opportunity to vote in this body.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. If the ratification of the treaty gives the Philippine people a status as citizens in the sense in which the Constitution uses the word "citizenship," is it within the power of Congress by a declaration to deprive them of that citizenship? If it is a fact that by the ratification of the treaty they acquire any of the rights of citizenship of the United States, can a declaration of Congress, passed by both branches, the President signing it, so affect their status? Would that be depriving them of a right by due process of law?

Mr. MASON. You are getting into the constitutional argument which you made, and made well, and made ably. I do not believe they could.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not.

Mr. MASON. Continuing further, I do not think the adoption of the treaty makes them citizens, and I am trying to get some expression of the Senators of the United States which will be of some satisfaction to the people that we do not intend to make them citizens.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my honorable friend a question if he will allow me. Does not the concluding paragraph of the resolution affirm our right to dispose of these people whether they are willing or not?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator believe in that doctrine?

Mr. MASON. No. I believe a joint resolution makes a law. I believe it can be amended or repealed. The joint resolution says that in due time we propose to make such disposition of the islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and inhabitants of said islands. I believe that when the people of the United States, when the labor of the country has felt the contact and the competition of that labor, and when the conscience of the American people is awakened, then they will construe that to mean absolute independence.

As I said before, I am an optimist. I can now see the great conventions meeting—the Free Silver convention, the Populist, the Democratic, the Republican—and they will all hustle to get a declaration——

Mr. NELSON. And the imperialist.

Mr. MASON. The imperialists will be dead and buried before another convention is held in the United States of America. The imperialist will live only in the realms and kingdoms across the water. I can see those conventions hustling and hurrying along to get on record first for the old-fashioned declaration in favor of human liberty and independence for the Philippine Islands, as they did for Cuba two years ago. If there is any difference in platforms in 1900, it will be that the convention last held will declare a little the strongest for human liberty and against human slavery. I am ready to get a crumb of comfort out of this dignified body.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me? If I agreed with him that there is any crumb of comfort in the joint resolution, I should certainly vote with him. We are one as to what we desire, but we differ in our judgment as to what the resolution contains.

Mr. MASON. I know that is true. I have appreciated it from the start. I am glad to agree with the Senator, and I am exceedingly sorry that many great efforts for the benefit of human liberty have been wasted, dwarfed, and finally defeated by the lack of unity of action among those who desired to attain a certain result. I can not ask the Senator to yield his judgment. He can not ask me to yield mine. I am for what I can get, and I shall be glad even to have it known to the people of the United States that this body realizes that there is war in the Philippine Islands, and that we are taking towns, that we are bombarding towns, and that the citizens of the towns are burning them; and all because Aguinaldo is not honest, and all because we have not had time to talk to him.

Mr. President, before I sit down I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts, in reply to his suggestion, that I should be willing to follow him. I know of no living man, American or foreigner, in whom I have greater confidence or for whom I have greater respect. At this critical moment I have no wish to crowd my personal views. I am willing to abandon anything to stop this war. I was willing to vote for the treaty of peace because I was told it would stop the war; and yet the hour the treaty was voted upon, or within a day, we began to burn their villages. I was for peace in the Philippine Islands; I voted for the treaty supposing it would bring peace. Each man must act according to his own judgment.

No Senator could have given more careful thought, although all of you could have given better thought, as to what vote should be cast than I gave. When I voted for the treaty, I voted upon the promise to pass the resolution; I voted upon the understanding that there was to be no more war in the Philippines, and that we would take those people and reason with them as children; that we were to give them a chance upon the broad highway of the survival of the fittest. Yet when their chosen leader asks for an interview we decline even to hear his proposition and continue to fire.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts what I was about to say, that the tide has turned. Ten thousands of people who stood before for taking the Philippine Islands whether or not have begun to change their minds. I ask no better proof of it than an editorial taken from the Chicago Times-Herald, which I desire to have read, if there is no objection. It is short. If there is objection, I will read it.

I was saying to the Senator from Massachusetts that the working people, in their great convention representing all of the trade and labor unions of this country, have protested against annexation. Upon this question there is a boiling from the bottom. There is a love of liberty among the people, and great newspapers that before were writing editorials and saying, "Shoot them; they are rebels," have changed their tone. I call attention to the one that has spoken for the Administration, at least in the Northwest, during the first two years of the present Administration. I understand it to be an editorial from the Times-Herald, of Chicago. It states that it is from the Times-Herald. It might have been a communication, but it is published in the Washington Post. I would like to have the Secretary read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PACIFICATION, NOT ANNEXATION—PUBLIC SENTIMENT WILL NOT TOLERATE SLAUGHTER IN A WAR OF CONQUEST.

[From the Chicago Times-Herald.]

Pacification looking to independence, not subjugation preparatory to annexation, should now be the American policy in the Philippines.

Such scenes of slaughter as attended the repulse of the Filipinos on our lines last Saturday and Sunday send a shudder of horror and pity through the land. History may tell us that civilization and progress have always advanced through such charnel scenes to the salvation of savages and for the good of mankind.

But the people of the United States have neither the blood thirst nor the land hunger that will tolerate a war of conquest whose battlefields are shambles and whose victories are butcheries.

There is no glory in routing an army of undisciplined semisavages, whose ranks are recruited from Igorrotes bowmen, half-naked boys, and women masquerading as soldiers.

The slaughter at Manila was necessary, but it was not glorious. The entire American nation justifies the conduct of its army at Manila because only by a crushing repulse of the Filipinos could our position be made secure. It will also sustain any steps that may be necessary to make Manila invulnerable to like assaults in the future.

But the conscience of the American people will not tolerate the slaughter of Filipinos in a war of conquest.

We do not seek their land. We do not want to replace the yoke of Spain with one bearing the more merciful and just label of the United States of America.

If we could we would order our army and navy back from the Philippines, contenting ourselves with such a naval depot as would prevent our ever again being caught in the dilemma which forced Dewey to take refuge from Hongkong in the destruction of Montojo's fleet and the capture of Manila.

But to-day the peace of the Orient will not permit our immediate retirement from the Philippines. We are the successors to Spanish sovereignty there, the guardians of the island from the rapacity of foreign nations, and in a broad sense the trustees of civilization and peace throughout the island.

This is the White Man's Burden which Dewey achieved for us, and which has been thrust upon us by the impotent oppression of Spain and the semibarbarous condition of the Philippines.

The path of duty and national honor in the Philippines is a narrow and perilous one. We can see the end, which should be the establishment of an independent Philippine republic. But the way to that end is involved in doubt and difficulties which ought not to prove insurmountable.

We can only keep our conscience clear by keeping the end always in view and working toward it with patience and honesty.

But we want no repetitions of the battle of Manila.

Let the President proclaim the purpose of the United States to be pacification with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands. Let him summon the chieftains of the principal sections of the country to a council to devise some system of home rule until the Filipinos are able to assume all the obligations of government.

Let him announce that we have no intention of annexing Asiatic territory and that the pledge of Congress as to Cuban independence will be the pledge of the American nation to the Philippines.

Mr. MASON. I have nearly finished. I should have finished long ago but for interruptions. The Senator from Massachusetts will see when the imperialist begins to talk about ultimate independence that we can really trust the imperialist as well as the American citizen.

The next proposition is—and certainly the Senator does not call this a message of war—

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship.

That is a good declaration. We do not want them for citizens, we do not need them for citizens, we do not need their land. After three hundred years of Spanish sovereignty there were only 10,000 Spaniards in the islands.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon the interruption, I will state my criticism about the joint resolution.

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. It declares that it is the intention of the people of the United States to establish a government for that people. Then they are going to prepare them, not for independence——

Mr. MASON. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. Not to do what they have a mind to do, but for local self-government.

Mr. MASON. Local self-government.

Mr. HOAR. Then they are going to dispose of it in that way that will suit our interests.

Mr. MASON. No, their interests.

Mr. HOAR. Our interests and theirs. There is, I agree, a little semicaudal appendage very much docked at the end.

Mr. MASON. But the caudal appendage is important to this particular canine, because it says we are not going to dispose of it to promote the best interests of the citizens of the United States alone, but of "the inhabitants of said island," and I say that all the genius and history of the United States is that when the plain people, as Lincoln called them, finally act they will act in the interest of liberty. Of course, they only pretend to give local self-government, but that is better than the shotgun we are giving them now. We will take what we can get. My opinion is that if the resolution is changed it is likely to be defeated.

Now, upon the second proposition. First, we do not intend to make them citizens. Next, we are not going to annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States. There are two great things that the people would like to see us declare upon, that we are not going to take their lands and we are not going to take the people. In the great joint debate between Lincoln and Douglas in front of the court-house in Chicago, I was told by an eyewitness, who was illustrating some question from that debate, that Judge Douglas forgot himself for the moment and charged Mr. Lincoln with being an abolitionist, and as he turned to sit down he used what was common in those days to offend Republicans by saying, "I see you want a negress for a wife; you want to marry a colored woman."

Douglas, I say, forgot himself for the moment, and as he turned to Mr. Lincoln he said: "But perhaps our candidate upon the abolition ticket wants a colored woman for his wife." The person telling me said that Mr. Lincoln rose like the unfolding of a great jackknife without even addressing the Chair. He stepped out in front of the audience that stood before the hotel and, looking down the street, said: "No, I do not wish her for a wife; neither do I wish her for my slave." This declaration says we do not want them for citizens, and we do not want them for slaves. We will take what we can get; to-morrow we will get more.

Now, upon the other proposition, there are two things proposed in the resolution of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana:

But it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands.

Well, we certainly can not make it much worse than we are doing now. It certainly is not establishing a government fit for their wants when we are taking them island by island at the point of the gun, and their cities go down in ashes, and their people go out under the stars and sky without a home, all because Aguinaldo sold to Spain, if you please, for thirty pieces of silver. We refused to talk with Aguinaldo. We refused to even let him have the poor privilege of making a proposition, without knowing whether he is willing to lay down his arms or not. We say to him, "You are the only man who can speak to us; get back to your den and get ready to be shot." But you are not shooting Aguinaldo, but shooting the blind people, you say, who follow him; the children, half men and half devils, half child and half man, these weaklings. You here upon this floor have said it would not do to make them citizens. They can not govern themselves. It will be anarchy. They lack moral strength. They lack vital strength of intellect. And yet after having proclaimed them half idiotic and turned our guns upon them, we say, "We will give you Christian civilization, but give it with a 13-inch gun."

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Illinois yield a moment? Does he intend to insist upon the unanimous-consent agreement when he knows that three Senators who had just protested in his presence against such an agreement had gone out of the Chamber?

Mr. MASON. If you had been here you would have heard what I said upon that subject. I say yes, I do intend to insist upon it; and I deny any man the privilege of questioning my conduct. I stood upon the floor thirty days ago and gave the notice. I asked for it day after day, and finally when I got consent I called for a quorum. I called for the Senators to come in. You came in. I do not know whether you stayed or not. I had not seen you here. The Senate was reasonably full. I saw plenty of gentlemen on the floor who had objected, as the Senator there before me will testify. I did what is customary and usual in such cases. I did what was fair and what was honorable; and I will allow no man to question my conduct in that particular.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not ask your permission.

Mr. MASON. No, sir; you have taken it without permission time and again, and it will not happen any further unless I defend myself as I have a right to here and everywhere else.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Illinois by his permission. I believe the hour was fixed at half past 2 o'clock for the vote. There are two or three gentlemen on this side who would like to express themselves upon the joint resolution before being called upon to vote, and I want to know if there can not be an accommodation made so that those gentlemen can speak. I am one of them myself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I can not hear what the Senator from Mississippi says, and I am very anxious to hear.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will speak louder. He was not heard by Senators on the other side.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent that this debate be prolonged, say, for an hour and a half. Gentlemen on this side who have not delivered themselves of some thoughts they have on this subject, of whom I am one, want to speak very briefly about it. It does not make very much difference whether I speak at all, but still there is no use in hurrying through. I do not suppose the Senator who has taken so much of the time of the Senate will have any objection.

Mr. MASON. I do not wish to do anything to hamper the unanimous consent already granted.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object to any extension of the time unless there is an understanding as to who shall occupy it and how long. There are a number of Senators on this side who desire to speak.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 2.30 p. m.). The hour has arrived when, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the vote is to be taken.

Mr. MONEY. I think it would be but fair to divide the time equally between the two sides, if that meets with the views of the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Iowa will recognize that this very serious question is not going to be put down because time is limited this evening for debate on this resolution. It must come up, and it will come up. It will come up before the close of this session; and I do not think there will be any loss of time. I will sit up with him to pass the appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put any request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I feel obliged to object to any extension of time.

Mr. BURROWS. The regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 240) declaring the purpose of the United States toward the Philippine Islands, which was introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. HALE. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the reading of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment has been offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which will be read.

Mr. HALE. The pending amendment.

Mr. BERRY. The pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was the pending amendment at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was made. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is properly before the Senate. It was business undisposed of at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was made. It was an amendment that was introduced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] February 6, the same day that Senate joint resolution 240 was introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and it was debated upon that day and laid over. Of course it is in the province of the Senate to deal with it. The Chair has no right to abridge or enlarge the unanimous-consent agreement, but he feels that the amendment is in order, and it should be disposed of either by a direct vote of the Senate or otherwise. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is now properly before the Senate for its action.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A request has been made that the amendment be read. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional resolve the following:

Resolved further, That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands, and assert their determination, when a stable and independent government shall have been erected therein, entitled in the judgment of the Government of the United States to recognition as such, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and to thereupon leave the government and control of the islands to their people.

Mr. GORMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. CHILTON, Mr. GRAY, and others. No, no.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw that motion. It is unjust to many of us who voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty. That resolution expresses the views——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withdraw it.

Mr. CLAY. Let us have a vote on the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Georgia on the table is withdrawn, and the yeas and nays are demanded upon agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. If an opportunity presents itself, I should like to transfer my pair.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut (when Mr. GALLINGER'S name was called). The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] will make the announcement.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. I do not see him in his seat, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. I will transfer the pair so that he will be paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired on the pending resolution with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but inasmuch as we agree about the pending amendment, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. That is his general pair, at any rate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that I received this morning a message from the Senator from New Hampshire stating that he could not be present, and asking me to pair with him. I agreed to pair with him on the resolution. That is all I know about the matter.

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. We have made an arrangement to transfer our pair so that we may both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is upon a train south of this city blockaded by the storm and can not be here. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. VEST's name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST] is necessarily detained from the Senate to-day. He is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is absent by reason of sickness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to vote under the announcement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. He being paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], transfers that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and that leaves both the Senator from Idaho and myself at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP. I have already voted "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I am authorized to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I therefore desire to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is unavoidably absent, on account of severe illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], as just stated, and will not be here on the remaining votes to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I have already announced my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]. I do not know how that Senator would vote, if present, but if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am authorized to say that the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], if present, would vote for this amendment.

Mr. MASON. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has not voted.

Mr. MONEY. I am unable to state how my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] would vote, if present. He was here a few moments ago, but made no communication to me as to how he would vote on this question.

Mr. MASON. I feel, then, that I should withhold my vote, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] not having declared how he would vote. I have, however, generally agreed with him on these matters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is not recorded as voting.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bacon,	Gorman,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Bate,	Gray,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Berry,	Hale,	Martin,	Smith,
Caffery,	Harris,	Money,	Tillman,

Daniel,	Mason,	Sullivan,	Wilson.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On this question, the yeas being 29 and the nays 29, the Chair votes in the negative, and declares the amendment lost.

The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be ordered to be engrosed for a third reading, and will be read the third time in full.

The joint resolution was read the third time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution having been read three times, the question now is upon its final passage.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask to have the joint resolution divided.

Mr. GRAY. That can not be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the joint resolution is capable of division.

Mr. GRAY. That would have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to have a separate vote on the first seven lines of the resolution, leaving out the words "but it is," at the end of the seventh line. In other words, I desire to vote for this portion of the resolution:

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is all one resolution.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is certainly divisible and easily divisible. That which I have read is a distinct proposition in itself. Then follows a declaration of policy; and to that declaration I object.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if that is not practically an amendment to the resolution?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think not. We have always the right to demand a division where a question is capable of division.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given that the resolution may be divided?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if it is to be determined by the Chair that the resolution is divisible, inasmuch as a division has been asked for, I shall ask that there be a further division of the resolution, so that we may have an opportunity of voting on the first five lines of the resolution as they stand, which contain the distinct proposition—

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States.

I shall be delighted, Mr. President, for an opportunity to vote upon that clause, if we can have it under the unanimous-consent agreement; and if we can not, I do not desire to press it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must hold that the joint resolution can not be divided; that no amendment can now be received except by the unanimous consent of the Senate. Does the Senate so consent?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No.

Mr. GRAY. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Requests for division are virtually amendments to the resolution, which would be against the unanimous consent to vote on the resolution. The Senate having declared that it should be voted upon at this hour, the Chair has no power over the matter without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. GRAY and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The question now is on the passage of the joint resolution. How shall the vote be taken?

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that the resolution can not be divided because of the unanimous consent, or does the Chair hold that it can not be divided as a matter of parliamentary law?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the resolution can not be divided because of the unanimous consent that the joint resolution should be voted upon at this hour and that the time for amendment has passed.

Mr. HOAR. I respectfully submit that if a series of resolutions which are divisible under parliamentary law are agreed to be voted upon at a particular time, unanimous consent does not dispense with the ordinary right to have a separate vote upon each resolution of the series.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the fact that this is a joint resolution and that calling for a division upon a bill or joint resolution must necessarily be in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have Rule XVIII read for the information of the Senate and of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read Rule XVIII.

The Secretary read Rule XVIII, as follows:

AMENDMENTS—DIVISION OF A QUESTION.

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition——

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read any further.

Mr. GRAY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask, Mr. President, if to strike out all that follows line 7 and vote upon the first six lines alone is not practically to amend the pending joint resolution? It entirely changes the scope, meaning, and purport of the resolution, and for one I should not be willing to vote for the first five lines if the remainder of the resolution should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that all of these requests are in the nature of amendments to the joint resolution; that such a division of the question, as is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], would be to amend the resolution, and that the eighteenth rule has no application at this time. These resolutions have passed beyond the stage of amendment.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted, I desire again to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an express rule that if the question contain several propositions, as this resolution clearly does, any Senator may have the same divided.

I wish also to ask the Chair, with great respect, if it has ever heard that a demand for such a division under that clear rule was an amendment or in the nature of an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair feels that it is in the nature of an amendment under Rule XVIII, and not admissible.

Mr. HOAR. How?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the discussion had this morning, Senators seemed to agree that the joint resolution was not amendable, except as to the amendment that was pending. It appears to the Chair that requests for a division are in the nature of amendments, and ought not to be permitted.

The rule quoted (Rule XVIII) does not apply to a bill or to a resolution in its final stage and which, by unanimous consent, is to be voted upon now.

The fifteenth rule applies in full force, which says, when a bill or resolution shall have been ordered read a third time, "It shall not be in order to propose amendments unless by unanimous consent." Much less, then, can a bill or joint resolution be divided under the rule relating to amendments.

In the opinion of the Chair, no vote is in order at this time, at this stage, under the agreement, except upon the resolution as a whole.

Mr. HOAR. A division is not an amendment. After all the amendments have been disposed of, the right to a division exists. I desire, with great respect to the Chair, to enter my solemn protest against his ruling, and I hope that the excitement at this hour will not lead to a precedent which will be mischievous hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. CULLOM's name was called). The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who is paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], that we transfer our pairs, so that he and I may vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, but I do not know how he would vote on this question, if present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not know, nor do I know how the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], with whom I am paired, would vote, if he were present.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. He being absent, and I not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired on the pending resolution with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, if present, but, if at liberty, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. VEST's name was called). I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is paired on these votes with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. COCKRELL. That has already been announced.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate retire into executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have still further been unable to agree.

HENRY M. TELLER,
WM. M. STEWART,
S. PASCO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THADDEUS M. MAHON,
THEOBOLD OTJEN,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendment, and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. TELLER, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the text of Senate bill 4545 to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CARTER, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 14, 1899.
